FRIDAY, APRIL 21

Born today, you are calm, strong, patient, cool, collected, cheerful and outgoing. You can be trusted to do precisely what you promise. You can be counted on to carry your share of responsibility, to hold up your end of a conversation, and, in short, to be a restful, competent companion.

Frank, straightforward, true to your word, your company is a comfort. No one has to guess what you think or how you will react. You are predictable, and that makes you easy to get along with. Sometimes you may try to be coy or vague, but your integrity will not allow you to succeed.

You should be able to establish immediate and happy relationships. You are not often misunderstood or misinterpreted. Children are especially fond of you, finding in you nothing to fear and much to love and admire. Your own children should be especially affectionate toward you.

Also born on this date: Elizabeth II of England; H. W. Shaw (Josh Billings), American humorist.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

SATURDAY, APRIL 22

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) -- Use your imagination to help you out of an emergency situation at home.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) -- Demonstrate your affections for them to influence others. One cannot respond to what he does not know.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) -- Those you esteem may be able to help get a new project going. Ask for support.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) -- Don't let early morning depression make you change plans in favor of no plans at all!

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) -- It is time for practical advice and executive ability around the home.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) -- Use to your advantage your insight into human behavior and its motivations.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) -- Quietness may fool others into thinking you incompetent. Change their opinion today.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) -- Observe and take hope and courage from the happy marriages around you.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) -- Your talent for details makes it necessary to seek different work, or be unhappy.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) -- Don't let your actions be misunderstood by those ignorant of what underlies them. Explain yourself.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) -- Your magnetism, not speech, is enough to persuade others to your thinking.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) -- A warm, emotional encounter with an old friend makes today very special for you. Relish it!

Lobsters open season

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Lobsters begin their fifth World Team Tennis Season with an eight-match West Coast swing beginning Sunday in Sacramento, Calif., against Rosie Casals and her Anaheim Oranges.

The Lobsters return to Boston for their home opener Saturday night, May 6, against the Los Angeles Strings who feature Chris Evert and player-coach Ilie Nastase.

Boston plays a 44-match schedule this season with 16 home events at Boston University's Walter Brown Arena. The club won the WTT's Eastern Division Title last year, but lost in the playoffs to the eventual champion New York Apples.

Returning from last year's squad will be player-coach Roy Emerson, Tony Roche, Martina Navralitova, Greer Stevens, and Mike Estep.

Minutemen hope to resume action

By BILL TARTER
Collegian Staff

With a little luck from the heavens the UMass baseball team will resume action today, against Fairfield at 2:?0 on the soggy turf of Earl Lorden Field.

As soon as the game is concluded, UMass will pack their bags for their weekend doubleheader with the University of Maine.

These games will provide the biggest test for the Minutemen since their return from Florida. Fairfield is currently ranked No. 1 in New England, due primarily to a batting order that has embarrassed a lot of pitchers.

The Stags lineup consists of seven starters batting over .300, with five of the top 12 hitters in New England.

To go along with their hitting onslaught is a pair of fine pitchers. The duo of Cizynski and Cato have ERA's of 1.24 and 1.66 respectively, also among the tops in the N.E. region.

Chris Collins will have the unenviable task of trying to cool down the torrid Fairfield squad. Slated to go in the doubleheader Saturday vs. Maine will be Doug Welenc and Tom Nigro.

This year Maine became the first Eastern team ever to win the Riverside baseball tourney held in California. They upset teams such as Stanford, Washington, Cal. at Berkeley, and Oral Roberts.

Among the players to watch will be pitcher Barry LaCasse who UMass coach Dick Bergquist considers a "fine" hurler, and Maine's All-New England shortstop Russ Quetti, who also won the tournament M.V.P.

The Minutemen are hoping to use their recent win against B.C. as a springboard for further success. Mark Sullivan recently named Yankee Conference Player of the Week, and Doug Aylward have put a little life into the UMass hitting attack, which was desperately in need of a boost. With the reawakening of co-captain Ed Skribiski and the steady stroking of Mike McEvilly, the UMass offense should no longer be short of runs.

Doug Welenc continues to have the top ERA in New England, allowing only 5 runs in 43 innings for a ratio of just over 1 run per 9 innings.

Weather permitting, the UMass baseball team will battle Fairfield University this afternoon at Lorden Field. Game time is 2:00 p.m. (Staff photo by Pat Dobbs)

Chimps remain undefeated

By MIKE MONAHAN

The men's J.V. lacrosse team remained unbeaten as they overpowered Brown 15-5 in the rain here Wednesday.

Brown led briefly 1-0 when John Halpern scored from Greg McKinney at 3:06 of the first quarter. McKinney scored 35 seconds later to make it 2-1 followed by Tom Stefanini at 4:38. Brown would get as close as 3-2 at 4:52, before eight consecutive goals by the Chimps put the game away by half-time.

Coach Peter Connolly was more than satisfied by the team's performance. "We're really starting to play lacrosse" said Connolly adding, "we're just blowing everyone away at midfield. I feel we're getting better every week."

The J.V.'s play again this Saturday afternoon at home against Williams and follow on Tuesday with Naval Prep, also at home.

Team Canada gets warm with shutout

GOTHENBURG, SWEDEN [UPI] — Team Canada, sparked by brilliant goaltending from Denis Herron of the Pittsburgh Penguins and Dan Bouchard of the Atlanta Flames, defeated Sweden 4-0 yesterday in a warm-up game for the World Ice Hockey Championships later this month.

The Canadians seemed far more tired Thursday than they were in Tuesday's game — which they won 5-1 — but they were saved by their goalies who picked off 30 shots in the first two periods.

The Canadian goals were scored by Tim Young of the Minnesota North Stars, Pat Hickey of the New York Rangers, Dennis Maruk of the Cleveland Barons and Rick Hampton of the Cleveland Barons.

Hardy Astrom, who plays with the New York Rangers, was in the Swedish goal.

"I'm pleased with what I saw," Canadian coach Harry Howell said. "I knew it would be a difficult game, but our young players surprised me again."

Team Canada led by only 1-0 until it broke loose for three goals in the closing minutes of the game. Hickey started it at 13:51 and just 18 seconds later Maruk scored. Hampton closed the scoring at 19:04.

Stickwomen win over Williams; JV's win again

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

Winning has become a way of life for the UMass women's lacrosse team.

Riding high on a four game winning streak, they travelled yesterday afternoon to Williams College to add yet another notch to their belt. Final score was 12-4.

Competition was tough, though, according to Coach Frank Garahan. "Williams is a well-coached club," he said, "and they knew it. They were up for a win."

Displaying their skill and determination, the Williams women opened playing hard and dominating the first part of game play. First score was a Williams goal, and the pressure was on.

The major problem, according to Garahan, was that the UMass team was not as prepared for action.

"It's hard to keep getting up every day," he said. "Also, the defense hasn't really been tested since the Brown game last Tuesday. They haven't had enough practice, and we were burnt a little at first."

Under the leadership of Judy Kennedy, who for the second consecutive game scored four goals, and Jean Hackett who scored a hat trick, the UMass women rallied mid-way through the first half.

They displayed their winning offensive-defensive form and dominated the remainder of the game.

Garahan cited second half offensive play as being particularly good.

With seven goals scored during the half, at least five were fast breaks — "Very pretty, awesome plays," said Garahan.

Other scorers were Debbie Hartley and Julie Hall, with two goals apiece, and Sue Kibling with a second half goal.

JV's, too, continued with an undefeated streak of their own, winning a close, highly competitive game, 3-2.

Lynn Herbert was the star of the game, scoring the winning goal with just two minutes to go, and UMass playing one man short. JV record now stands at 3-0.

Sox hammer Brewers, 10-4

BOSTON [UPI] — Butch Hobson hit a ree-run homer and Fred Lynn added a two-n shot yesterday to power the Boston Red ox to their seventh straight victory, a 10-4 ecision over the Milwaukee Brewers.

Southpaw Bill Lee scattered seven hits d struck out four in going the distance for e second time and posting his third iumph in as many outings.

The Brewers, losing their sixth game in the st seven, scored an unearned run in the first ning, but Boston bounced back with four ns in the second.

Carlton Fisk and Lynn started the uprising ith singles off Moose Haas and both advanced on a ground out. Fisk scored on a ild pitch by Haas, who left on the next pitch fter pulling a muscle in his elbow. Reliver ohn Replogle walked Dwight Evans and elded Hobson's fourth homer, a liner into e center field bleachers.

Lynn, who had four hits, homered in the ird after Fisk had singled to put Boston ead 7-1. Lynn also had a double and two ngles and scored three runs.

The Brewers scored twice in the fourth on orman Thomas' fifth homer after Sal ando had singled and they added a run in e ninth on a solo homer by Cecil Cooper, is fifth of the year.

Boston's Jerry Remy had a pair of singles extending his hitting streak to 10 games hile Red Sox designated hitter Jim Rice ad his 10-game hitting streak halted.

Garber's Gorillas to face Williams

By R.P. SMITH
Collegian Staff

If everything goes right Saturday, the weather will be nice as you walk from Frat-Sorority Park's Busch Fest to 'The Hill' and the seventh encounter between Williams College and the University of Massachusetts lacrosse squads.

In the series which began back in 1972, UMass has won all six contests between the two teams. And if they play the level they are capable of, they can make it seven straight over Williams.

If this reporter didn't want to abide by the laws of journalistic procedure, I'd predict ahead of time an easy UMass win, given the two teams — but sometimes, this can come back to haunt you (ex. Collegian sports preview of UMass-Maine hoope game; Feb. 10).

"The strength of Williams' squad lies in their offense" said Williams sports director Ray Boyer. "There are a lot of seniors on attack while the defense is made up of mostly sophomores and juniors."

What did UMass Coach Garber have to say about the matchup?

"Williams has some good stick handlers, and attackmen in (Todd) Eckerson and (Pete) Thompson" said Garber. "It shouldn't be hard for us to get psyched because these guys (this year's squad) is still trying to put it together. Williams is similar to Brown. We've got to go out and play aggressive against them from the start. That'll throw their game off" he added.

With good weather this Saturday — instead of the kind the team has been forced to play in so far in their home matches — you could see some hard hitting (alright!!!!), good defense and goaltending by UMass, and maybe some of the freshmen will get to do their stuff. And a psyched up crowd.

You could see a lot ...

If you don't drink too much.

UMass-Williams. 2 p.m. starting time. Be there. Aloha.

Mitwomen battle Chiefs

By MELISSA GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

If weather and field conditions permit, the UMass softball team will battle Springfield College today in a rescheduled contest at 2:30 behind NOPE. The junior varsity game follows at 4 p.m.

"It should be a close game considering the rivalry," commented Pat Oski, UMass's senior rightfielder. Although the rivalry isn't as fierce as in past years, today's contest isn't just another ballgame for the Minutewomen. Every game is important for achieving post season play, but nostalgia makes this one special for the 8-2 UMass squad.

Springfield, 3-2 this season, captured UMass' division in the Easterns last year, which qualified it for the Nationals. Both of Springfield's losses were inflicted by Westfield. The hard-hitting Chiefs couldn't adjust to Westfield's slower style of pitching. The UMies swept a doubleheader at Westfield on Tuesday.

UMass coach Dianne Thompson is starting jayvee pitcher Beth O'Connell, who uses spin which usually forces the batter to pop up. Thompson's tactic to go with the sophomore allows Sue Peters to cover left against many of Springfield's pull-hitters. Generally, Kathy Horrigan defends the corner while Peters hurls, but the slugger sprained her ankle crossing home plate after she homered against Westfield.

Jennifer Parker, coming off of a three-for-four batting performance, is slated to start at first. Kathy O'Connell and Peters are set as relievers.

Off the injured list is second baseman Rhonda McManus along with Cheryl Meliones, who is also ready despite elbow problems. Junior varsity tri-captain Michelle Andrews is also back fron an ankle injury.

"If we play a good defensive and minimize the mental errors, we should win," Peters said. The UMies split with Springfield in 1977.

Minus a catcher and a pitcher from last year, Springfield has seven starters back. Thompson summed up this afternoon's game when she said, "They're a good team, but we're a good team too."

Jean Lambert's undefeated jayvees are aiming for their fourth straight win. Swinging the big bats for the UMies are Betsy Masse and Brenda Simmons.

On the mound will be Gail Carter. Trish O'Connor is ready in the bullpen.

Tomorrow the Minutewomen play a doubleheader at Boston State.

Trackster Martens has done it all

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

Forget about an Alex Eldridge spin move for a moment. Clear from your mind a Mark Haymore rim crunching dunk and a Billy Coleman run off right tackle. Spring is here and another UMass personality merits the attention of the cage and stadium dwellers.

In what will be his last competitive season displaying a Minuteman uniform, Joe Martens will be hard pressed for an encore in his forte, track and field. Unraveling a string of all his athletic accomplishments would be a tiresome endeavor. Merely dusting the surface of his achievements will render a description of his ability.

Martens, a Resource Economics major, played sub-varsity basketball his freshman year at the university. His most notable performances occurred before game time when he flaunted his jumping ability.

"Sure, everybody in the dorm used to get psyched. They'd scream for me to dunk, so I used to," said Martens.

He co-captained his Manchester, Connecticut high school team with Joey Whelton, who this fall ended a highly successful career at UConn.

During his tenure with the UMass hoop squad, Martens managed to slip away from his daily drills for an occasional track meet. His moonlighting was rewarded with a 7' high jump in an early season contest.

"Mike Muska (assistant track coach) use to take me down to meets in a van. When there was a conflict with meets and games he use to drive me back after the high jump. In the Yankee Conference meet that year he did it," explained Martens. "After all the hassles I decided to quit basketball and concentrate on track."

His decision was made four years ago. Since those jumbled days Martens has planted a firm foot on the track and a career of great New England performance.

"I don't think he's missed a day of practice ever," said head track coach Ken O'Brien. "Joe is a pure competitor; he competes well under all circumstances. I've seen him compete with various injuries and still come through with good performances."

Track and field wasn't introduced to Martens in college. In the state high school meet in Connecticut his senior year, he did everything but engrave the championship trophy that his team, East Catholic High, won with the greatest number of points. Joe won the 100, 220 and 440 yard dashes, while failing to compete in the high jump because of a rule which limits a trackman from entering in more than three events.

Two years after that productive afternoon, Martens won the Yankee Conference Indoor Championships 50 yard dash in a record 5.4. That same day he also captured the high jump crown.

Leaving the confines of an indoor arena produced sparkling results outdoors. He duplicated his winter feat by snaring the YanCon 440 title in the spring. He finished third in the New Englands that year while registering his fastest time of the outdoor season at 47.5.

"I think my sophomore year I really started doing what I thought I could," commented Martens. "It was an excellent year for quarter milers."

After the sophomore season, visions of stardom in the sprints and high jump no longer promenaded in Joe's mind. He fell prey to the tennis elbow of track dashmen — the lingering fear of a pulled muscle.

"Every year I would pull in high school," explained Martens. "I ran the 100 once up here in my freshman year and pulled. I know the coach is skeptical."

Although the chance to expose his versatility suffered from claustrophobia, Joe's competitive intensity was not altered.

"Joe is an extremely talented person physically and mentally," said O'Brien. "He can force that physical talent to its limits. It's as if he has a self destruct button, with the ability to push it in and not hurt himself."

Last outdoor season he added another feather to his cap as he successfully defended his 440 yard title. Only one competitor barricaded his attempt at the New England prize. Frank Mortimer from Northeastern won the 440 in '77. Martens was runner up.

Injuries have barred the senior co-captain from witnessing his full potential. Basketball, the high jump, the 50 yard dash, and the quarter mile ... how good is Joe Martens?

"No question I think he can get down to 9.2, 9.3 consistently in the 100," said O'Brien. "With his speed and jumping ability he could be Olympic level in the long jump. In his second or third decathalon, he could probably score higher than the American Olympic decathaletes on the first day, providing he didn't get hurt."

Pain pain go away, come back another day. An unfortunately familiar melody for Joe Martens. Injury free he could be awesome, but instead he has had to settle for mere greatness.

"You never have to search for a key to turn him on, he's always had that capability," said O'Brien. "I don't think I've ever had to psych him up to run. He's one of the easiest kids I've ever had to coach."

In May, Martens will graduate from the University and pursue graduate school in New York or Oregon. He'll pack his bags and carry with him memories of his four years at UMass, but more reassuring is the fact that he will leave several behind.

Getting to know that 'Other' guy

His achievements speak for themselves; over 100 years in the big leagues, participated in every sport from badminton to wrist-wrestling on a professional level, played for every team in all four major sports at the same time ... The list goes on and on.

Yet you never hear about him. Sure, there's always a little statistical line on him at the bottom of the breakdown of team scoring, but aside from that, his combined press clippings amount to nothing. Zip. Zero. Goose egg. Less than one.

Since he is the latest addition to the Red Sox, it's time we got to know him. He is Marvin Others, acquired after the sale of pitcher Reggie Cleveland to Texas. Others was predictably easy to find (he was in a corner of the clubhouse unpacking asterisks from an old, beat-up suitcase) and ecstatic over the chance at finally getting some publicity.

"Good to get some press, even if it is from a puny, insignificant, college newspaper," said Others diplomatically. "What's on your mind?"

"I'd like to start at the beginning."

"No doubt about it, you young reporters are getting smarter all the time."

"How did you become interested in sports? Did your father play catch with you like Mickey Mantle's dad did with him?"

"Matter of fact, both my parents played catch with me."

"That's beautiful. A family knit more tightly by sport."

"But my mother kept dropping me."

"Do you remember your first game as a pro?"

"Like it was yesterday. It was a baseball game. Bottom of the ninth, man on third, score tied. This young lefty was pitching from a full wind-up. The guy on third waited two pitches, then stole home. The next day, the kid was gone and I had myself a career."

"You might say you were destined to wind up playing sports."

"Not if you want to have a clear conscience tomorrow morning you won't."

"The most incredible aspect about your record of longevity is that your career is so unlike those of other seemingly ageless players."

"Can't argue with you there. John Havlicek is the third leading scorer in NBA history. Carl Yastrzemski has won three silver bats. Lou Gehrig still holds the record for most career grand slams. Gordie Howe and George Blanda are the leading scorers of their sports. My stats over the last hundred years can't even come close to matching those accomplishments. I still haven't had a good season. Yep, they're good, but I stink."

"How do you keep catching on consistently with so many different teams?"

"Because over the years I've learned one thing about sports."

"Do tell."

"The average mentality of all coaches and managers is at the Don Zimmer level."

"Have you set any goals for yourself?"

"Yah. I'd like to break into college sports. They need more awkward falls in gymnastics, and there hasn't been a single drowning in swim meets."

"Those are some pretty lofty ideals you've set for yourself."

"Well, athletes are getting better and better and I've got to stay competitive."

"What would you like to accomplish with the Red Sox?"

"I'm already off to a bad start — I've lost a game and made an error — but at least I can be thankful that it wasn't Bob Bailey who was let go. I suppose I'd like to see Jim Rice get traded."

"Like when Babe Ruth was sold to the Yankees."

"Yep, that was a banner year for me."

"By the way what are you doing with all those asterisks?"

"I know a man can't play forever, and I figure that at most, I've got another fifty or sixty years left in me."

"No!"

" 'Fraid so. That's when an ink shortage will force newspaper editors to switch from me to these asterisks here. I know they're gonna end up taking my job away, but I don't want 'em to embarrass themselves, so I'm training 'em myself. Right now we're concentrating on getting picked off first." ¶

Convention delegates subpoenaed

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Representatives of the student judiciary issued subpoenas this past weekend to student government convention delegates, ordering them to attend tomorrow's presidential convention, following a Thursday night court decision ordering the subpoenas.

The convention has recessed four times due to a lack of a quorum. The seventh session is at 7 p.m. at the Hatch.

Reaction to the action by the student courts was mixed. Both Central Area President Arty Thomas and Northeast Area President Diane Lauricella were unsure of the reaction of their delegates and questioned the ability of the student judiciary to take any significant action against absent delegates.

Lauricella said she assumed "most of our people are going." Southwest Area President Joni Mersky said she "definitely" supported the decision to subpoena and "we'll all be there."

Mark Hergenrother, former Orchard Hill Area Government President, said he did not support the move to subpoena delegates. Hergenrother emphasized academic pressure on delegates. "I don't think there is a legitimate reason to subpoena the delegates when the main reason to be at this University is academics. Students have been putting in a lot of time and I don't blame them for not showing up," he said.

Convention Chairperson Jon A. Hite, who petitioned the courts for some action to end the convention stagnation, said he hoped "the court would be extremely strict" with delegates who did not attend. He expected that 20 percent of the delegates would not get their subpoenas since some are being delivered late and some delegates were not on campus this weekend.

Senate Speaker Brian DeLima called the effort to subpoena delegates "reminiscent of fascist states." He said the subpoena was "beyond the jurisdiction of the courts." He added, "a democratic society means people can choose to attend or not attend." He expected "most will attend."

During Thursday night's hearing, Hite said the convention delay was due in part to a "malicious attempt to stall the convention." Hite yesterday said "I am convinced that, although it can't be proven, people were asked not to go." He added, "In a strictly political sense I can understand why people are staying away. At some point public service has got to come before private politics."

Hite said that DeLima, who spoke against the move to subpoena was trying to stall the process so DeLima would become acting President. DeLima would be acting president since he is speaker if the office was vacated. No vacancy has been declared in the office of President yet.

"What would I want to be President for?" said DeLima yesterday. DeLima says he has supported efforts to get delegates to the convention. DeLima denied he had asked people not to show up at the convention. DeLima said that "using his (Hite's) logic" he would be president for only a short time if at all.

Hite has said that he is still president despite constitutional interpretations from others that he went out of office on the traditional April 12 exit date. "Their ineptness (Hite's and his assistant Karl Allen) causes the convention to be stalled," said the speaker.

An Open Letter On women's pages

A few things need to be clarified about last week's decision by the Collegian staff to overturn a recent policy institution four ad-free women's pages in the Collegian.

It must be stressed -that the Collegian staff was not rejecting the idea of women's pages in the paper. Nor was it denying that the lack of coverage of women's news has been a serious problem. Rather, the staff was stating its belief that the Board of Editors' decision to institute the pages was made in haste and under pressure, and that it should come up with a compromise solution.

The front-page story in Friday's Collegian was misleading because it failed to mention the second half of the motion passed by the staff. The entire motion read:

"MOVED: That the staff nullify the vote of the Board of Editors to institute four ad-free women's pages, and that the Board, in any way it wishes, deliberate a compromise to the situation, gathering input from the staff members and the community."

As it has been instructed by the staff, the Collegian Board of Editors is presently ready and willing to reopen discussion of the issue and negotiate a compromise or alternative solution.

We hope that any members of the UMass community with suggestions about this issue will feel free to come down to the Collegian office or write to us.

WMUA is threatened by students and pros

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

"Those Were the Days" might soon well become the theme song of radio station WMUA, the largest student-run radio station on campus.

Station members complain that a series of long-standing problems have brought the station to a so-called "turning point." The Federal Communications Commission, they say, views the station as a community operation — one going beyond the scope of functions encompassed in merely a school station.

Yet, WMUA members say, the station must still work within what are now unmanageable guidelines mandated to them by Recognized Student Organization rules.

Furthermore, station members say, WMUA suffers from neglect from the UMass Board of Trustees — the holder of the station's license.

WMUA has truly grown in the scope of its operations. The station's broadcast area spans a region stretching from Brattleboro, Vt. on the north, and Springfield on the south.

The station's broadcast strength was recently boosted from 10 to 1000 watts by the FCC. WMUA will soon celebrate its thirtieth birthday. It operates in cramped quarters in Marston Hall and Broadcasts at 91.9 Megahertz on the FM band.

Last year, the station broadcast live the eight-night annual town meeting.

License renewal, which the station is now attempting to secure, is a matter of confusion, says station manager Glenn Gardner. The renewal question is further linked to a question of licensee control, Gardner said.

"Who handles license renewal," asked Dave Pacheco, WMUA's incoming program director. "No one seems to know."

Under FCC regulations, the holder of a station's license — in this case the trustees- must exhibit licensee control", which refers to the amount of control and supervision the licensee exercises over station operations.

Gardner and Pacheco both contend the trustees are not responsible enough in the licensee control area. WMUA's now-pending application for license renewal is in a period of deferment because Gardner failed to notice a legal error in the renewal application.

"It is a process which requires special legal help," Gardner said of the renewal. "I didn't talk to any legal representative once. No one contacted me from the board of trustees. It's their responsibility."

Gardner claims the station's requests for help to the trustees have been ignored. Former WMUA station manager Charles Pellett tried to get trustee help also.

"Dear trustees," a letter Pellett wrote to the trustees in 1976 began. "You haven't answered any of my previous letters, so there's little chance of you responding to this one.

"A total of four letters requesting formal meeting have been sent to the board during the past two semesters," the letter said.

"In every letter I've called your attention to ... licensee control," Pellett wrote. "As you sit in your Boston offices, I sweat it out in Amherst ..."

UMass Board of Trustees Chairman Joseph P. Healey said he doesn't know enough about the problem.

"I have not been on top of that problem," Healey said. "I don't think trustees have ever been actively involved in station procedures."

He said the trustees' holding the station's license is just a "legal formality" and told a reporter "why don't you send someone directly to me and I assure them they'll get a response."

Healey said the board has had to deal with many other issues and "there are just so many things we can do."

Station members also claim RSO guidelines and funding practices hinder their operation.

"If we were to follow the guidelines," Gardner said, "we'd violate federal law."

FCC violations could mean the station could lose its license.

An example of the regulations, Gardner said, is an RSO requirement that the station's officers must be elected.

This compromises the "efficiency and legality" of WMUA's operation, Pacheco said. "Thjere is no continuity in personnel.

Under FCC regulations, the station's chief engineer must be aware of specialized, highly technical informationand also hold FCC licenses.

Election of officers, Gardner says, doesn't assure the engineer will hold the necessary qualifications.

Gardner also offered an example of problems with RSO funding. Beside annually allocating less than the station requests, RSO and Undergraduate Student Senate funding regulations are too cumbersome and time-consuming. Senate funding has oscillated from almost $50,000 a few years ago to almost $30,000 this year.

Gardner said he has been seeking to make security improvements at the station for over a year. He has been trying to have bars installed on ground level windows where women work alone from 2-6 a.m., but the request is "stalled" in senate budget process.

"If some girl gets raped at 2 a.m. at WMUA," Gardner said, "who do you think is responsible? — it's WMUA."

Student senate officials were unavailable for comment this weekend, but Coordinator of Student Activities Armand H. Demers offered some explanation.

"If they are concerned about their funding," he said, "their best bet is to

200 march; protest stock investments

By Dave Rodgers
Collegian Staff

About 200 Amherst College students Friday marched on Converse Hall, the school's administration building, to protest Amherst's investment policy with U.S. corporations doing business in South Africa.

The protest followed a meeting with Amherst College President John W. Ward Wednesday night in which Ward reported the Amherst Trustees most recent decision on divestment.

The trustees had decided to divest stocks only if the corporation refuses to respond or gives an inadequate response to questions concerning their operations in South Africa. Divestment will also depend on the corporations' adherence to principles of equality known as the Sullivan Principles.

The protest started in front of the Robert Frost Library where the students took part in protest songs, chanting, and listening to solidarity speeches.

After a sizeable crowd had gathered the group marched on Converse Hall and the president's office to carry their complaints to the administration.

Ward was in California attending an alumni meeting at the time, so no confrontation between administration and students took place.

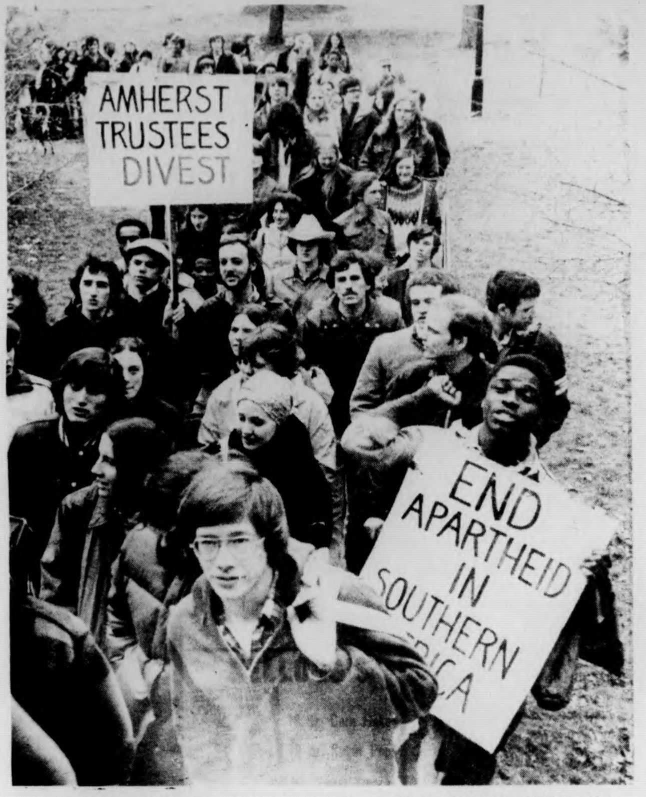
The large group of students squeezed into the main lounge of Converse Hall after they found the president's office locked.

They remained in the lounge for 40 minutes during which time they shattered the silence of the large building with more chanting and speeches. These were followed by 10 minutes of silence to honor those struggling in South Africa.

Mike Pratt, a member of the South Africa Support Committee, the group that sponsored the demonstration said, "I'm pleased with the demonstration. It takes a lot to get Amherst students out of their classes to demonstrate."

Pratt said the group plans to hold an open meeting Tuesday night to discuss plans for next semester. He views the student's demonstration as "ongoing."

Amherst professor Jan Dizard said, "The students did a marvelous job in expressing their anger and frustration with the Amherst trustees. This is clearly the beginning, not the end." Dizard had spoken to the demonstrators in support of their cause.



AMHERST TRUSTEES DIVEST
END APARTHEID IN SOUTHERN AFRICA

Mt. Holyoke anti-apartheid

SOUTH HADLEY — The Student Conference Committee at Mt. Holyoke College, in a written proposal to the college's trustees, stated that divestiture of the college's investments in corporations operating in South Africa "is the least effective means by which to end apartheid."

As an alternative to divestiture, the proposal urged the college to "exercise our right to demand responsible and affirmative conduct on the part of the corporations."

"We are trying to get corporations to reconsider their own investments," said Martha Minier, Student Government Assoc, president and member of the conference committee.

An important factor in the committee's decision not to push for divestiture is the financial effects on the college.

Mt. Holyoke currently owns securities in 26 corporations which operate in South Afric. These investments comprise 36 percent of the total estimated annual income of Mt. Holyoke's portfolio.

According to Minier another difficulty involved in selling the stocks is a large portion of the shares were bought with endowments from alumni, who have a decision in what happens to those shares.

The committee also said it realized divestiture by a relatively small institution such as Mt. Holyoke would not have much impact on the corporations involved.

In one of its six recommendations for implementation of "a firm policy regarding South Africa," the committee calls for a coalition with other stockholding institutions, "to achieve a measure of influence far beyond our individual holdings."

Susan Speers, a member of the Committee on social Responsibility at Mt. Holyoke, said a coalition would make a large-scale divestiture "a more potential threat to the corporations."

The other recommendations proposed to the trustees by the committee are:

A full review of letters send by college President David B. Truman to all corporations in Mt. Holyoke's portfolio, requesting information on their South African operations. The committee has found "inadequate statements and contradictions" in the corporations' responses.

An initiation of action by the college to "exercise its rights as a corporate shareholder."

A consideration of divestiture, but only if letters and resolutions submitted to the corporations fail to achieve effective results.

Measures to influence government policy, by both trustees and students.

Formation of an ethics committee to serve as a link between the Proxy Committee, which represents the college at stockholders meetings, and the college community.

Minier admits the committee's proposal is conservative, but she said the committee realizes it "will never get divestiture across the board," and would probably have to work for divestiture "on a case by case basis."

According to Minier, a conservative proposal was necessary to keep the trustees interested and "make them less defensive."

"We want to uphold our principles and beliefs that apartheid is wrong," said Minier,

"And yet," she said, "we neet to get the trustees aware ... we want to be taken seriously."

Both Minier and Speers agreed they were hindered by a lack of active support from students and faculty for their cause. Speers noted the college's relatively small population as one factor involved. "Compared to UMass," said Speers, "We have a very limited pool of people to work with."

Student recovering

Jill A. Dickinson, the UMass graduate student who was found by UMass Police unconscious Wednesday night, is estimated in "fair condition," a Wesson Memorial Hospital spokesman said yesterday.

Dickinson, 25, was moved to the Springfield hospital Wednesday night after an initial examination at the University Health Center.

Police are assuming the woman was a hit and run victim, but will be questioning her early this week, a UMass News Bureau spokesman said yesterday.

Police believe the woman was thrown 15 feet after the alleged hit and run. Police have ruled out robbery and sexual assault, the spokesman said.

Dickinson sustained injuries to the head, a fractured pelvis, and scrapes and bruises.

UMass Police are requesting anyone with any information about the accident to contact them.

Hatch to speak

Republican gubernatorial candidate Francis Hatch of Beverly will arrive on campus tomorrow at 9:30 a.m. on the first stop of a day-long campaign swing through the Five College area.

Hatch, the Massachusetts House minority leader, will meet with University administrators at Whitmore before speaking in the Student Union Ballroom at 11:00.

Hatch is considered the moderate of the three contenders for the Republican nomination. In the past, he has backed environmental legislation as well as marijuana legalization.

After the speech Hatch will eat lunch in Worcester dining commons before leaving for engagements at Amherst Regional High School and Smith and Mt. Holyoke Colleges.

Players start fund

Students in the UMass Music Department will participate in a 60 hour Playathon this weekend to raise money for a scholarship fund in memory of a former UMass music student.

Numerous ensembles and soloists will perform in the Playathon scheduled for this weekend at the Mountain Farms Mall, from noon Friday to midnight Sunday.

Money raised in the Playathon, initiated by the UMass student chapter of the Music Educators National Conference, will be used to start "double reed" scholarship in the name of Lee Murray, an oboe student who died last summer.

Hourly sponsorships of Playathon musicians will provide the principle funds for the annual scholarship, which will be awarded to a UMass student studying a double reed instrument.

Tickets on sale

UMass student tickets for the Duke Ellington Spring Music Festival on May 6 are available today at TIX across from the post office in the Student Union Building.

UMass ID's are required in order to receive free tickets. Each student is allowed one free ticket only. ID's will also be required with UMass student tickets at the gate in order to enter the day of the concert.

Yippies hold smoke-in

About 500 persons were assembled Saturday at the height of the Amherst Smoke-in which was held beside the Student Union Building.

Joints of marijuana were passed out to the demonstrators on several occasions while they listened to live music and speakers. Many of the protesters brought their own marijuana to smoke as well.

No arrests were made and neither the UMass police nor the Amherst police reported any disturbances related to the smoke-in.

"The smoke-in went over pretty well," said Russ Swan, an organizer of the demonstration. "It was a really nice day."

Swan said he expected the police to ignore the pot smoking.

The Amherst Smoke-in is one of a series of smoke-ins being held across the country sponsored by the Youth International Party or Yippies, Swan said. Another such smoke-in is scheduled for today in Tucson, Arizona.

No uniformed police could be seen at the smoke-in, but some ununiformed officers were present, according to a UMass News Bureau spokesman.

A police spokesman at the station Saturday said no special detail had been assigned to the smoke-in and that no special instructions had been given regarding the demonstration.

UMass police chief Robert Joyce yesterday had no comment on the smoke-in and declined to answer any questions saying all comments to the press had to go through Director of Public Safety Saul Chafin. Chafin could not be reached for comment last night.

An Amherst Police spokesman said any such event on the University campus was not within the jurisdiction of the Amherst police.

Other smoke-ins already held this spring in such places as Columbus, Ohio and Lovett, Texas have been "going well," according to Steve DeAngela of the Yippie national office. Another smoke-in which drew 1000 people in Grand Junction, Colo, was disrupted, DeAngela said, when police used tear gas and rubber bullets to break up the demonstration.

Swan said he didn't think the demonstration would have a direct effect upon marijuana laws, but he hoped it might encourage some more liberal attitudes toward pot smoking. He added that the smoke-in could become an annual event.

Richard Evans, a member of the western Massachusetts chapter of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, said he was at the smoke-in yesterday for a short time although the organization was not involved in the event.

"I think the smoke-in was a real credit to those who organized it," Evans said. "It demonstrated that people can come together and smoke dope and not constitute a threat to peace or society." Evans said he thought the University took an "enlightened" view in allowing the demonstration.

A news bureau spokesman said the police were aware of the possibility that people would be smoking pot, but that the critical issue for the police was the selling of pot.

"The police are here to protect people and property," he said. Smoking marijuana is only a misdemeanor, no felonies were being committed, and no one was being injured so the police had other things to do, he said.

"The organizers of the event asked for a permit for a demonstration, not a smoke-in," the spokesman said. "There was no official approval of a smoke-in." He also said police estimate of the crowd had just over 200 persons attending.

The Yippies have announced that May 6 is National Marijuana Day and that it will be marked by a march along Fifth Avenue in New York City.

Mears addresses Carter's policy

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

What do President Carter, his brother Billy, Bert Lance, Hamilton Jordan and Washington, D.C., have in comon? Besides a similar surname, a taste for beer, politics, and financial woes, they're all under the scrutiny of Walter R. Mears.

He's the Vice President of the Associated Press and is in charge of running the AP's Washington, D.C. news bureau, where he's covered congress and national politics since 1961. Oh, he also won a Pulitzer prize last year for national reporting of the 1976 presidential campaign.

Mears was on campus this weekend to give the keynote address at a Collegian-sponsored journalism convention. He shed a little light on the problems of the Carter administration and other figures in the shadows of the political arena.

"President Carter's brother Billy is going into business with Bert Lance to produce a new beer — overdraft," he joked.

Mears also suggested Hamilton Jordan, presidential aide, seek guidance from the president's evangelist sister, Ruth Carter Stapleton. "The White House released a 33 page statement denying the charge that Jordan spit amaretto and cream down the blouse of a Washington woman who made a pass at him in a local bar," he said.

"What we should be worrying about is that anyone in the White House drinks amaretto and cream," he said.

The journalism convention, attended by 27 colleges throughout New England and New York, set up the New England Association of College Journalists and was held to promote discussion of the major issues confronting campus press organizations.

The White House itself was the focus of much of Mears' talk.

The Carter administration, Mears said, has a good relationship with the press because of Presidential Press Secretary Jody Powell. "He's more useful to us (the press) than predecessors because he's closer to Carter than most press secretaries are to the president," he said.

"But they (the administration) have as thin a skin as I've ever seen when confronted with any kind of criticism," Mears added. "They're as sensitive as I've ever seen in town."

Mears said one of Carter's problems is he "still tries to deal with Congress now the same way he dealt with voters in '76." "Carter has a certain conviction and intensity — if he thinks he's right," Mears said. "He doesn't like to compromise and when he does, he doesn't like to call compromise its real name," he added.

."Carter overpromised during his campaign for president but won't admit it," Mears said. "He insists he's keeping all his promises although it would mean keeping three a week during his entire presidency," he said.

Carter should receive credit for presiding over a period of peace, quiet and relative harmony, Mears said. "The public doesn't hesitate at a time of war to put the blame on the president. Now we shouldn't hesitate to give credit either," he said.

College journalists should expect a tight job market, Mears said, and he advised graduates to "go as far as you can from Washington and get some experience." Washington is crowded, he said, because other newspapers have recently folded and reporters are going to the capital to look for employment.

Town meeting warrant complete

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

Amherst town meeting members will face a 62-article warrant next month when they begin the 219th annual Amherst town meeting.

The meeting is scheduled to begin May 1 at 7:30 p.m. at the Amherst Regional Junior High school.

According to members of the Board of Selectmen, the warrant includes several potentially controversial articles.

Both Selectmen Roger C. Jacque and Diana H. Romer pointed to the articles dealing with amendments to the zoning by-laws, the Watroba land swap and the proposed revaluation of the real estate property in town as issues bound to stir discussion.

The Watroba article requests the town trade the old North Amherst School building and part of its lot to the owner of the Watroba Store for the store building and part of its lot.

Selectmen last week split in their vote over whether to support the article as it is written to go before the meeting members.

Selectmen Jacque and William C. Atkins voted in favor of support, while Romer and Nathaniel Reed voted against support. Nancy B. Eddy abstained on the vote, saying she needed more financial information.

Other potentially controversial articles are:

— Two articles, one sponsored by the selectmen and the other by the Amherst Taxpayers Assoc., requesting a new revaluation of the real estate property in town.

— An article demanding the installation of smoke or heat detectors in apartment houses containing six or more dwelling units hotels, boarding or lodging houses and family hotels.

— An article to see if the town will raise and appropriate $169,750 to purchase equipment including five police cars, a school bus, data processing equipment, a pick-up truck and a dump truck.

— An article to see if the town will endorse potential expansion of the existing no-fare public transit service to areas of town not serviced now. This article is contingent on the expansion charge being assessed by the state.

Dedication of the newly opened Bangs Community Center, located in the South Pläza of Amherst, was marked Saturday morning by sunny skies, music, and guest speakers, including U.S. Congress Representative (D-1) Silvio O. Conte, of Pittsfield.

The renovated Community center, which previously had been an Amherst Intermediate School building, is the first of several plans within the town's Boltwood Walk Project.

An urban renewal project designed to rejeuvenate downtown Amherst for all citizens, Boltwood Walk places a special emphasis on housing and services for the elderly.

"This building is a small token of gratitude to those senior citizens who have done so much, and contributed so much to make this nation what it is," said Rep. Conte to the nearly 300 townspeople attending.

Conte, the fourth and final speaker of the day, congratulated the town for providing both the young and the aged with needed services and facilities. He offered his continued support in any future endeavor.

Congratulations on behalf of Govenor Michael S. Dukakis were also voiced by his representative Gerald Hayes. Hayes, speaking in place of scheduled speaker Gerald L. Stevens, said state funding of the building is an example of the Dukakis administration investing funds in outlaying communities, as well as within the "cities."

Amherst town selectmen, Town Manager Louis Haywood, and Rep. James G. Collins were also present at the dedication.

"It is a beautiful building," said Amherst citizen Edward H. Deming of the Community Center. "It has been used wisely, with accomodations not only for the elderly, but also for other agencies."

The Bangs Community Center is now a new, red-brick building, offering citizens its many uses. As a senior center, it is to be a focal point of services for the elderly: counseling services, recreational activities, and hot lunch programs.

As a health center, it is to provide community health services, both individual and clinical, as well as counseling programs of a wide variety.

The center also is to serve as the home base of veteran's affairs, and will be open to general community use.

Local citizens Edward and Fannie Bangs, for whom the building was named, in 1917 bequeathed the town $250,000, which was used to fund the center.

This money, in addition to other private trusts, federal grants, and town payments of $72,000, financed the $1 million structure.

Stockbridge scores

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

After spending innumerable hours clipping and brushing, cursing and coaxing, organizing and instructing, the 43rd Bay State Livestock Classic arrived this past weekend bringing nervousness and relief to both students and animals.

For the past couple months Stockbridge and UMass agricultural students groomed and trained horses, sheep, swine, dairy and beef cattle fitting the animals for show. The classic, a requirement for Stockbridge students enrolled in animal management courses, offers an opportunity for students to gain practical training and experience in grooming and showing animals of their choice.

Animal Science Professor Byron E. Colby said, "The purpose of the classic is to give students training in handling livestock, organization and leadership."

First and second place winners in the preliminary classes, held Friday evening and Saturday morning, competed in the finals Saturday afternoon. Stockbridge animal science majors swept the events although students from other majors and the university participated in the events. Winners included: Ellen O'Conner-horses, Kristine Kanowki-Dairy, Tom Losty-Swine, Gary Post-Sheep, Jodie Wagner-Beef.

One highlight of the day was the "Baby Parade" which exhibited many young animals born this spring. Colby said, "We had many students and youngstock participate in the parade this year. It's been one of the best."

Some students trained oxen teams since last fall and competed in leading their teams through an obstacle course. Brenda Barry won the event with a seven month old Holstein heifer team. Much laughter and cheers concluded the day with Dean John Denison, Prof. Byron Colby, Prof. Sidney Lyford, and Prof. James Marcum each attempting to drive an oxen team through the course.

Commenting on this year's classic, Colby said, "The students exhibited excellent showmanship and a large amount of cooperation in organizing the event.

Gradsenate views funds

By ROB STEIN

Representatives from the various student organizations which have requested funds from the Graduate Student Senate are expected to attend tonight's senate meeting to explain their funding requests for fiscal year 1979.

The senate's Finance Committee has already submitted its recommended funding level for each group to the executive committee. Included in those recommendations was the termination of all funding to the Credit Union and the Graduate Women's Program and the denial of funding to the Chile-Latin American Committee.

These are only recommendations; the final decisions will be made by the executive committee at tonight's meeting, according to senate Treasurer Ken Ross.

At a senate meeting last week the senate approved all the Finance Committee's recommendations for the Salaries and Operations portions of the FY 79 Budget. This section of the budget includes officers' salaries and the operating costs of running the senate office.

The senate president receives $4,000 a year whereas the vice-president, treasurer and secretary receive $2,400 a year. All the officers also have their tuition paid from the Senate's budget.

Fuller wraps-up Tomorrows Fair

By GARDE WELLS
Collegian Staff

In a short but powerful speech this weekend, R. Buckminster Fuller left the crowd in awe.

"I wish you could each be up here with the feeling I have so that I could share it with you," said Fuller Friday night, drawing another full house of 2,000 at the Fine Arts Center.

Fuller's fourth and final speech marked the close of the Learning Tomorrows Fair last week.

Fuller spoke solemnly, using a podium this time instead of his usual informal stage-rambling manner.

He went through a rapid potpourri of history and scientific development, dwelling briefly on Albert Einstein before speaking on conventional mathematics.

"All triangles add up to something other than 180," he said, pointing out that triangles measured on three-dimensional spheres have entirely different properties than triangles taught in plane geometry.

"What we should realize is that one-dimensional geometry has no basis in reality," said Fuller.

As he traced well-known developments of western science, Fuller discussed gravitational orbit and the laws of nature. He mentioned Isaac Newton, who postulated theories that are now the basis for modern physics.

"Scientific generalizations are inherently terminal," he said, referring to Newton's Laws of Nature.

Fuller, transfixing the crowd with his comprehensive synergetic observations, said the universe is a perfect system.

"The universe itself is 100 percent efficient," he said.

Synergy, at the heart of Fuller's philosophy, holds that within the universe all events are random and unpredictable. Metal alloys, for instance, are many times stronger than the sum strength of their raw materials.

Fuller again emphasized technology, saying we can live on our energy technology.

"Fortunately," he added, "no one has figured out how to put a meter between the earth and the sun.

Political revolution pulls apart ties, he said, but technology lifts all of humanity.

"Mind is everything, muscle is nothing," he said.

The function of future education, said, Fuller, is to ask, "Is humanity going to continue to qualify in the universe?"

"If we're going to make it, we're going to do it through our children," he added.

In closing, Fuller asked, "Are you going to go about things by experimental evidence, or will you take for granted what I tell you?"

Fuller, who for the last five years averaged a talk in front of 1,500 people every four days, received a standing ovation at the end of his speech.

"Humanity is in trouble," he said, "people are likely to panic.

"Just really dare to know the truth."

Collins calls for education for all

By CAROLYN J. MOONEY
Collegian Staff

"We have to get away from the 'Pepsi Generation' philosophy of life that the younger you are, the more important you are," State Representative James G. Collins, D-Amherst, said Saturday in his key-note speech at the Massachusetts Vietnam-Era Veterans' Conference.

Collins, a member of the House Education Committee, cited the importance of higher education for everyone, focusing on Vietnam veterans, continuing education students, and citizens-at-large. He said higher education must become more "flexible and affordable," and that the GI Bill should cover continuing education.

The current GI Bill provides full benefits for full-time veteran students during the 10 years after release from active duty.

The Tuition Waiver Bill allows veterans to attend a state university full-time (carrying 12 credits) at not cost during the 15 years after release. But it does not apply to part-time, summer, or continuing education students.

In theory, Collins said, the state would reimburse schools for each veteran attending, but because bills often get tossed around in the "vast bureaucracy" of the state legislature the schools are not always reimbursed, causing veterans' educational opportunities to vary from campus to campus.

In opposition to the requirement that continuing education support itself, Collins said it cannot be "frosting that the school offers. Back it up with state funding and make it available under the GI Bill."

The two major obstacles, he said, were to first get the money and then to restructure the entire system of higher education in the state.

"Higher education is changing direction," Collins said. "Right now it is too isolated from the people who pay for it. People such as the 'older student' should not be artificially separated from one another."

Other goals for the veterans were the same rights and benefits given World War II and Korean War veterans, and the upgrading of discharges, part of President Carter's GI Bill Improvement Act of 1977.

"The Vietnam veterans are having a difficult time because the country wanted so quickly to forget the war," said Collins. "We are just starting to look at it."

"Right now we are not war veterans," said veteran John Lash, "We are conflict veterans."

Another veteran said veterans' benefits are not welfare, but a guaranteed right.

Collins called for a legislative action committee composed of veterans and supportive legislators which would target in on one specific goal at a time, such as education or penal institution pilot programs. He was receptive to the veterans' suggestions, and agreed to head such a committee himself. He said he was confident they could evoke improvement.

Collins' recent proposals have included a bill which would periodically review and possibly terminate state agencies, a bill which would regulate political contributions made by corporations, and a bill which would investigate political advertising.

Collins, a 1968 UMass graduate in government, served as president of the UMass Undergraduate Student Senate in 1967-68. He is not a veteran.

UMass Dancers Perform

Dance Review

Reviewed by Rebecca Adams

As far as the choreography goes, I was upset by the repetition of some movements from dance to dance. Most pronounced were the lunge and contract, and the Oriental stance of outstretched arms, flexed wrists, with a wide second position plie. Then the other dances were purely original and stood out as being just that, in idea and style. But the dancers were enthusiastic and happy to be sharing their works with an equally enthusiastic audience.

The University Dance Department showed 13 dances with enough variety to tickle anyone's fancy at this weekend's Spring Dance Concert. A cooperative effort, the works were choreographed by dancers and faculty and danced by the University Dancers along with the Concert Dance Group.

"Rainbow Maker" (choreographed by Virginia Gaunt) and "Feeling Spacetime" (Prof. Marilyn Patton) were two examples of merging electronics with the performing arts. The first, set to the music of "Close Encounters," was pleasing with the colorful dancers floating around the stage under bits of hanging glass. "Feeling Spacetime" had eerie yet amusing qualities in the Merce Cunningham strain, but lost some of its profound effect given in the context of this concert.

"By Pine Spring" (Andrew Stoessel) and "An Angel Passes" (JoAnn Murray) were the romantic flavors for the evening. The first was very pretty with printed chiffon dresses and ever-so-slight lyrical changes of mood. I was very impressed with the tight synchronization of the dancers. The latter was pleasantly fluid and intimate in movement.

"Ase's Death" (Yves Toussaint) danced by the choreographer was a moving, searching piece of anger, battle and defeat. Duke Ellington's blues created an excellent background for the battleground of sustained movement and the sky-searching eyes of Toussaint, but he could have made better use of the space of the stage.

"Masq", "Construction" and "You don't Have to Come Down" were all interesting group choreography efforts. "Masq" was fun, showing the dancers dancing soberly with their masks on but when they were off, they felt free to frolic.

"Construction" was confusing, but had some very good points. The dancers seemed to be portraying humans as airplanes having trouble getting satisfaction out of life. Mick Jaggar helped by telling them that they "Can't Always Get What You Want". The dancers were quite convincing of their pain, rocking with their hands wrapped around their heads.

"Sly and the Family Stone" helped out with "You Don't Have to Come Down", an absolutely hysterical piece in which the gym-shorted dancers danced and wriggled and stomped and stormed and...

Noble to run for senate

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

Rep. Elaine Noble, D-Boston, Thursday will officially announce her candidacy for the U.S. Senate seat held by Edward W. Brooke.

Thursday's announcement will only formalize Noble's well-publicized intentions for a run at Brooke's senate seat. Her competition for the Democratic nomination will come from Rep. Michael J. Connolly, D-Roslindale, and Ruth S. Morgenthau, a UMass trustee.

Noble, Democratic gubernatorial candidate Barbara Ackermann and Connolly's wife, Alice, spoke Saturday at Smith College as part of a meeting for First Congressional District women Democrats.

According to Noble, there were two reasons why she decided to enter the race for the senate: the bill reorganizing the Massachusetts House by decreasing the number of representatives and a vulnerability on the part of Brooke.

The House reorganization bill would have forced Noble to run against close friend and political ally Rep. Barney Frank, D-Boston, if she intended to serve again in the House.

"I had a unique problem with the redistricting," she said, "It would have been insane for me to be pitted against Frank. It would have been like throwing sand in each other's face after being close friends for eight years."

Noble decided Brooke was vulnerable after talking with Speaker of the House Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neil and his son, Lt. Gov. Thomas O'Neil.

Noble also characterized Brooke as "tired and confused and just looking for an option to get out."

Noble finds herself in the unusual position of being considered as the "old party pol" in the quest for the Democratic nomination because of her ties with the Democratic House leadership.

She was first elected to the Massachusetts House in 1974 and now serves on the Ethics Committee.

If she gains the Democratic nomination and Brooke defeats Avi Nelson for the Republican nomination it will set up a campaign pitting the only avowed lesbian to serve in the Massachusetts House against the only black presently in the U.S. Senate.

Prisoner DiCarlo refuses interview

BOSTON (AP) - Ex-senator Joseph J.C. DiCarlo will not get a chance to tell his story to a legislative committee probing the MBM scandal because he refused to be interviewed in private, according to those close to the former lawmaker.

DiCarlo is now serving a one-year federal prison term for extorting $40,000 from McKee--Berger-Mansueto, a New York consulting firm, in return for a favorable legislative committee report.

The MBM subcommittee chairman, Rep. Gerald Cohen, D-Andover, issued a statement last week saying the post Audit and Oversight Committee interview was off.

Cohen said, "DiCarlo will not accept an invitation to testify before this committee while his motion for a new trial is pending.

"Mr. DiCarlo's attorneys state that he is concerned that speculation about his testimony, such as those already published, might have a prejudicial effect on his new trial motion," Cohen said in a prepared statement.

Two days later the U.S. Appeals Court turned down that new trial motion.

It was the appeal by DiCarlo and former Sen. Ronald MacKenzie, convicted along with DiCarlo, that dragged the names of Senate President Kevin Harrington, Boston Mayor Kevin White and former Gov. Francis W. Sargent into the MBM scandal.

The appeals court found that the contention that the earlier defense was ineffective because it was controlled from Beacon Hill was "baseless to begin with."

No Cancer at Company

SPRINGFIELD (AP) - The Monsanto Co. says it has found no higher cancer rate among workers at its Springfield plant than in the general Hampden County population.

The chemical company cited the finding in its response to an earlier government study that Monsanto-Springfield workers experienced a "significantly elevated" rate of digestive and urological cancer.

Monsanto said the study had investigated the deaths of 564 former plant employees and found "no work-place-related cancer problem."

However, an employee group called the Committee for Occupatinal Safety and Health Action contended that Monsanto had not probed deeply enough.

Ed scandal continues

BOSTON (AP) - Like a television soap opera, the state's multi-million dollar vocational education scandal is expected to ensnare additional individuals in its complicated web this week.

Two educators have already pleaded guilty to huge larcenies of federal "voke ed" funds channeled through the Department of Education and others are expected to follow suit, two of them on Friday.

Suffolk Superior Court Judge James Lynch will consider motions connected with charges against Sen. George Rogers, D-New Bedford.

Parents protest

HARTFORD, Conn. (UPI) - Protesters angry over the firing of Edythe Gaines, the city's first black school superintendent, have urged parents to keep their children home from school this week.

The Board of Education voted 5-4 Thursdy night not to renew her contract when it expires June 30. They claimed Mrs. Gaines, 55, withheld information, acted too independently, and was out of town too often since she was hired in July 1975.

Drug abuse rises; women in trouble

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Women across the country are in "dreadful trouble" because of overdependency on doctor prescribed drugs and alcohol, the author of a new study conducted for the National Institute on Drug Abuse said yesterday.

Muriel Nellis said the problem - brought to the public attention by former first lady Betty Ford's personal problems - is reaching epidemic proportions.

"These problems are not coincidental with the increase in reported problems of child abuse, family violence, runaway children and newborn handicapped and otherwise damaged infants," she said.

Mrs. Nellis said women are more affected than men in part because they are "much more inclined to take prescribed medications and not question them so much."

"Women see physicians much more than do men in the course of their lives," she added.

Women also tend to choose legal substances such as prescription drugs or liquor over illegal ones when seeking release from their problems.

Mrs. Nellis said the report, compiled from state and regional studies, was submitted in March to the Health, Education and Welfare Department's National Institute on Drug Abuse.

Mrs. Nellis said the major drug groups involved are tranquilizers.

The combination of tranquilizers and alcohol - both forms of depressants - "often lead to other kinds of problems," she said. Another group of abused drugs are analgesics or painkillers, she said.

Pilot unwarned

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) - Passengers of a South Korean jetliner downed in the Soviet Union said yesterday they saw no warning signals from a Russian MIG interceptor before it opened fire on them, blasting a hole in the fuselage and killing two persons.

The passengers said the pilot told them he apparently went off-course because a cockpit compass malfunctioned.

Some also said they thought at first the fighter was an American jet welcoming them to Alaska, a refueling stop on what was to have been a Paris-to-Seoul flight.

They spoke with reporters before boarding a Korean Air Lines relief jet that left Helsinki Sunday for Seoul, with stopovers in Anchorage, Alaska, and Tokyo. It carried 103 passengers and crew members from the ill-fated Boeing 707.

Carter stays nuke issue

WASHINGTON (UPI) - NATO Commander Gen. Alexander Haig said yesterday that President Carter, by delaying a final decision on production of the neutron warhead, has "placed the onus" on the Soviet Union to slow its weapons build-up.

Haig, White House chief of staff for 17 of the stormiest months of the Watergate scandal that drove Richard Nixon from the presidency, also said he does not expect to tell his side of Watergate in the "foreseeable future."

Interviewed on NBC's "Meet the Press," Haig said a failure of arms limitation talks with the Soviet Union would lead to a resumption of the weapons race.

Carter to get energy bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., predicted yesterday Congress finally may send an energy bill to President Carter within 30 days.

"We're over the biggest hurdle," the chairman of the Senate Energy Committee said in an interview on CBS' "Face the Nation" program. He noted that a group of House and Senate conferees, after months of negotiation, have agreed on a compromise plan to gradually remove price controls from newly discovered natural gas.

petition the senate. But, there just isn't too much money."

"He said as far as RSO regulations are concerned, his office does not deal with that question.

"The senate is the first line, but if that doesn't work, then they should come to me of the administration to solve their problems."

A final problem cited by WMUA station members lies with the Communications Studies department.

"I think it's ridiculous to have a communications department on campus and have four radio stations and not have radio courses," Gardner said.

Gardner called the decision by the department "political."

"They should not give out a degree in communication studies without radio courses.

Chairman of the Communications Studies department Kenneth L. Brown conceded the department does not have radio courses.

"I would have to talk to the faculty and see why we have no radio courses," Brown said. But, he said, the Communications Studies department does not have a heavy emphasis on production in any area, not just radio. This, he said, hasn't hurt Communications Studies graduates.

"Our people have been getting jobs and doing well without any work in production."

In summing up the situation at WMUA, Gardner said the station "works."

"We're at a turning point now." he said, "People are just realizing the power we have and what we can do with it."

Moro case: 'no deal'

ROME (AP) - Italy's Christian Democratic Party yesterday seemed to soften its no-deal stand with the Red Brigade kidnappers of party president Aldo Moro. But intermediaries reported no contact with the terrorist abductors more than 24 hours after a death deadline for Moro passed.

For the second day, hundreds of Italians gathered in vigil outside Moro's Rome apartment and in front of the Christian Democrats' downtown headquarters, where leaders of the ruling party were meeting.

Party Secretary-General Benigno Zaccagnini said afterward that Christian Democrats want to find out through intermediaries " a reply to questions on the fate of Aldo Moro and to ascertain...possible ways to achieve his liberation."

Collegianers remarks overheard

To the Editor:

Two recent letters criticizing the new women's pages — from Patrick O'Donnell and some residents of Crampton dorm — shared an implied assumption. This was that the Collegian staff is impartial and in fact eager to print newsworth items of interest to women, but don't get any of sufficient quality.

With reference to that assumption, it was most interesting to stand at the back of the crowd at the meeting about the women's pages, near the Collegian staff offices. From that vantage point, the comments of staffers outside their offices were quite audible, and those comments made it clear that this assumption of impartiality is completely unjustified. While many staffers refrained from commenting, those who did for the most part indicated their hostility, prejudice and disdain for any issues which were not of immediate interest to white males, which most of the vociferous staff members happened to be. To believe such people judge the appropriateness or merit of stories concerning women in any kind of unbiased fasion would be totally erroneous.

It is also surprising that the letter from members of Crampton dorm would see fit to criticize the content of a page which has not even appeared yet. The more usual practice would be to wait until the evidence is available before evaluating it. However, should the women's pages justify their fears that their opinions are ignored, the more fruitful response would be to participate in working on the pages to ensure their views are represented.

Paraquat pot here at UMass

To the Editor:

There has recently been a mild furor over the spraying of paraquat on marijuana fields in Mexico. recently there has been paraquated pot at UMass!! I had two samples analyzed in a laboratory which were contaminated by high concentrations, both acquired within the last month, both appearing good at first sight; great smelling gold Columbia. Our government is allowing us to poison ourselves by not permitting testing services to be established. I only hope people will become aware of the potential danger that exists here.

Assault story headline criticized

To the Editor:

In regard to the choice of words headlining the recent sentencing of two women for sexually assaulting a woman, in collaboration with three men; "Lesbian Rapists get life," we find this an intolerable abuse of the word 'lesbian' and of your male privilege as editors of the Collegian.

Considering the recent conflict over granting Women's Space in the Collegian, this is in direct opposition to any feminist, or even rational news representation.

Neither the Boston Globe, New York Times, Greenfield Recorder, or Springfield Union have used the term lesbian to describe these victimized women. The women in question were not lesbians; the assault did not constitute lesbianism.

Lesbianism is a life-style of love. It is a total way of life, as opposed to a sexual "condition," based on women loving and respecting other women. This represents such a radical, and threatening concept because women have been alienated, trivialized, objectified, and unloved for so long that it allows this kind of slander to exist, and go virtually unnoticed.

One of the reasons why the women's pages have been demanded is because there is an obvious need to educate the community about the oppression of women, of which this headline is a prime example.

We strongly support the four ad-free pages and urge the Collegian staff to vote this way. This outrage has only proved, once again, how urgently it is needed.

Staff of the Lesbian Union

'They owe us good living conditions!'

To the Editor:

In response to Wednesday's letter, "Students hurt themselves" by "Name withheld by request." [What's the matter? Afraid to let people know who you are?] I can only say, what is this Bullshit? Cutting the services of dormitory maintenance is the only choice? Just give the kids a good education but let them live in holes that even the rats won't go near. A good education is nothing if your surroundings keep you both mentally and physically from getting it.

The occupation of Whitmore was for much more than just getting our holes fixed, it was to show the university that we, the students, pick where we want to live, not them! If we have to get on our knees and kiss the asses of our government just so we can get a decent place to live, I say who needs it? They owe us good living conditions! It's not a prize for being good little boys and girls; it's a right!

You say we have smeared their pretty picture of UMass with our fighting for our rights, by being "dissatisfied students. Well look around you, are you really satisfied?

Israel must defend self

To the Editor:

In response to Sally Rees' recent editorial to the Collegian, we adamantly refute her condemnation of Israel for its recent attack on PLO stations in Lebanon.

Firstly, it is imperative that Miss Rees understand why Israel invaded Lebanese borders. The PLO recently was responsible for a heinous crime of terrorism. The incident, in which 36 innocents were brutally slain, is deplorable. PLO wanted attention. They got it. They murdered--they didn't destroy a political stonghold. Babies died.

This most recent act of terrorism by PLO is just one example. Remember the bloodbaths of Maalot and Kiriat Shemona. There are so many, and they will continue due to the basic PLO ideology which demands the destruction of the state of Israel.

Am Yisroel Chai! The people of Israel live. Israel must live. The PLO is a direct threat to the state's existence. Israel, like any other recognized territory, is entitled to secure boundries.

Israel had to enter Lebanon to secure her precious borders. Ouzai, the Palestinian refuge Pete Hamill reported as being a neighborhood of wood and brick houses sitting quietly on a hill, houses PLO members. That camp is a home and base of the killers. Yes, there are innocent people too. But, Israel must survive. And if that means securing a defendable boundry by infiltrating PLO strongholds, then I say survive.

As for Miss Rees naive accusation that Israel is an imperialistic government, I wish to enlighten her. The claim that Israel is expanding for economic reasons is absurd.

On the very eve of Israel's birth as a nation, the Arab nations were prepared to obliterate her. In the struggle, strategic ground was gained. In 1967, as in the Yom Kippur war, lands were gained in defense of the state. These lands, such as the Golan Heights, Sinai and Gaza Strip, are strategic to her borders. Considering the fact that they were acquired when Israel was attacked, I would feel wary about handing them over to the Arab "neighbors."

Israel captured those territories during a massive attempt by the Arab countries to wipe her off the map. There is nothing economic about that.

You see, Miss Rees and members of the Young Socialist Alliance, we too want peace--a lasting peace for the population of the Mid-East. But when Israel must defend itself against the abomidable atrocities of a group bent on the nation's destruction, I say defend yourself. I denounce any PLO supporters because I loathe the blatant destruction that is the root of the organization. The PLO must be stopped so peace with the Arab nations can be achieved.

Misunderstanding on gays promoted

To the Editor:

In light of the current controversy about the importance of the Collegian woman's news section, I would like to comment about the type of "women's" news the Collegian does consider relevant enough to print. I am referring directly to the April 19 article about the lesbian rape.

Since I have been reading the Collegian, I have been aware of the insignificant wire copy stories the Collegian has chosen to print. There has always been an appeal to the sensationalist story, but because of the inoccouus nature of most of the syndicated news used, until now I had no reason to be offended.

However, in this instance, I view this story, which dealt directly with homosexual violence, as a blatant step in promoting the current misunderstanding of the gay movement.

Granted, rape is an incidious problem in our society, and its frequent occurrence is something which should be made known to the public. But it seems ironic to me that the Collegian which has been so lacking in the coverage of "heterosexual" rape, or any kind of concern for homosexual problems in the past should have singled this story out as being "newsworthy."

I would hope that in the future the Board of Editors will use more discretion in their choice of news. Springtime is always a period of increased student and community activity. I am sure the Collegian could find a great amount of pertinent news, without resorting to the mediocrity of UPI and AP.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Executive Editor c/o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters to a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. on the day preceding that date.

from our perspective

Media assailed

The prospects for a campus without a radio station and without a newspaper are looking up, if you happen to agree with the Student Senate that the media on campus are bad and not worth funding.

As the story on page one describes, WMUA is in trouble. Much of this trouble stems from licensing troubles and the UMass Board of Trustees, but if you examine the senate's budgetary actions against the station you will see a pattern of non-support coming through. Just a few years ago WMUA's budget was over 40,000 dollars; the Senate's allocation for this year is only 31,000. Unlike the Collegian, WMUA cannot advertise, as it is an educational station by federal law. Therefore they cannot make up the for ravages of inflation with increased advertising. If anything, their budget should be going up every year so that they can maintain a level of quality that not only the students demand but the law demands.

Why is it that the senate is not funding WMUA? It is possible that they feel the money could be spent better elsewhere, but it is more likely that the Senate does not feel they are getting their money's worth out the station. Has anyone asked the students if they think WMUA is a good station? Has the Senate looked at the station's latest rating charts? In keeping with a tradition of selective ignorance, the answer is no.

The issue is even more clear cut when it comes to the problems the Collegian is having with the Senate, and now, the Board of Governors of the Campus Center.

As was reported in Friday's Collegian, the Board of Governors considered taking away the space now occupied by the Collegian if women's pages were voted down at last Thursday's Collegian staff meeting. Such a move is clearly an abuse of the BOG's power to allocate space in the Campus Center, regardless of its motivation, which is questionable. Aside from the very questionable legality of the action, it would be a shame if a legitimate issue like the women's pages controversy were used by student politicians to limit the capability of the campus newspaper to print material that doesn't support a particular political group.

The Undergraduate Student Senate will be considering a motion this week that represents a similar threat to the Collegian's first amendment rights. The proposal would set up an alternative paper using what is presently the Collegian's funding, space and equipment. While the establishment of an alternative publication is certainly nothing we would oppose, the idea of threatening the Collegian's survival to do so is an act of blatant political manipulation which the Collegian would not hesitate to bring before a court for a resolution.

If these attacks on campus media sound disturbing, you might want to get in touch with your student senator and urge him or her to reconsider measures that would jeopardize the campus radio station and involve the Senate in expensive lawsuits with the campus newspaper.

All unsigned editorials represent the opinion of a majority of the Collegian Board of Editors.

Historical awareness

Human history flows along its course in a fairly serene current. Occasionally an event occurs that swallows up all of humanity in a cyclonic tempest with unprecendented fury and unpredictable ramifications. One such event was the Holocaust; the scientifically planned destruction of two-thirds of European Jewry.

An analogy can be drawn: an early morning sunrise promises a beautiful day; birds singing; blue sky; serene and simple quiet. Far on the horizon is the specter of foreboding storm clouds. These clouds are ignored as being a non-threat, a fringe to reality. We continue our daily routine, unprepared for the deluge that will be upon us.

As the day progresses, the clouds, with increasing intensity, darken the skies and the earth below. Soon thunder is heard and lightning is seen. The wind picks up, rain starts to fall and Mother Nature, usually serene, releases her pent up wrath in the form of a tempestuous storm.

Soon the storm is beaten back by the rays of the omnipresent sun. The terror, exileration and excitement that comes from watching a power much beyond our individual reach soon dissipates and is forgotten as we return to our daily routines while Mother Nature returns to Her's. Once again we are unaware and vulnerable to the gathering storm on horizon's edge; unaware and vulnerable for our short-lived memories leave us so.

The rise of the Nazi Party in Germany was seen as a non-threat and ignored. When it gained power in 1933, people in and outside Germany refused to see the foreboding specter of the approaching storm that would soon engulf them. Indeed, even during the execution of the 'Final Solution to the Jewish Problem', many people could or would not see the murderous torrent raging all about them.

Freedom, a sixth sense within the Human Soul, is as the omnipresent sun; it beat back the Nazi scourge, but not until the Nazi's damage was done. The murder of 6,000,000 Jews was a coldy executed, scientifically engineered plan which was like nothing the world had ever seen. With the destruction of European Jewry, an end to a whole era and a whole culture came.

This 'storm' is over: it has been over for a generation. We have returned to our daily routines and put the memories in the back of our minds, or out of our heads completely.

Historical awareness is imperative for the survival of Humankind, for Yesterday's horrors are Today's nightmares, and Today's nightmares dissipate into Tomorrow's oblivion. For the sake of our children, we must remember Yesterday's horrors, because if we do not, they are condemned to relive them.

Duked and Hatcheted

jay martus

A candidate for the office of Governor of Massachusetts is gracing the university community with his presence tommorow at eleven o'clock a.m. at the Student Union Ballroom. The state House minority leader, Francis Hatch, has a very interesting record on public higher education. If you like Dukakis and his level funding budget wonders, you'll adore Hatch and his tuition formulas.

In Massachusetts there are economic and environmental conditions which are rapidly creating several new additions to our local endangered species list. Massachusetts Republicans are edging their way up to the top of that list. The choice of a Republican in this state in 1978 is similar to offering air conditioning as optional equipment on a snowmobile. Figuring the number of Republicans in this state is at the level of a first grade arithmetic problem.

Frank Hatch, in his position of minority leader in the Mass. General Court, stands along with such greats as Custer at Little Big Horn and Napoleon after Waterloo. The Republican party in Massachusetts is so small that a large part of their latest public relations drive has been centered not on the quality of their programs and politicians but on the need for a viable two party system.

There are still a few bastions of Republican strength in this state. Certain towns of the conservative old Yankee North Shore are solidly Republican. It is these enlightened heights from which Frank Hatch descends to charm the feeble masses of UMies. One must remember where Frank comes from to understand his wonderful campaign pronouncements. He represents the Beverly/Beverly Farms district. That is where the Cabots speak only to the Lodges, and Lodges speak only to God. These modern robber barons have fortunes which go back before the Republican party was even dreamed of. Their wealth was amassed as part of the infamous triangle trade of molasses, rum, and slaves. It is these core constituents that provide a large portion of the financial basis for our crusading gubenatorial aspirant, Mr. Hatch.

Frank Hatch has been very prolific in his submitting of bills in regards to higher education. He worked in conjunction with groups like the Massachusetts Taxpayers Association. They are the group that defeated the bottle bill and the fair share electric bill in the referendum campaigns of 1976. They also are the group that worked hard to eliminate Mass P.I.R.G. (fortunately they were not successful at UMass). The Mass. Taxpayers Assoc. along with our Mr. Hatch have been consistently filing legislation to increase tuition at public institutions of higher education in Mass. Their latest formula to determine the tuition was to divide the school's operating budget by the number of enrolled students and then charge every in-state student 40 percent of that amount, and out of state students 100 percent. Under this formula tuition would skyrocket, and UMass would be very close to the private schools in the costs to the student. Low cost quality public higher education isn't Dukakis' goal either, but compared to Hatch's formula the Duke almost looks like our benefactor.

Frank Hatch, as governor, would put the final nails in public higher education's coffin... What is worse: being Duked out or Hatcheted up?

Frank also would like to increase financial aid to higher education in the state: to private schools. He supports the creation of matching funds to private schools that would equal their privately raised capital. At the same time he has consistently opposed any change in the amount of aid received by the public schools. He supports the present law on financial aid which states that no less than 10 percent and no more that 25 percent of state aid can go to sutdents attending public schools. He would however like to see the privates get more than their present minimum of 75 percent.

If you read Hatch's campaign literature you see the promise too of making people pay their appropriate taxes. Private institutions huge property and state tax exemptions are not included in his platform as proper targets. Industry and other corporate entities would be granted more favorable conditions than other taxpayer classifications. He opposes the adoption of significant tax reform such as a progressive income tax system. Under our present tax structure workers pay an inequitable share of the burden. Who does Frank want to pay more in taxes?

Frank Hatch, as governor, would put the final nails in public higher education's coffin. He has been and always will be the benefactor of a very small minority whose needs and desires run counter to those of the general populace of this state.

What is worse: being Duked out or Hatcheted up?

Cypriot situation misrepresented

To the Editor:

This letter is being written in response to a recent article that appeared in this paper concerning the Cypriot situation.

First, Turkey's invasion of Cyprus three years ago was an invasion of a distinct political entity. Cyprus has never been part of the Greek nation, although 82 percent of the population is Greek. Union with Greece, [or 'Enosis'], was made illegal by the British as part of the conditions under which they would end their colonial rule of the island. [Britain received Cyprus as a 'gift' of the Ottoman Turkish Empire at the end of the last century in return for which the British agreed to protect the interests of the Ottomans against those of Czarist Russia in that area.]

Second, the Cyprus conflict is not a 'Turk-Greek' dispute, as is commonly believed in the West. There is much solidarity between Greek and Turkish populations both in Cyprus, and in Greece and Turkey themselves. The conflict is better stated as being one of Fascism vs. Democracy, or NATO interests vs. self-determination of the peoples in the "Near East."

The Turkish people suffer now under political conditions that the Greeks suffered under until three years ago under the NATO-CIA directed, and supported, Fascist regime of Papadopoulos, and the other members of the 'Junta.' Cyprus was martyred to the interests of the U.S. and NATO in the Eastern Mediterranean. The Turkish government used US-supplied-and manufactured arms in their invasion of the island-republic of Cyprus three years ago. This island has no army, and a population of less than one million.

Turkis troops from Turkey still occupy the Republic of Cyprus, in defiance of UN resolution 3212, and are equipped with US made arms to maintain their occupation, in defiance of US law PL95-92 which specifically forbids the use of US armaments for an invasion by one nation of another, neutral, nation, such as that of Turkey against Cyprus in 1974.

There are still nearly 30,000 Turkish Troops on Cyprus. There are still atrocities being committed by the Turkish Army of occupation against the Cypriot population; both Greek and Turk. There are still nearly 250,000 Greek refugees living in tents, victims of the Turkish Army's occupation of their homes. There should be no arms shipments to Turkey until the oppression is ended.

Integration needed in Spring Concert

To the Editor:

I would like to respond to B. Roth and C. Petroph's letter to the residents of Johnson House supporting the Black American Music Festival. [Thursday, April 20]

Roth and Petroph have some interesting rational for supporting the Black American Music Festival. First, many students on campus enjoy Black Classical Music. Second, many students have not been happy with the selection of performing artists in the past Spring Concerts. Finally, the student bodies opposition to the Black American Music Festival is irrational since it is the result of "prolonged exposure to a racist, Capitalistic society."

The justification that "many students on campus actually enjoy Black Classical Music" does not seem to be overly strong criteria for limiting the Spring Concert to solely Black artists. Many students on campus enjoy Punk Rock but this hardly warrants a Punk Rock Festival for Spring Concert. [Although this might meet less resistance.]

As far as the discontent with previous concerts I must disagree with this point also. Except for criticism concerning the actual production I was under the general impression that the "white acid rock hippy yippy UMIE culture," [which represents a large portion of the UMass population], was pleased with the diverse talents performing at last year's concert.

Roth and Petroph's third supportive argument is the most unappealing and the least credible. I have no special affection for the capitalist system but to place the blame on our countries economic system simply hides the root of the student discontent beneath a highly rhetorical argument. Opposition to the Festival is hardly an attempt to repress the development of the Afro-American Culture. It is merely a reaction by a large section of the UMass community to being "force fed" a style of music which the majority of the campus does not align itself with.

No one denies the important role of jazz in the development of music, or its importance in the cultural growth of UMass. Its total dominance of the Spring Concert, however, has created a negative attitude rather than fostering an appreciation for the roots of American music. My only hope is that in the future the Spring Concert will integrate several styles of music to facilitate a wider spectrum of UMass students.

SGA, Collegian 'flunkies' get flack

To the Editor:

This seems like as good a time as any to voice a few opinions about the Collegian and SGA.

First the Collegian. Your paper has some decent sections devoted to minority issues, however your news reporting is really fucked up.

A basic fact about this countrty is that the news that we are given is irrelevant, inaccurate, and generally full of shit. You know that "news" supplied by A.P. and U.P.I. is totally unconducive to a state of objective reality. So why don't you take the stories and try to write them in a reasonably accurate and truthful way, instead of just spouting the same crap that we read in the Globe and the Herald? I read your paper and it's like listening to Walter Cronkite in painters' pants.

O.K., now the SGA.

Oh god, the SGA is really messed up. Its bad enough that they act like fools but worse they make the students look ridiculous to the administration. I'm sure most people go into the SGA with some degree of sincerity, but the minute they get any power they resort to the same bullshit as "real" politicians.

The upshot, people, is this; the level of conciousness at this place is non-existent enough as it is. We all know that people come here to get smashed into the right shape to fit into society. By doing your "jobs" in such a lazy, gutless way you just reinforce the atmosphere of conformity and closed mindedness. Stop being flunkies.

"fashion expert" not appreciated

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to Frank Denton's article, 'SPRINGFASHIONS-The Pits." Since he assumes he is such a fashion expert, maybe his future articles should be titled, "How To Dress Appropriately: Frank Denton's Spring Style," for the benefit of, The Natural Woman, Disco Dagwood, Militant Marauder, Jaded Jock, and Arty Annie. And for our further benefit, could we please have a full-shot, front page picture of Mr. Denton[?]

Everyone is entitled to his-her mode of dress. We thought dress codes went out a decade ago. If UMass had a more prestigious name, would we smell like a rose instead of a "roadside skunk?" We would gladly accept your donation of fabric freshener and laundry services in an effort to smell like "April freshness" as opposed to "yesteryears laundry."

In view of his concern for our manner of decor, he should start "Frank Denton's Fashion Fund for the Needy", so his sinuses need not gag in the future.

DUKE, THERE'S NO WAY WE'RE GONNA GET ANY OF THESE KIDS! THE BEST OF THEM WILL BE ALL GONE BY ROUND SEVEN.
SEVEN? WE CAN'T MAKE A PICK UNTIL ROUND SEVEN?
THAT'S RIGHT. OUR TOP DRAFT CHOICES HAVE BEEN LONG SINCE TRADED AWAY..
A POX ON GEORGE ALLEN! NO WONDER THE TALENTLESS TOAD BOLTED TOWN WHEN HE DID!
TELL ME ABOUT IT. THIS IS THE THIRD YEAR I'VE HAD TO JUNK MY SCOUTING REPORTS!
I JUST DON'T SEE HOW HE GOT AWAY WITH THAT "THE FUTURE IS NOW" GARBAGE AS LONG AS HE DID!
I GUESS BECAUSE NOBODY ELSE HERE UNDERSTOOD POETRY.
YEAH, WELL, THINGS ARE GOING TO CHANGE AROUND HERE!

Your Birthday

MONDAY, APRIL 24

Born today, you have a dual nature both fascinating and irritating. When people think they know how you will act, you do something unpredictable. You are strong-willed, self-reliant, and dedicated to doing things your way. That your way does not coincide with the wishes of others doesn't concern you.

Your independence could cause difficulties with your work, especially if you are in a position to follow rather than lead. You must learn to bide your time, to take the bad with the good and not to complain of the one or underestimate the other.

You are an affectionate person who likes to communicate love through kindness and generosity. Friends and family can count on you to be with them when the going gets rough, and to rejoice with them when things go well. Dislike, on the other hand, you prefer to keep to yourself.

Also born on this date are: Anthony Trollope, English novelist; Sir Stafford Cripps, statesman.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

TUESDAY, APRIL 25

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) --An independent decision early today leads to gainful activity.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) -- Weakness of spirit may hinder efforts to succeed. Seek enthusiastic company.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) -- Trust your intuition about a stranger. You may have to perform an act of faith later.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) -- Morning is more fortunate than afternoon. Ease into another's world carefully.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) -- Give in gracefully, or you may jeopardize your position.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) -- Don't let your adventuresome nature engage you in activities you will regret. Reconsider!

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) -- Expect an upsurge in business returns. Recognize opportunity.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) --Try to avoid jealous actions, and to show affection to one who needs it.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) --Your fondness for collecting souvenirs may keep you from an important move forward.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) --Financial activies may not go as you would like. Change your expectations.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) --Your head for business keeps you from erring early today. Profit accrues now.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) --Big ideas come easily today. Take care not to implement them if they are not practical.

76'ers in semifinals

NEW YORK [UPI] – Until yesterday, the New York Knicks had never been swept in four games in a best-of-seven playoff series. But a far superior Philadelphia 76ers team changed all that with a 112-107 victory to move into the NBA semifinals.

"Winning in four straight is the best way to do it," said Julius Erving, who scored 23 points, including the foul shot that put the 76ers ahead for good. "This is winning in style.

"Last year guys had a lot of confidence but not enough experience. This year, we have confidence and experience."

That became especially clear when Philadelphia, which had outscored New York by a total of 70 points in the first three games, played a sloppy first half yet managed to trail by just two, 59-57, at the intermission.

"Sometimes being blown out is a blessing in disguise," said Erving. "Not that we were blown out but we weren't playing that well. They outplayed us for most of the first half and deserved to lead. But we started to get some breaks and we played them even in the third and outplayed them in the fourth."

New York took a five point lead, 30-25, at the end of the first quarter and led by as many as 13, 50-37, midway through the second.

But after cutting their deficit to two at the half, the 76ers and Knicks kept pace in the third quarter and the score was tied 83-83 at the end of three.

The score was still tied at 97-97 with 3:13 left to play when Lonnie Shelton was assessed a technical foul for throwing the ball downcourt in disgust after being charged with his sixth personal. Erving hit the technical and the 76ers led the rest of the way.

"We have to give the Knicks a lot of credit," said Philadelphia coach Billy Cunningham. "They didn't play like a team looking for a vacation."

"I'm just disappointed we lost in four," said the Knicks's Bob McAdoo, who along with Philadelphia's Doug Collins led all scorers with 24 points. "I thought we could at least win one at home."

Philadelphia now plays the winner of the Washington-San Antonio series for the Eastern Conference title.

NBA playoffs

Doug Collins of the Philadelphia 76ers leads a fast break as he heads towards the basket during yesterday's NBA playoff game. The Sixers defeated New York, 112-107 to move into the semi-finals.

Bullets lead Spurs 3–1

LANDOVER, Md. [UPI] – Elvin Hayes scored two key baskets in the final two minutes and blocked a crucial shot by San Antonio's George Gervin yesterday to lead the Washington Bullets to a 98-95 victory over the Spurs and a commanding 3-1 lead in the clubs' Best-of-Seven NBA quarter-final series.

The Bullets have a chance to win the series Tuesday night at San Antonio.

Hayes, who finished with 23 points and 13 rebounds, tapped in a basket with 1:23 remaining to pull the Bullets within one, 93-92.

Later, with 46 seconds remaining, he took a pass from Larry Wright and stuffed the ball home to put Washington ahead 96-95 and capped his effort on the Spurs' next possession by blocking a 20-foot Gervin shot.

Reserve guard Charles Johnson nailed the game down for Washington by sinking two free throws with 11 seconds remaining.

Gervin had 21 points in the first half and finished the game with 35. Center Billy Paultz added 17 points for the Spurs, who slowed down their running attack noticeably – running more pattern plays in their effort to get back in the series.

Bob Dandridge, who carried the Bullets through the first half with his shooting and playmaking, finished with 24 points. Center Wes Unseld and Johnson contributed 17 apiece.

The Bullets, who trailed by eight very late in the first half, scored four points in the final eight seconds – a hoop by Dandridge and a layup by Tom Henderson off an Unseld inbounds pass to cut the Spurs' lead to 47-43.

The second half stayed close but it appeared the Spurs had an advantage when Gervin hit a basket with 1:29 remaining to put San Antonio up 93-90. But Hayes hit his tap-in and after Gervin missed a shot, Wright hit a layup with one minute left to put Washington up 94-93.

In other playoff action yesterday, Milwaukee defeated Denver, 143-112. Denver leads the series 2-1. Seattle downed Portland, 99-84. Seattle has a 2-1 lead in the series.

Gottfried nets tourney

HOUSTON (UPI) - Brian Gottfried overcame early errors and Ilie Nastase's trick shots for a 3-6, 6-2, 6-1 victory yesterday in the championship match of the $175,000 River Oaks Tennis Tournament.

The top-seeded Gottfried, 26, of Lauderhill, Fla., pocketed $30,000 for his first win in the Houston tournament.

Gottfried was error prone early in the match, due in part to tremendous spins Nastase achieved using a racket with non-interlaced center strings.

But Gottfried steadily tightened his attacking serve-and-volley game in winning the second set and dominated the third set, allowing Nastase only one game, a service break in the fifth.

"I was missing a lot of volleys early so it looked like anybody could pick up a racket and do better," said Gottfried, one of eight players who qualified for the WCT finals in Dallas next month.

"But the shots were dipping off his racket."

Gottfried said he changed tactics after losing the first set.

"I started attacking, but halfway through the first set I stopped attacking," he said. "In the second set I just tried to go back to my original plan. I decided to keep coming in."

Nastase was a little more unruly in Sunday's match than he had been earlier in the week, but Gottfried said he was not disturbed

"We've always had good matches that haven't been decided by calls or one guy getting upset," said Gottfried. "Nastase seems to get upset a little more when it's hot. That seems to bring out a few more devils in him."

It was Gottfried's second win in a row over Nastase after having little success against the Romanian earlier in their careers.

Trackmen 3rd in relays

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

The trip to Boston for the men's track team proved to be a worthwhile venture, as the squad finished third in a field of 23 at the BC Relays.

Northeastern remained king of the New England track scene, as it tallied a winning three day score of 61½. UConn, the Yankee Conference indoor champion, snared the runner up slot with 47. UMass finished with 31½.

The surprise Minutemen performance occurred during Saturday's festivities, when junior Peter Descamps ran, hurdled and splashed his way to a 2½ second victory in the 3000 meter steeplechase. Descamps assumed the role of race leader when reigning New England steeple king Kevin McCusker abandoned his throne to compete in the distance medley. Descamps recorded a personal best time of 9:04.7, which qualifies him for the Eastern Championships in four weeks. Matt Wolff, competing in his first steeplechase in a UMass jersey, finished sixth in 9:22.5.

The only repeat performance from the UMass Relays a week ago was the efforts of the 480 shuttle hurdle relay team. The first year quartet of Paul Enis, Dan Kelly, Ed Iwanowicz and Paul King withstood challenges from the UConn and Northeastern squads to post their second victory during a week's span. Only .6 of a second divided the three top teams, led by the 62 second clocking of the Minutemen.

Of the twenty events that constructed the track and field program, only five were apart from the relay format. In the 440 intermediate hurdles, one of those events unfamiliar with a baton, Minutemen Mark Healy finished in a tie for second in the closest race of the afternoon. He shared the runner up position with James Nealy, a high school All-American last year now attending Central Connecticut State College. Both competitors failed by only .2 of a second to wager a tie between the top three performers. Dave Nelson, running on his home turf, won the event in 54.0.

The UMass javelin trio of Paul Derby, Carl Johnson and Dave Sullender, spearheaded an attack on the competition that fell but one place short. Their combined throws totalled 535.3 feet, second only to the winning tally produced by UConn at 601.8 feet. The javelin was the lone weight event the Minutemen placed in.

rewarded UMass with a second place showing. The trio of first year men were overshadowed by the meet record performance of the UConn squad, although they tied the old record set by Northeastern in 1974. Don Dowden at 6'6", Mark Thompson at 6'4" and Paul Hurton at 6'4", combined to give the Minutemen the runner-up slot, and future promise in the event.

Other notable Minutemen performances: Frank Carroll, 8th place in the 3 mile with a time of 14:09.1; the 2 mile relay team in 5th, and the two day effort of assistant coach Eric Lammi, who finished second in the decathlon with 6706 points.

The season is unraveling as the Yankee Conference Championships will be staged at the University of Vermont in two weeks. A week after the YanCons, UMass will host the New Englands.

"Northeastern is unbeatable," commented coach Ken O'Brien. "Similar to the indoor season, the real battle from our standpoint is for second place. UConn, BU, and us, along with Ivy League teams Brown and Dartmouth, will fight it out for the second through sixth positions in the New Englands."

Kuiper single vaults tribe over sox to gain split

BOSTON (UPI)-Duane Kuiper singled home one run and Ron Hassey singled home two more in the 11th inning Sunday, lifting the Cleveland Indians to a 10-7 victory over the Boston Red Sox and a split of their doubleheader.

Carlton Fisk doubled in one of three eighth-inning runs to give Boston a 6-3 victory in the opener.

Bob Stanley, 1-1, who came on to pitch the 11th, got two quick outs before Larvell Blanks doubled. Jim Norris was walked intentionally but Kuiper singled to left for his third hit of the game, scoring Blanks.

Hassey, recently called up from the minors, then singled to left, scoring Norris and Kuiper, who had taken second on the throw to the plate on the previous play.

Each team scored a run in the 10th inning. After Paul Dade doubled home Kuiper to give Cleveland a 7-6 lead in the top of the 10th, Rick Burleson led off the Boston half with a triple. Carlton Fisk walked and Jerry Remy delivered Burleson with a sacrifice fly.

The Indians had tied the score 6-6 with three runs in the seventh, capped by a bases-empty homer by Johnny Grubb, who had a homer in each game of the four-game series.

In the first game, Boston scored three times in the eighth. Bob Bailey led off by walking and was replaced by pinch-runner Frank Duffy. Duffy went to second when reliever Dennis Kinney bobbled Remy's sacrifice bunt, putting two men on and setting up Fisk's run-scoring double off reliever Jim Kern. Remy and Fisk came around to score on Scott's double to right field.

Cleveland had tied the game 3-3 on a Grubb homer in the top of the eighth.

Bill Campbell, making his first appearance in 15 adys because of elbow trouble, pitched the final 1 1-3 innings to pick up the victory. Buddy Bell and Willie Horton homered for Cleveland and Butch Hobson, driving in a run for his ninth straight game, had a two-run shot for Boston.

Gorillas rout Williams, 18-11

By RUSS SMITH
Collegian Staff

On a clear, warm, breezy, beer drinking day, the men's lacrosse team extended its win skein to three straight-seven consecutive vs. Willaims-via a resounding 18-11 rout of the Williamstown based college.

Before the largest crowd of the season, the Minutemen ran up a 7-1 lead after the first quarter, extending it to 12-2 by the half, before coasting through the second half for the easy victory.

Leading the offensive onslaught for the Gorillas were Brooks Sweet with seven goals and four assists, Ed Murray with three goals-two assists, and Norm Smith with two goals and three assists. For Williams College, Pete Thomsen (four goals and an assist) and John Glynn (hat trick) did some damage.

First Quarter

The 'Hill' became infiltrated with Garber Gorilla fans, coolers (of soda?) and an occasional fence leaning bicycle, in the expectation of a good game. However, no one opted for the seats directly behind the 'Green Monster' stationed near the Tobin Hall entrance.

The crowd was a bit uneasy with UMass' play early in the opening session; lack of hitting and those elusive ground balls. Williams didn't look all that bad to begin with — though somehwat cautious in the offensive half of the field. The UMass defensive corps of Rich Donovan, Billy Coke, Pete Klement, Roger Coe held Williams attackmen in close check.

Brian Gottfried returns a high forehand shot in his victory over Ilie Nastase in the finals of the River Oaks Tennis Tournament yesterday. See story page 18. (UPI photo)

Sweet broke the ice three minutes into play, after cutting the corner of the Ephmen crease and dumping the ball cross the goal line. Twenty-nine seconds later after passing the ball around the perimeter of the Williams net, Murray hit Smith all alone at the left post for an easy goal. Skip Vosburgh connected on the tail end of a UMass fastbreak on a pass from Sweet and UMass was up 3-0. Williams called a timeout to regroup.

Whatever they set up — it worked. Fifteen seconds later Peter Barbaresi's shot through a scramble somehow trickled past the post. Garbage goal or no garbage goal, Williams was on the board, down 3-1.

UMass' Mike Lewis, on his knees, made a decent pass to Pit Martin, whose point blank range shot was saved by Ephmen goalie Bob Cowin. Vosburgh and Harry Confortti fired hard shots, which whizzed by the crossbar.

With only five minutes remaining in period No. 1 the offense got hot. Following a Sweet goal, Pit Martin hit from in close (over the net pass from Sweet). Smith hit Sweet in mid-air, who shot it down into the strings. When Sweet tossed in UMass' seventh goal the Ephmen looked forward to the end of the quarter.

SECOND QUARTER

It became an 8-1 game when with :57 gone, Sweet tossed in an over the shoulder shot. The crowd got rowdy as the hitting picked up.

UMass then came up with a new play. Murray shot the ball wide of the Ephmen goal. Sweet picked it up behind the goal, flipped it back out front to Smith who netted the ball. 9-1. And in order to understand that this play wasn't just a fluke, the Lewis-Sweet-Murray trio duplicated the play: Lewis the shot, Sweet, the behind-the-net pickup. To Murray in front, alone. Score.

Williams' Pete Thomsen made it 10-2 with his goal. But Confortti and Murray got that back. Halftime, 12-2.

SECOND HALF

Following the frisbee entertainment, UMass got a man-up score (Murray) and good-passing-fast break goal (Sweet) uppimg their lead to 14-2.

After Williams 'closed' the gap to 14-5, Vosburgh threw a long pass to Steve Dahl who took a couple steps and rifled a shot halfway up the goal. Eric Banhzal replaced 'Duck' Goldstein in net, and came up with a couple of tough saves.

FOURTH QUARTER

With UMass up 16-5, the only question remaining was what the final margin would be. With the big lead, freshman got in some more playing time. Jeff Cohen replaced Banhazl. Williams outscored UMass in this period 6 to 2 — not that it mattered much. Dave Martin scored standing in the slot ala Phil Esposito (back in the older Bruins days). Dougie White knotted a score — to the thrill of some anonymous admirers. Lennie Chaffrey rang the post, but his shot caught no webbing.

FIFTH QUARTER

Only joking, No overtime. Next game is a biggie. Hofstra, 3 p.m., Wednesday.

Bruins oust Hawks, 5-2

CHICAGO (UPI) - Peter McNab and Brad Park each scored two goals last night to lead the Boston Bruins to a 5-2 victory over the Chicago Black Hawks for a 4-0 sweep in their best of seven Stanley Cup playoff series.

It was a record twelfth straight playoff loss for the Hawks, who have not won a Stanley Cup game since 1975, and it was the seventh time the Hawks have been swept, 4-0 in a 7-game playoff series.

Boston put Sunday's game out of reach in the first eleven minutes and 40 seconds, scoring four times in that span for a 4-0 lead.

Both of McNab's goals came during that stretch.

Batmen split

The UMass baseball team lost the nightcap of a doubleheader to UMaine 6-5 in extra innings last night at Orono.

Doug Welenc picked up his fifth win in the first game as he led UMass to a 5-4 victory also in extra innings.

Softballers top Chiefs, split two with BSC

By MELISSA GALLAGHER
and BETH COLLINS
Collegian Staff

The UMass softball team went two-for-three in weekend action as it defeated Springfield and split a doubleheader with Boston State College.

Friday the UMass nine began the triad scratching for its first win, 4-3, over Springfield. Both teams donned in maroon. couldn't contain a lead for too long. The Chiefs took advantage of the Minutewomen's mistakes to tally two, thus dampening hurler Beth O'Connell's varsity debut.

In the bottom of the first, UMass tied it. Cheryl Meliones walked, Sue Peters singled, and a picturesque bunt past the pitcher and first baseman by Jennifer Parker loaded the bases. Rhonda McManus followed with a RBI fielder's choice, then Elaine Howle's infielder grounder scored another.

The Chiefs threatened to break the deadlock in the second. With one out and the bases full, O'Connell kept the victory in the family as she turned the pitching chores over to her sister, Kathy. The younger O'Connell kept Springfield in check to end the inning.

The Minutewomen threatened and succeeded going one up, 3-2, in the second frame. O'Connell rapped a single, one of four UMass hits, to bring home Carol Bruce.

The fourth proved to be the crucial inning. With no outs, the Chiefs occupied second and third. This set the scent for Pat Oski's defensive gem. The rightfielder made a fine running catch to right-center and proceeded to throw out the runner at the plate. The UMies didn't go untouched, however. A two-out single tied the game at 3-3.

Oski continued her heroics by walking, stealing second, and going to third. Then she scored the winning run on Peter's grounder.

The remainder of the brisk afternoon was a pitchers' duel which saw O'Connell come out on top.

Saturday's doubleheader with Boston State College brought a mixed bag of goods for the Minutewomen — a 4-3 win and a disappointing 5-1 defeat.

Game one looked like a continuum of the Springfield game as key defensive plays by the whole squad sustained a psyched Boston State nine.

A sixth inning rally put UMass on top, 4-3, and some fine work on the mound by Sue Peters allowed the Minutewomen to squeak by with the win.

Game two brought nothing but trouble for UMass. Silent bats and pitching trouble handed the team their third loss.

A dissappointed Coach Diane Thompson said, "Each team we will be playing now is up for us. We have to keep our concentration up and avoid those costly mental errors."

The lone bright spot in the game was the ever-present steady pitching of freshman Kathy O'Connell. O'Connell pitched some impressive relief, but the offensive support just wasn't there.

The Minutewomen hope to get back on the winning track as they face Bridgewater State at home today. Game time is scheduled for 2:30. A JV game will follow.

"Catching a draft"

As the playoff pictures in pro hockey and pro basketball draw to a close, and as the baseball season begins it's upward escalation towards the all-star break in mid-July, and as the nation's top three-year-old thoroughbreds prepare for the Kentucky Derby on the first Saturday in May, what would be a more fitting subject to report about on a Monday morning than the 1978 National Football League draft of college seniors?

The old draft (held in February) used to be hard on teams changing head coaches(or complete coaching overhauls)at the end of the season--sometimes delaying a rebuilding program for a year. That was because teams weren't able to scout as many players in the time following the last game up until the draft as the new coach would like to. But this time all ten of the new head coaches will be as informed about the available talent as they wish to be (hi there, Bud "Mr. Trac Two" Wilkinson), because the draft will take place some three months after the now extinct February draft. Thus, the postponement of the draft aids the clubs with the excellent scouting systems, and hurts the clubs that can't make use of the extended three-month period.

This year's draft will take place on May 2-3, just a mere eight days from today, and should reward a large percentage of the ballclubs with a dozen (and any extra picks that they might have acquired) prospective employees. The fact that the draft takes place in May marks a significant change from years gone by, because in the past, the draft commenced approximatly one month after the Super Bowl or Championship Game, and teams used their big-name draftees as a public relations tool. Nowadays, because of the present collective bargaining agreement between the league and the NFL Players' Association that stipulates that there must be a late draft (the agreement is valid until 1986). The late draft aids the veterans who play out their options, because they can use the extra time up until the middle of April to shop around for better deals. But it conversely hurts the college seniors that lose the time that they could have had with money in their pockets (providing they had no-cut contracts) and a sense of where they would be continuing their gridiron careers.

As a result of all this contractual mish-mash, the draft has been pushed to the point where it's publicity conflicts with the first month of beanball season, the turbulence of the gang-wars of hockey playoffs, and the trauma of the end of pro hoop's semi-final playoff matchups. What all this boils down to is that although the NFL draft will continue to have a significant impact on the nation's sports scene, it won't be able to command the undaunted, individual attention of the sports world that it received from the media and the fans that it received in the past.

Presumptuous Predictions...Tampa Bay, which has the first choice in the draft, will trade away their pick to the Los Angeles Rams in exchange for tight end Charles Young, guards Greg Horton, and Donnie Hickman, and future draft choices. The Rams will pick who else but Heisman trophy winner Earl Campbell...Kansas City, which picks second, will open up their eyes and choose Doug Williams, the sensational quarterback from Grambling who shattered the NCAA records for touchdown passes with a meager 78 aerial "paydirt" missiles...I expect Ken McAfee, the fabulous tight end from Notre Dame, to go within the first six picks. The All-American out of Brockton, Mass. could prove to be the next Dave Casper, and a good number of teams would consider making "Mac" their first choice...The Pittsburgh Steelers don't even list 40 year-old punter Bobby Walden in their preseason program. They will choose punter-placekicker Steve Little of Arkansas if they get the chance. Chuck Noll might even be thinking of trading some players and/or future draft choices for an early pick in this years draft to grab the exrazorback....Watch for trackster James Lofton of Stanford to go early. The wide receiver is considered superior to Isaac Curtis by coach Bill Walsh, who had them both...Prediction of the Year--Alydar by a solid two lengths in the Kentucky Derby. A perfect ticket with Alydar and Affirmed won't pay much, but it's worth a substantial investment.

Police drug bust nets five

by SEAN HORGAN
Collegain Staff

A spokesman at the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency yesterday admitted a Friday night drug raid including the UMass police resulted in the arrests of five persons on drug-related charges.

Supervisor of Agents Edward Noone confirmed reports that the arrests occured in Amherst, but could not say who was arrested or where the arrests took place.

Noone said the investigation was continuing.

UMass Director of Security Saul L. Chafin yesterday refused to comment on the drug raid.

Informed sources have placed the scene of the raid at the Cance Dormitory, a low rise residential hall in the Southwest residential area.

Sources said two or three individuals were arrested in the dorm, and the drug in question was cocaine.

Cance dormitory Head of Residence William McNamara yesterday refused to comment, hanging up the telephone when a Collegian reporter began asking him questions.

A spokesman at the UMass News Bureau said the UMass police assisted in the physical apprehension and detension of some of the arrested.

The spokesman also said one of the arrested was brought to the infirmary for medical attention, where he was guarded by UMass police.

"It is my understanding," the spoksman said, "That two of them may have been UMass students. Some of the arrests were not made on campus, and they weren't all made at the same time."

The sopkesman said the UMass police may have been involved because of the expert drug testing equipment available at the state Dept. of Public Health laboratories on campus.

Dean of Students William F. Field said he has not seen any official reports on the raid, but said he heard some actions took place.

He said the federal agencies involved will probably release the information "when they're damn-well ready."

Campus pot testing stirs up controversy

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

A state of confusion exists on campus among university officials over the on-campus testing of marijuana for traces of the lethal herbicide paraquat.

A spokesman at the Urgent Care unit of the infirmary yesterday told the Collegian of a notice referring individuals concerned with paraquat poisoning to the campus police for testing of the marijuana samples

According to the spokesman, the campus police would analyze the samples at the state Dept. of Public Health laboratories here on campus. the spokesman said the notice was dated March 23, 1978, but said it was unsigned.

However, Director of Security Saul L. Chafin last night said no such program exists, and he would not comment on whether there are future plans for such an analysis.

"We are definitely not doing that sort of testing," Chafin said, "If we were going to do anything about it we would try to educate the community against the use of marijuana."

Barry W. Averill, the executive director of the university health services, said he had no knowledge of the notice dealing with paraquat testing by the campus police.

Averill said the infirmary used to test unknown drug samples at the Dept. of Public Health laboratories until the federal Food and Drug Administration and the FBI ordered them to stop.

"They insisted we stop because they felt we were using the state labs for quality control for the drug pushers and all we were trying to do was keep people from hurting themselves," Averill said.

No spokesman at the Public Health laboratories could be reached for comment.

Outfront suit awaits judge's final decision

CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

Verdict is pending in the case of Outfront vs. three administrators of UMass since the completion of testimony yesterday in Hampshire County District Court.

Three members of the newspaper staff in a suit filed last year allege that the newspaper's production materials and back issues were removed and disposed of during the intersession of 1976. The defense claims only garbage was removed during the intersession when the Outfront office, in the commuter collective, became infested with mice and began to smell from the garbage and food left there.

Outfront, now a defunct UMass alternative newspaper, filed suit against Dudley J. Bridges, Campus Center building operations manager, William F. Field, dean of students and Edward J. Kelley, assistant manager of bvilding operations at the Campus Center.

With all the testimony in Judge Ann Gibbons is expected to return a verdict sometime this week.

James T. Jordan, a sophomore, who describes himself as a "co-ordinator" for the publication said approximately 6000 back issues of the paper, boxes of graphics and graphics material, news service information on file and file copies of periodicals were thrown out.

Kelley said "the newspapers were scattered, they were very disorgainzed," and denied the allegations that materials packed in boxes were thrown out.

Of the three students who filed the suit, only Jordan appeared at the trial. Robert Gardner and Richard Warren, Jordan's co-complaintents are no longer students at UMass.

When the loss was discovered in 1976, Gardner sent a memo to Bridges requesting $500 compensation fo the materials missing. Jordan said he re-evaluated the losses later, "I know that the assessment I tried to do was a fairly carefully thought through estimation," he said.

Another issue which entered into the trial was the question of ownership of the material. Because Outfront was a R.S.O. group, the paper is funded by the Student Senate, and because the senate gets some of its funds from the Board of Trustees, ultimate ownership of the paper may belong to the Board of Trustees.

"The student, newspaper, in this case Outfront, is controlled, is financed, is run by a trust fund of the University of Massachusetts, Defense Attorney Frank Yesu said.

"All student activities must fall under Trustee authority to exist," Dean Field said in his testimony yesterday.

Jordan feels some of the initial resistance on the part of the UMass administration to deal with their complaint, has caused an additional problem to enter the situation.

"The fact is the stuff was thrown out, not harrassment," Jordan said. "But because of a certain amount of initial treatment, it really points out the relationship between the students and administration at UMass.

USSR-Cuba promise more African support

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union and Cuba issued a joint communique yesterday promising more "assistance and support" to the liberation movements of southern Africa.

The communique, marking the end of a visit by Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca Peoli, came only two days after Secretary of State Cyrus Vance raised the question of the Soviet bloc's expanding involvement in Africa during a meeting with President Leonid Brezhnev.

Vance told a ministerial session of the Central Treaty Organization in London just before flying to Moscow last week that the United States was deeply concerned that Moscow and Cuba were "unwilling to recognize the fundamental principle often stated by African nations that they can solve their own problems without the use of external force."

The Soviet-Cuban communique also stressed support for the Marxist governments of Angola and Mozambique and accused the forces of "international reaction" of trying to maintain tension on the Horn of Africa.

Moscow and Havana both have been giving massive military aid to their African allies, supplying both weapons and troops.

The State Department said last week 19,000 to 20,000 Cuban military personnel have remained in Angola following the 1975 civil war that brought President Agostinho Neto to power. They are helping Neto fight pro-Western guerrillas.

An estimated 17,000 Cuban troops and pilots and some 1,000 Soviet military advisers in Ethiopia were given most of the credit for winning the Ogaden war against Somalia.

Military aid also is going to liberation movements fighting the white governments of Rhodesia and South Africa and to Mozambique to bolster border defenses against the two countries.

Both Ethiopian strongman Mengistu Haile Mariam and Neto recently visited the Soviet Union although Neto's trip was said to be for rest and possibly for medical treatment.

A communique, according to Tass, reported "a complete identity of views and positions" on all questions discussed, including Africa.

Museum visit revives holocaust visions

By PATRICK DOBBS
Collegian Staff

The Jewish holocaust is a deeply personal experience for many people but few UMass students have ever visited the Yad Vashem Holocaust museum in Jerusalem as Judy Superior did.

Superior, a 22-year-old UMass student from Fall River, visited the museum during a one year stay in Israel last year from July 1976 to July 1977. "I went to Israel to satisfy my own curosity because everyone told me that it was a land of milk and honey," says Superior.

"The museum was filled with many pictures of concentration camps, gas showers and the crematoriums where 6 million Jews were killed during World War II. It also displayed the ashes of cremated Jews and bars of gold the Nazis made from the fillings of prisoners' teeth," Superior said.

"There were services held for Jews that were killed on specific dates at the museum," Superior said. The museum had a section that held a number of tombstones where the services are held, Superior said.

"I was disgusted by the tourist attitude that some of the visitors showed at the museum," she said, "After the services some of the parents set up pictures of their children standing smiling next to the tombstones," she said.

Many of the visitors treated the museum as a tourist attraction rather that a place to gain sensitivity, she said.

Superior studied the holocaust in-depth before her trip to Israel. She said the recent television series concerning the holocaust were good.

"The films were good to introduce society to what happened but it really didn't touch the subject matter," she said.

Many of the tortures that Jews suffered in concentration camps were not included in the films she said.

"The Nazis would strip a Jew or group of Jews, pour cold water over them and freeze them alive," Superior said.

Superior said the public didn't understand that some of the prisoners at the concentration camps did escape. The prisoners would be buried in coffins with false bottoms so that when they were buried they would slip out of the coffins and escape through a tunnel to freedom.

With recent flares of anti-semitism in Florida after the showing of the "The Holocaust" on television, Superior said she didn't feel any such prejudices on campus. "I just haven't come across any," she said.

Mystery caller sought

The UMass Police Department has issued a public appeal to the person who notified them that a UMass graduate student was lying hurt in front of Clark Hall and Stockbridge Hall early Wednesday evening.

Jill A. Dickinson is listed in "fair condition" at a Springfield hospital after she was found unconscious Wednesday night by police, notified of her presence by an anonymous phone call.

"Whoever made the call should contact the Detective Bureau in Dickinson Hall at 545-0893," a UMass News Bureau spokeswoman said.

Dickinson was moved to Wesson Memorial in Springfield since they had a neurological expert on their staff. An operation has been performed to "relieve pressure on the brain" the news bureau said.

The news bureau said the police have been unable to talk to Dickinson to obtain any information about the incident, although police say they believe she was a victim of a hit and run accident.

She received injuries to the head, a fractured pelvis and scrapes and bruises. Police say they have ruled out sexual assault and robbery in the case.

Subpoenas anger NEAG

Northeast Area Government representatives expressed displeasure Sunday night with the subpeonas they received over the weekend to attend the student government electoral convention to be held tonight.

"Because we've been coming all along, we weren't happy when we received the subpeonas," said Diane Lauricella, Northeast president.

Lauricella also announced that nomination papers were due this Friday for area elections which will be held on May first.

AIC youths arraigned

Four men were arraigned yesterday morning in Hampshire County District Court on charges of disorderly person, breaking glass in a building, attempting to set fire to a dwelling and trespassing. They were arrested by UMass police Sunday.

Peter Burkhart, 20, of Welsley, Mark St. John, 19, Cohasset, Robert Clark, 19, of American International College, Springfield, and Roger Tappan, 21, of American International College, Springfield, were picked up Sunday by UMass police when they were found throwing rocks through a window at Moore House, police said.

Burkhart and Tappan were also charged with malicious destruction of state property.

Police said they charged the men after an investigation found they had set a fire to a roll of toilet paper in a men's room in Moore house. Their case was continued to May 10.

Drug ads found sexist

(HERSAY NEWS SERVICE)--An American Psychiatric Association survey of drug advertisements over a one year period shows that in such ads, the doctors are men and the patients are women.

The APA surveyed three psychiatric journals and found that 98 men were shown as doctors, but not one woman. Of 459 patients shown, 271 were shown as women and 188 as men. Two women were shown as nurses.

The APA survey pointed out that even though an estimated 13 percent of psychiatrists are women, not one ad showed a female psychiatrist.

Canoe design honored

The UMass Concrete Canoe team once again captured top honors for the design of its canoe, but failed to place first in the race, finishing second, third and fifth in the national race in Maine this past weekend.

Designs of UMass canoes have placed first ever since the national competition began four years ago, but the team has yet to finish first in the 10 mile race that follows. This year's performance was the best for the team. Thirteen other colleges from the east coast were represented by 29 canoes in the Whitewater Concrete Canoe Race.

One of the canoes built by the UMass team this year sunk in the race, sending its passengers into 35 degree water.

'Roots' ed takes job

The founder of Grass Roots, a Collegian supplement that later became Nummo News, and former Collegian editor Rick Scott Gordon has taken a job in public relations with a private community service center serving the Pioneer Valley.

The 25-year old Gordon, a senior majoring in communication studies, is working as an administrative assistant in community relations for the Center for Human Development, a non-profit organization based in Springfield that offers youth and family employment and health services in Hampden and Franklin counties.

Gordon was the black affairs editor in 1976 when an occupation of the Collegian led to the founding of Grass Roots, a Collegian supplement covering Third World news, which later became Nummo News. Gordon was also an editor for the black literary magazine, Drum.

Bitter student tow group quits

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

In the student government drive to create more student-run businesses and services one group seems to have been left behind and discarded. Supporters of a student tow service, to replace Amherst Towing, have given up their efforts despite a campaign that included a 7,000 signature petition.

When the students brought their case to the Student Government Association they encountered frustration which later grew to failure, and what they said was corrupt politics throughout their attempt.

Student politicians who opposed the group cite possible financial loss as the primary reason for their opposition.

The student group, The Committee for Student Run Towing (formerly the Committee to Stop Amherst Towing) received $8,000 last November from the Undergraduate Student Senate, and had the money taken away in December.

"It's been a long haul to get where we are now," committee member Wayne Langly had said shortly after the November meeting.

But in December, the Senate transferred the funds from towing to the Legislative Advocacy Bureau (LAB), an organization created to lobby for students in Boston. According to Committee member Dave Glud, the LAB proposal had strong support on the senatefloor including Student government co-President Jon A. Hite.

Langly said recently, "we needed the money at that time to get started." Langly added that the Administration "didn't take us seriously," after the money was transferred. Glud said, "we didn't realize how far people would go. None of us had any experience in dealing with this." Langly said in November, "we are not involved in government in any way except this. We don't have any friends in the Senate."

Langly said he believed Hite opposed towing because he "is planning to run for future office in the town ... it's just common sense if you are going to run for office in this town you better not go around pissing off the people who are powerful in this town which means Amherst Towing. Anyone who gives employment to the people in this town is a powerful person."

Hite called the charge "bullshit" and said that even if he was planning on running, "I wouldnt think Amherst towing is all that powerful." He said "a student tow service would be the biggest money loser the SGA ever had."

According to committee members, however, the opposition to student towing took many forms. "The biggest weapon in the arsenal of the Senate leadership is the tactic of stalling," said Langly.

Committee members contend that former student government co-president Jay A. Martus attempted to stall a vote on student towing by telling the students that they had incorrect figures on the number of cars being towed, among other statistics. Committee members say that Martus later admitted he lied.

Martus said when he told the committee that their figures were wrong, "I said specifically that I was not sure" whether they were right or wrong. Martus said that the committee may be trying "to discredit me for a column." Martus wrote a column in the Collegian questioning the committee's work on towing. Martus said he was "not trying to mislead anyone."

Langly also said, "It's crazy how much energy (Senate Speaker) Brian DeLima, (Treasurer) Priscilla West, (former Treasurer) Henry Doyle and Martus have put into this to smash this issue.

Neither Doyle nor West could be reached for comment last night.

DeLima said he supported "the concept" of towing but was concerned about financing the service.

The members of the committee will soon graduate. They have given up the pursuit of a student run tow service for the pursuit of grades. They said they would "have to start from scratch" if they were to attempt another stab at getting student towing. They say this will not make the attempt.

Amherst gets first nod on DNA

By MARIA MESSITT
Collegian Staff

Amherst College Biology Professor Patrick Williamson is the first person authorized to do recombinant DNA research in Amherst.

"This is not the first time I've dealt with DNA," said Williamson. He worked as a post-doctorate fellow at the National Institutes of Health for three years before coming to Amherst College last September.

Williamson will be using the same techniques he learned at the NIH, but this summer's experiment will involve breaking new scientific ground.

Amherst College Biohazards Committee Chairman Stephen George, also a biology professor there, has received no objections from the town regarding this research.

Recombinant DNA research is an extremely controversial subject, because it involves creating biological combinations not normally occuring in nature.

Some scientists and politicians feel this research to be potentially dangerous, because it may create "genetic monstrosities or new diseases" that medical science has no weapons against as of yet.

Recombining DNA involves using enzymes to break down the DNA molecule, and substituting plasmids (small pieces of DNA) from one piece of DNA to another.

Williamson will begin his research this summer at Amherst College. He will use recently-developed recombinant DNA techniques creating DNA combinations not naturally occuring, and therefore regarded by some as potentially dangerous.

Williamson is investigating the structure and properties of the particular molecule of DNA that codes for the protein globin, which is part of the oxygen-carrier hemoglobin molecule found in the blood.

Approval for the research was granted by the Amherst College Biohazards Committee at a meeting on April 3rd. To win approval, the committee required Williamson to prepare a statement describing the research, why he felt it was necessary, and what experimental procedures it would involve.

After interviewing Williamson for several hours, and inspecting his laboratory, the committee discussed the matter granting approval in the same session.

The National Institutes of Health has laid down guidelines for this type of research, and requires every institute interested in recombinant DNA work to establish a biohazards committee to review and decide on each case. The Amherst Town Meeting decided half the members of such a committee shall be town residents appointed by the Board of Selectmen.

UMass Biochemistry Professor Maurille Fournier hopes to do research involving recombinant DNA. His proposal is now being reviewed by the UMass Biohazards Committee, according to Amherst's Chairman George.

UMass Physics Professor Arthur Quinton heads a special town committee formed last fall to gather and disperse DNA information. "We're just a temporary town meeting study committee," said Quinton. The committee will present its research to the May town meeting.

Selectmen support S. Amherst bus

by FRAN BASCHE
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen voted last night to support a Town Meeting article which would expand UMass bus service to South Amherst beginning this summer if passed at the May meeting.

The extended service would be nine times a day every weekday, and would leave from Orchard Valley through West Street to the south end of town, Wendy Kohler, chairwoman of the Commission on Public Transportation said.

The selectmen also reviewed and voted for support of an article which would allocate $10,000 to SCARCE for a townwide paper and glass recycling program.

John Reynolds, the scoutmaster of an Amherst Boy Scout troop, said scouts have been running recycling programs as fundraisers for a long time and the program might compete with the scouts.

Ralph Hosford, a spokesman for SCARCE said he thought this program would not affect the scouts. "There's room enough for everyone here," he said. Hosford said some people would save their papers for the scouts.

The town would pay 35 percent — 19,000 dollars, for extended bus service Kohler said. Board members Roger C. Jaque and Nathaniel Reed voted against the motion to support the article.

"We won't know what the cost-beneficial of this (extended service) is for a while — we have to try it," Diana Romer the board's chairman said.

Amherst

Kohler said Leverett, a nearby town has a similar article coming before it's town meeting this week to extend bus service to Leverett. Leverett would pay for milage from Leverett to the Amherst border.

The board also voted to support town meeting articles, one allocating $10,000 to the conservation fund and the other transferring $26,000 from an appropriations account to the Conservation Fund which is used primarily for land acquisition.

The board reduced the original amount of money allocated from $20,000 to $10.000. Last year the Town Meeting voted against appropriating money to the Conservation Commission for the first time in 15 years.

The selectmen voted to take no action on two articles dealing with the responsibilities of the SCARCE committee in its studies of energy conservation.

Defense Dept. analyzes glob which fell from the sky

RIPLEY, Tenn. [UPI] - Defense Department officials plan to conduct further tests this week on an unidentified, green substance that reportedly fell from the sky Sunday, Lauderdale County Sherriff Joe Osteen said yesterday.

A man whom the sheriff declined to name found the clear, green glob in the small community of Golddust, Tenn., near the Mississippi River about 60 mile north of Memphis. Osteen said the man told authorities he saw the substance, which weighs about five pounds, fall from the sky about 3 p.m. Sunday.

"I don't know what it is, but it looks like grren ice," said Osteen. "What's left of it is being kept in a plastic bag in our refrigerator.

"We've had it checked by the Defense Department and it is not radioactive or harmful to human beings," the sheriff said. "But we still don't know what it is."

National head lauds UMass alcohol ed

By PATRICIA KEEFE
Collegian Staff

Ernest P. Noble, director of the National Institute of Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, yesterday lauded the efforts of the UMass Demonstration Alcohol Education Project.

"The program here at UMass has been selected as one of the modern programs to emulate on other campuses," he said. Noble was speaking at the opening of a three-day conference on alcohol programs.

While praising Dr. David Kraft Noble outlined three of the project's major strategies.

As part of the project's work on campus, they have succeeded in identifying seven specific problems that drinking causes and are restructuring the campus environment to foster a more moderate approach to drinking. They are also working with those individuals capable of bringing out these changes.

Noble said the institute would be evaulating the above approach to see what lessons could be applied to other prevention programs.

Research at the institute has included college students as a group. College students today have a higher alcoholism rate than their peers in the working force. The ages of heaviest drinking are most likely to be in the early twenties.

Noble viewed the college campus as a "controlled environment." While acknowledging that the job of prevention "is a tough one," he said, " you can do many things in the four years that a student is here. It's important to get to students whose future may depend on how they use alcohol."
alcohol."

Noble said his feelings toward the concept of "campus pubs" is generally favorable. He said "college must be a model community, we can't bury our heads in the sand and hope the problem will disappear. I don't see the pub as encouraging drinking, if it's not available here, students will go elsewhere." Noble added the real problem was "how we use that pub." He evaluated the program here as very good.

Central council opposes constitutional change

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

The Central Area Council last night unanimously opposed the proposed amendments to the Student Government Association Constitution that would eliminate the student senate and area governments and change the presidential election procedure.

The amendments would establish an undergraduate student assembly. Instead of a popular election, the assembly would elect the student government president.

"The plan aims to de-centralize the government, yet it actually makes the government less accessible to students," council member Rich Fryer said.

Council Co-President Cynthia Thomas said, "Council sentiment is split over the student government convention taking the presidential decision back to a popular election."

Council Co-President Arthur Thomas is the only member of the Council that has thus far received a subpoena to attend tonight's convention.

Vice-President Paul Washburn said, "I feel it is a responsibility of the representative to attend the convention. Each representative should be required to attend because they were elected or appointed to the position and are obligated."

In other business, Nkrumah Olinga, New World Center member, announced the center will sponsor a lecture and demonstration of accupuncture and accupressure, featuring John Wilson. Wilson is from the U.S. and China Friendship Association and tours nationally. the date and location have yet to be announced.

Grad senate funds buses if wheelchair lifts installed

By BOB STEIN
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate last night passed a motion funding the Transit System provided that the Transit System make substantive efforts to add front door hydraulic wheel chair lifts to a substantial portion of the new buses ordered for next fall.

The forthcoming buses have been equipped with rear door lifts in compliance with section 504 of the National Rehabilitation Act of 1972.

"The rear door lift is a very poor solution, if operated from the driver's seat it is unsafe, if operated from the back of the bus it creates an inefficiency in the system," said Bill Barrett director of transportation and parking at UMass.

If the buses were not equipped with wheel chair lifts they would be in violation of the law and the senate could be held liable.

"A suit can be brought against us for funding a bus service that is illegal," said Senate Treasurer Ken Ross.

Representatives from the various student organizations requesting funds from the senate attended the meeting to explain their funding requests for fiscal year 1979.

Before discussion was begun on funding the Collegian Ken Ross warned the senate that funding could not be decreased because of editorial policy.

"It would be illegal to decrease funding for editorial policy, if anyone starts to criticize the Collegian on those grounds I will cut him or her off immediately," said Ross.

Funding of the Collegian was cut from $6000 to $3500.

"I think we should chop them all we can," said a senator who wished to have her name with-held.

The senate cut funding to Off-Campus Housing office from a requested $4500 to $2500.

The Legal Services Office was granted its requested $25,556.

Cultural focus marks Latin American Week

The Latin American community at UMass will celebrate Latin American Week today through Friday highlighted by a free concert, a discussion of Latin American literature and the Panama Canal, and a Friday night dance.

"We are hoping to make Latin Americans, especially those born and raised in this country, more aware of their culture," said the president of Ahora, Jaime Pons. Ahora is the Latin American organization sponsoring the week.

Pons said a goal of Latin American week is to "get American students to know Spanish culture also." Pons said he hopes the week develops better communication between Latin Americans and students of other cultures. He said that non-Latin Americans are urged to attend this week's activities.

Ahora has had difficulties in advertising the week but Pons said he expects fairly good attendance despite the lack of advertisement.

Miguel Rivera, who helped organize this week's activities, said the emphasis this year will be placed on Latin countries other than Puerto Rico, which according to Rivera, has been the focus of previous Latin American weeks.

Today there will be a conference on contemporary Latin American literature featuring Manual Puig, an Argentinian novelist who is a visiting professor at Columbia University. Puig will be in Thompson Hall 106 at 8 p.m.

Tomorrow a Puerto Rican group Haciendo Punto En Otro Son will perform in a free concert in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m. Rivera said this group is the best Latin American music group available and he hopes all students will take advantage of the free concert.

On Thursday a panel discussion will be held on the Panama canal and treaty. Three leading authorities will speak on the issue in Thompson 104 at 8 p.m. And on Friday there will be a dance featuring the Orquesta Pa'Lante from New York. The dance will be held at the Quonset Restaurant in Hadley at 8 p.m. and admission is free.

Jet survivors return; 'Soviet act unforgiveable'

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Sipping champagne and sobbing, survivors from a South Korean jetliner downed in the Soviet Union finally reached their destinations Monday, but anger and mystery lingered over the incident in the nighttime skies above the Russian Arctic.

"How could they shoot our innocent and unguarded son? I cannot sleep when I think about his last moment in the plane," said the mother of Yoshitaka Sugano, 31, one of two passengers killed when a Russian interceptor jet blasted a hole in the side of the Boeing 707 after it strayed into Soviet airspace Thursday.

Ritsuko Sugano spoke with reporters at the Tokyo airport, where a relief plane carrying surviving passengers and crew, mostly Japanese and Korean, stopped before its final leg to Seoul.

"The Soviet attack was an irresponsible act ... it was unforgiveable," said the dead man's father Takahiro Sugano.

When it landed here, the Korean Air Lines relief jet unloaded a casket holding the body of the other victim — Korean engineer Bang Tae-hwan. Ten other persons were wounded.

The Soviets on Saturday released the 95 surviving passengers and 11 of 13 crew members from the ill-fated Korean Air Lines 707, which was forced to make an emergency landing on a frozen lake in Russia's northwest corner.

But the pilot and navigator still remained in Soviet hands Monday, and diplomatic sources in Moscow said U.S. officials asked the Soviet Foreign Ministry for information on their whereabouts. South Korea does not have diplomatic relations with Moscow.

On Sunday's flight to the Far East, the passengers and crew members uncorked bottle after bottle of champagne to celebrate their safe return, a Korean reporter aboard the relief plane wrote.

"Nationalties didn't matter. They mingled together and congratulated one another," he said.

MBM payoff suspect testifies today

BOSTON (AP) — William Masiello, the alleged conduit for payments from McKee-Berger-Mansueto to a number of state politicians, will testify behind closed doors today before the legislative committee probing that scandal.

Masiello, head of a Worcester architectural firm, will testify in private at his own request before the Post Audit and Oversight subcommittee.

Off limits at the request of the attorney general's office will be any testimony about a $10,000 payment allegedly carried by Masiello in 1972 to Albert "Toots" Manzi, then chief fundraiser for Gov. Francis W. Sargent. That payment is now the subject of a grand jury proceeding.

Masiello could, however, be asked about a $2,000 check MBM officials say he was to deliver to Senate President Kevin B. Harrington and another $1,000 that was to be given to Sen. James A. Kelly Jr., D-Oxford.

But the hearing could be a brief one if Masiello invokes his right against self incrimination. The committee could grant Masiello immunity and require his testimony.

"We have made no decision to give anyone immunity yet," said Sen. Robert A. Hall, R-Fitchburg. "I suspect that decision would have to be made by the full committee, and it certainly won't be made lightly."

"It's rather like walking on a land mine," said Sen. Francis X. McCann, D-Cambridge, chairman of the full Post Audit committee. "Everyone is treading very carefully."

Kelly, whose lawyer has been negotiating for several weeks over the terms of the senator's appearance, has apparently dropped his demand that all questions be submitted in advance.

House bill attacks telephone info charge

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts legislature took a first step Monday toward blocking a plan by New England Telephone Co. to charge customers for frequent information calls.

The House of Representatives, without any debate, gave initial approval to a bill that would prohibit the state Public Utilities Commission from approving any charges for directory assistance calls. Later, the House voted 206-10 to condemn New England Telephone for its proposal.

The company told stockholders last week it intended to seek the DPU's permission in December for an information toll similar to charges allowed in 21 other states.

Under New England's plan, which would not take effect until the end of 1979, a customer would be allowed three free directory assistance calls per month, but would be charged 20 cents each for any additional calls.

The charge would not apply to calls to information operators in other states, nor would it be levied on telephones in hotels and restaurants.

The House bill, filed by Rep. Robert Ambler, D-Weymouth, requires another round of approval by the lower chamber before going to the Senate.

Rep. Francis C. Doris, D-Revere, offered the resolution condemning New England Telephone, saying he was particularly disturbed by the phone company's timing. He said the utility was waiting until the legislature was out of session before going to the DPU with its plan.

"Let us tell them loud and clear we dont want it, our people don't want it and we won't accept it," Doris said.

Rep. Richard L. Walsh, DBoston, warned the charge would be a hardship on blind people. However, Peter Cronin, a spokesman for New England Telephone, said the firm did not intend to impose the charge on handicapped customers.

Boston school bus strike ends

BOSTON [UPI] - Boston's public schools returned to normal yesterday, two weeks after being thrown for a loop by a city-wide school bus drivers' strike and racial disturbances at Hyde Park High School.

Drivers for the Hudson and Brush Hill Companies returned to work yesterday and School Department spokesman Fred Foy said there were "maybe one or two buses late. But that's nothing to be alarmed about."

Doors also opened at Hyde Park High School, scene of racial incidents April 11-12. Security at the school was beefed up, but Foy said there were no disturbances. Seven persons, including two teachers, were injured in the fighting two weeks ago.

"As matter of fact, the whole city has been quiet," he said. "There has been no calls on our hotline, and the buses ran pretty smoothly."

The drivers' strike, which began April 10, affected 25,000 of the city's 65,000 students. Superintendent Marion Fahey tried to arrange contingency plans, utilizing public transportaiton.

Although middle and high school students had no trouble getting to school, attendence at elementary schools was low during the first week. Last week the students were on vacation.

Suffolk Superior Court Judge John T. Ronan had jailed them for violating this order prohibiting a walkout.

Union lawyer Barry Wilson had charged the bus companies were violating the injunction by refusing to bargain in good faith.

Dolphin mistaken for whale

WATERTERTOWN, Mass. - If it's any consolation to Watertown officials, the carcass found on the grounds of the high school was not a baby killer whale.

The New England Acquarium Monday said the mammal was a small, Atlantic white sided dolphin.

Whatever it was, it didn't belong there.

The mammal was found on the lawn in front of the high school Sunday. City officials examined it, and thought it was a very young killer whale. But acquarium director John Prescott set the record straight and let it be known that he didn't appreciate the fact the carcass wound up in Watertown, and not in the hands of proper authorities.

"My impression is that someone found the carcass on a beach, and took it up to the high school thinking it would be a great joke."

But Prescott wasn't laughing.

"There's a law against that." he said, citing the Marine Mammal Protection Act administered by the National Marine Fisheries Service.

"If someone finds anything like that, they really should contact either the acquarium, or another agency, or the proper federal authorities."

Prescott said it's not unusual for this particular species of dolphin to be found in New England beaches. He said in the last five years, the acquarium has examined about 300 specimens.

"When we do find them, when they wash ashore dead or disabled, we've normally found they're sick aniamals," he said. Their diseases range from parasites, heart disease, or even liver ailments.

"It's not an unusual occurance, other than for it to appear at a high school," Prescott said. "Normally people call the acquarium and we try to recover the animals and pursue our own investigations."

Court hears sex ring case

BOSTON [UPI] — Allan Gray, 52, arrested last December along with 18 others in an alleged child sex ring, pleaded guilty to charges yesterday in Suffolk Superior Court and immediately was given a 1-25 year jail sentence.

Gray, formerly of Boston and living in Miami at the time of his arrest, pleaded guilty on one count of rape of a child under 16, and two counts of indecent assault and battery of a child under 14.

The 19 people arrested were charged with having unlawful sex relations with boys under 16. Judge James P. Lynch, Jr., immediately imposed sentence.

First Assistant District Attorney John P. Gaffney told Lynch that Gray had been paroled in 1972 after having served nearly 17 years of a prison sentence for sexual offenses involving children.

Lowell fire clean-up underway

LOWELL, Mass. [UPI] - Fire officials yesterday investigated and cleaned up debris from a seven-alarm fire which destroyed a factory complex and caused at least $1 million in damage.

The blaze at the former American Hide and Leather Tannery factory complex on Perry Street started at 2:30 p.m. Sunday.

Black, billowing smoke could be seen as far south as Boston, 30 miles away.

Firefighters from surrounding communities joined forces in a six-hour battle to quell the blaze. Four fireman were injured.

Forty families in nearby homes were evacuated as a result of the blaze. Firefighters were showered with bricks when the walls of the factories collapsed. Four were injuried and taken to area hospitals.

Officials said the blaze began in the factory complex and threatened nearby homes. Two houses burst into flames and police ordered all other homes in the area evacuated.

The factory complex was once used as a mill, then converted into a tannery. More recently, it was used as a woodworking plant and a storehouse.

Injured firefighters were Russell Adams, John laley and L. Francis Hogan, all of the Lowell Fire Department, and Robert Campbell of Pelham.

Donnelly to run for U.S. Rep. seat

BOSTON (AP) — Charging that Washington has systematically discriminated against the New England states, State Rep. Brian Donnelly yesterday jumped into the 11th district congressinal race for the seat now held by U.S. Rep. James Burke.

Donnelly told a news conference, "One of the great frustrations of my six years in the (state) legislature has been the growing realization that Washington holds nearly all the cards.

"And as long as Washington refuses to give New England a fair deal on energy costs, on federal contracts and on the distribution of federal funds, there is only so much we can do here at home," he added.

The Boston Democrat predicted the economy will be the chief issue in the race, with the 11th district receiving only $1 in federal aid for every $6 of taxes paid out.

Burke, who has been wheelchair bound since a recent leg amputation, announced his retirement last month after more than 18 years in Congress.

Officials deplore farm development

BOSTON (AP) — State agriculture officials are trying to persuade wealthier towns to invest in saving farm acreage from development.

Under a farmland preservation law that took effect last year, local conservation commissions are empowered to negotiate deals with farmers to keep land in active farm use. The farmer is paid compensation for the extra money he could have made by selling the land to a developer, and in return, agrees either to keep farming the land himself or else sell it only to another farmer.

The law in its present form calls for the development rights to be held by the state Food and Agriculture Department. If a farmer changed his mind and decided to sell his property for construction, he would have to buy back the development rights from the state.

However, a bill recommended by the agriculture department would allow a community to hold joint title with the state to the development rights. The measure cleared the House last week without any debate and now is before the Senate.

"We want to let a town have a stake in the rights since we expect it to do the legwork" on the transactions, explained Warren K. Colby, projects coordinator of the department's Land Use Division.

Colby said town officials would be responsible not only for helping set up developmentrights deals but also for checking on whether the agreements are being honored.

"It's impossible for the state to patrol everywhere," Colby said. "Anyway, a town is going to be the first to know whether a farmer is having something being built on his land."

Colby is hoping the change in the law will encourage richer suburban towns to put up some of their own money to buy development rights.

The state has set aside $5 million of its own money for the program, but Colby said the state preferred to use most of its funds in the "hinterlands" — central and western areas of the state where property values are lower and relatively modest sums can protect larger areas.

Hatch says 'Duke ignores W. Mass.'

BOSTON [UPI] — House Minority Leader Francis W. Hatch, a Republican candidiate for governor, says a permanent governor's office should be opened in western Massachusetts.

The Beverly Republican said yesterday that, as governor, he would spend, "a considerable amount" of time working in an office he would open in the Springfield-Holyoke and Northampton area.

"The Dukakis administration has systematically ignored the West," Hatch said. "He has acted as though the state line was Route 49."

Hanna sentenced in Korean scandal

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Sipping champagne and sobbing, survivors from a South Korean jetliner downed in the Soviet Union finally reached their destinations yesterday, but anger and mystery lingered over the incident in the nighttime skies above the Russian Arctic.

Italy ignores Moro's plea

ROME [UPI] — The Italian government flatly rejected the Red Brigades' latest demands for the release of 13 jailed leftists last night just hours after a handwritten letter believed to be from kidnapped ex-Premier Aldo Moro warned, "We are at the moment of slaughter."

The letter, found on a Rome street addressed to Benigno Zaccagnini, secretary of the ruling Christian Democratic party that Moro heads, pleaded: "We are almost at zero hour. We are at seconds rather than minutes from it.

"We are at the moment of slaughter."

Following a meeting between Premier Giulio Andreotti and his security council at Chigi Palace, the government issued a statement that said:

"A government examination of latest events leads to the conclusion that so far the kidnappers have given indications that show no prospects of any real intention to restore Aldo Moro to freedom.

"Requests to exchange prisoners were and are unacceptable because they are directed against the freedom of everyone."

The letter purportedly written by Moro was found under a window shutter by the Rome evening newspaper Vita Sera after an anonymous telephone call. Vita Sera officials said the seven-page, handwritten signed letter was an original, not a photocopy, and appeared genuine.

Life lives again; same format

NEW YORK [UPI] — Time Inc. announced yesterday that it will begin republishing Life magazine on a monthly basis in October.

Time Inc. officials said the new Life, like the old one, will be devoted primarily to photo-journalism, with "a few articles and columns." It will sell on newsstands for $1.50 a copy, with annual subscriptions costing $18.

Hedley Donovan, editor-in-chief of Time Inc., said Life's domestic advertising circulation base is expected to be 700,000 a month.

The familiar red-and-white logo on the cover will be enlarged, but otherwise be identical to that which graced the front of 1,864 weekly issues from 1936 through 1972, when it ceased publication. The large 13½-by-10½ page format will be retained.

Officials said the decision to republish the magazine was partially based on the sales success of the five Life special annual reports between 1973 and 1977, which they said were published with "relatively little promotion."

"We are confident there is an important audience and market for a new monthly Life rededicated to the best in photojournalism," Donovan said.

At its peak, Life had a circulation 8.5 million a week.

Editorial personnel will be announced soon, officials said.

Security tantamount in Begin's negotiations

[UPI] — Egypt said yesterday Israel must soften its negotiating stance before peace talks can resume but Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin vowed to reject any concessions that would endanger the Jewish state's security.

In the final phase of talks with Alfred Atherton, chief U.S. negotiator for the Middle East, Egyptian Foreign Minister Mohammed Kamel insisted that Israel make concessions on the questions of Palestinian rights and Israeli withdrawals from occupied Arab territories before direct negotiations resume.

Atherton, who met with President Anwar Sadat Sunday, described his talks with Egyptian officials as "very serious and very detailed discussions. They have certainly helped my government have a deeper and clearer understanding of the position of the Egyptian government as we look for ways, new moves in the peace process."

Kamel also gave Atherton a letter from Sadat to Carter. It was the second letter from the Egyptian leader to Carter in seven days.

The U.S. envoy will fly back to Washington early today in time for Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan's visit to the United States as well as a later visit by Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

Egyptian leaders said they were not closing the door to a negotiated settlement but stressed that any agreement must meet Arab demands for total withdrawal of Israeli troops from the West Bank of the Jordan and the Gaza Strip and self-determination for the 1.2 million Palestinians who reside there.

Begin visited the West Bank yesterday and in a speech to a crowd of about 3,000 at the village of Kiryat Arba vowed to make no concessions in his talks with President Carter that would endanger the security of Israel.

Court rules 'Son of Sam' fit for trial

NEW YORK (UPI) — Son of Sam suspect David Berkowitz was ruled mentally fit to stand trial next month, for the murder of Stacy Moskowitz, the last of six victims in the .44-caliber killings that terrorized this city for a year.

State Supreme Court Justice Joseph Corso, who made the ruling following several days of hearings, set May 8 for the beginning of the trial in Brooklyn.

Following the decision, defense attorneys Ira Jultak and Leon Stern siad they would plead Berkowitz innocent by reason of insanity. Berkowitz, in early court hearings, had said he wanted to plead guilty.

Stern and Jultak said that once they have exhausted their preemptory challenges during jury selection, they would file a motion asking that the trial be moved from Brooklyn. A previous motion for a change of venue was denied by a state appeals court.

"It would be most difficult...impossible to get a fair trial in Brooklyn" becuase of pre-trial pubicity," said Jultak, who added that he did not believe an impartial jury could be found anywhere in the country.

Berkowtiz, a 24-year-old former postal worker, is accused of killing six young people and wounding seven others in a series of nighttime ambushes with a .44-caliber "Bulldog" revolver.

NBC must face child assault suit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court refused yesterday to decide whether broadcasters are legally responsible when fictional violence is imitated in real life, clearing the way for a trial that could be crucial to the future of television.

The issue someday may return to the high court, but yesterday's action opened the way for an unprecedented trial in San Francisco.

In the trial, NBC and television station KRON-TV must defend themselves against a lawsuit seeking $11 million for a 9-year-old girl sexually assaulted four days after a network movie dramatically portrayed a similar crime.

Lawyers for the girl charge that NBC and the San Francisco station were "negligent" and "reckless" in allowing the movie to be broadcast in the early evening when young persons were sure to be in the viewing audience.

On Sept. 10, 1974, NBC televised a fictional drama, "Born Innocent," depicting the life of an unwanted child, a teen-aged girl. In one scene, the girl is attacked by other females at a reformatory school and is sexually assaulted with a wooden handle.

Four days later, a 9-year-old San Francisco girl was attacked by four older girls on a local beach and "raped" with a beer or soft drink bottle.

A state trial judge dismissed the ensuing civil suit against NBC and KRON but a state appeals court ordered that a jury trial be held on charges raised by the girl's lawyers.

After the California Supreme Court refused to review the case, NBC and KRON came to the nation's highest court — arguing that the trial would set a dangerous precedent.

The court's vote yesterday to deny the appeal was 8-1. Justice William J. Brennan Jr. wanted to hear arguments in the case.

Job suits face court challenge

PACIFIC NEWS SERVICE — A drive by women against job discrimination in the insurance industry is facing court challenges in California that could have nationwide repercussions. Twenty-six insurance companies have filed suit against the state's fair employment agency seeking to stop a planned investigation into alleged discrimination in the industry.

In two complaints filed in state and federal courts, the firms charge that the California Fair Employment Practices Commission (FEPC) violated the companies' right to an unbiased and impartial hearing by collaborating with a women's rights group in gathering data in unemployment practices.

Women Organized for Employment, works to promote fair employment practices in behalf of women and minorities; the firms charge WOE colluded with the FEPC "to bring about positive changes in the insurance industry's employment practices."

Among the 26 plaintiffs are Prudential, Hartford, Metropolitan and Allstate. The outcome of the suit could influence relationships with other activist groups nationwide.

The issue raised in California is echoed in Washington, D.C., where Sears, Roebuck and Co., faced with a job discrimination suit by the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, has asked that charges be dismissed because a commission staff member has been a board member of the National Organization for Women Legal Defense and Education Fund Inc.

Sears claims that NOW, which is legally separate from the defense fund, improperly influenced the commission's decision to file the job discrimination charges.

The California confrontation grows from a complaint lodged by WOE with the FEPC in 1976, charging that insurance companies and brokerage firms practiced illegal race, sex and age discrimination in hiring, salaries and promotions.

Women Fight Back

Nationwide, of 1.3 million employees in 1970, the latest for which extensive data has been collected, more than half were men, earning a median income of $11,774. The median income for women was $4,431.

The growing insurance industry employs about 150,000 workers in California. Over half are women performing repetitive clerical tasks in vast, impersonal offices.

In 1974, as the first national meeting of women's groups organized to promote fair employment, the giant Marsh McLennan brokerage firm was chosen as target. Employees staged protests and filed a lawsuit. Ultimately they won job posting — an open system for promotion instead of the former closed system — and equal pay for equal work. The company had to give cash settlements to women who had done work equivalent to men's work but at a lesser rate of pay.

In several cities, local groups challenged local firms. Women Employed in Chicago and Nine to Five in Boston won similar concessions from some companies.

In California, WOE won a $12,300 contract with the state Division of Industrial Relations to aid the FEPC with planning a preliminary survey of the industry. The contract was funded by a grant from the Max and Anne Levison Foundation to the Division of Industrial Relations.

WOE helped the FEPC collect statistics and information from governmental and private sources.

A resulting preliminary survey showed that women earned 46 percent of the amount men earned) that minorities and women were concentrated in blue-collar, service and clerical jobs, and that 75 percent of the industry's managers, officials and sales personnel were white males.

FEPC Investigates

The FEPC found that the survey pointed to a "pattern and practice" of discrimination and decided to conduct a full-scale investigation.

In January 1978, the commission notified about 250 companies and 50 brokerage firms that they would soon receive official questionnaires.

In February, 15 firms went to state court and 11 to federal court, both in Los Angeles, to stop the investigation. The two suits charge that the FEPC leaked confidential information to WOE, and they attack the relationship between the two groups.

WOE and the commission maintain that no confidential information was exchanged and defend their associaton as legal.

Prisoner release starts global spy exchange

NEW YORK (UPI) The freeing of an Israeli from a Mozambique jail Sunday is the first link in a complex spy swap that could free a jailed Soviet dissident and get President Carter out of a messy diplomatic tangle.

Miron Marcus, a 24-year-old Isreali civilian pilot, was flying his Cessna from Rhodesia to South Africa 18 months ago when he made a forced landing in Mozambique. He has been held since without charge.

Marcus walked across the border into Swaziland Sunday, setting in motion an exchange of political antagonists which has been at least four months in the making and involved six countries on three continents.

The plan for a swap was initially reported by United Press International on Feb. 26.

The second step in the cloak-and-dagger dealings is expected to be the release next week by East Germany of Minnesota college student Alan Van Norman, imprisoned since last year for attempting to help an East Berlin family escape to the West. At the same time the United States is expected to hand over convicted Soviet spy Robert Thompson, held in the Lewisburg, Pa., federal penitentiary.

The denouement in the drama would involve at least 12 Chilean Communists in exchange for Soviet dissident Anatoly Shcharansky, 30, who has been detained in Lefortovo prison near Moscow for 15 months. The Soviet press has branded him a traitor.

The controlled press said mathematician Shcharansky — who wrote his thesis on chess and the computer — would be punished "to the full extent of the law." For treason, that sentence could be death.

Two months after Shcharansky's arrest, President Carter, then getting his human rights campaign off the ground, said the dissident "has never had any sort of relationship to our knowledge with the CIA"

Carter said at a June 1977 news conference he had been hesitant to make that public announcement denying links by Shcharansky with the CIA but "now I am completely convinced" the Soviet allegations were false.

But in March 1978, American sources, obviously concerned about Carter's remarks in what could be a treason case, leaked a story to Time Magazine that a Russian - who later roomed with Shcharansky - had offered his services to the CIA and was used by the organization nine months.

The CIA "walk-in" was identified as Dr. Sanya P. Lipavsky, who denounced Shcharansky and a host of other dissidents in his other role - as a KGB agent provocateur.

Lipavsky, who last year "sorrowfully confessed" his CIA role in an article in the government newspaper Izvestia, could with official prodding tell a story in a dramatic show trial contradicting the president of the United States.

Presidents do not like to be so embarrassed and thus the Shcharansky case could become a "pawn" in detente, meaning a swap.

Supreme Court rejects Patty Hearst's appeal

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — The U.S. Supreme Court's action yesterday in refusing to hear Patricia Hearst's appeal of her bank robbery conviction could mean an end to the near-normal life she has led since she was freed on bail 17 months ago.

But her attorneys indicate they aren't finished yet with their efforts to keep her out of jail.

Miss Hearst, 24, was freed on $1 million bail several weeks after a federal jury found her guilty of taking part in a San Francisco bank robbery 10 weeks after she was kidnapped by the Symbionese Liberation Army in 1974.

She has been under constant guard by a private security company because of fears of threats on her life, but has freely travelled throughout the state, including Hearst family estates at San Simeon and near the Oregon border.

She has often been seen shopping in communities near her parent's home in the fashionable San Francisco suburb of Hillsborough, where she has spent much of her time.

Late last year, Miss Hearst was romantically linked to Bernard Shaw, 30, a San Francisco policeman who was working off-duty as her bodyguard. Her purse, with $400 inside, was stolen from Shaw's van while it was parked outside his home in the coastal community of Pacifica south of San Francisco.

Miss Hearst and her family declined any comment on yesterday's Supreme Court action, and reporters who went to the Hillsborough home were met by a closed gate and a guard.

In Boston, attorney Albert Johnson, who has been a key member of her defense team since shortly after her arrest in Septmeber 1975, said further legal steps include petitioning the Supreme Court to reconsider the case and asking the U.S. District Court in San Francisco for a reduction in her seven-year sentence.

Register to vote

Every year people concerned with the electoral process come on campus and try to get UMass students who are residents of Amherst to register to vote. In keeping with national trends concerning voter registration for the ages of 18-25, students on this campus do not register to vote in large numbers, and lose their opportunity to elect town, state and national candidates when the elections roll around.

The reasons for registering to vote are many. For example, Amherst does not have a rent control law on the books. In a town that is supported and populated by students most of the year it is unnecessary and self-defeating to allow landlords and house owners to decide what rates the rents will be when students can register to vote and vote in rent control. Likewise, students have a stake in such issues as zoning and re-routing of streets. Students won't have a voice though, unless they register and vote.

It is also good to consider that the elections for Governor are coming up soon, along with various other state offices that affect the quality of our educations here at UMass.

One of the candidates for Governor, Frank Hatch, speaking today in the SUB, would do his best to turn UMass into a high priced vocational school. Our present governor is really no different when it comes to cutting back on higher education. It is in all of our interests to register and vote for those who show some support for UMass and all state schools.

The dangers of not voting are obvious. Not voting allows people in the state house and the capitol to disregard our needs and wants because they know that 18-25 year olds don't participate to a large degree in the electoral process. Thus the State House and the White House are peopled with politicians who represent those who have no desire to support such things as legalizing marijuana or upholding the quality of higher education in this state.

Voter registration will be taking place today and tomorrow on the Campus center concourse, and we urge everyone to take the few minutes needed to register to vote.

Loses appetite at 'Hungry U'

To the Editor:

On Friday, April 21, my friends and I went out for an after the party bite at the Hungry U on University Drive. After waiting at least forty minutes for our order we were finally served. One friend specifically ordered a plain pepper steak sandwich that was delivered with mushrooms and onions. I ordered a pocket salad sandwich with vinegar and oil dressing and received a pocket spinach sandwich with Russian dressing. Being a busy Friday night, we could somewhat understand the mixup in the order. Anyway, my friend could pick the mushrooms and onions out of her sandwich and I like spinach, so it was not worth complaining about. [Besides, we didn't feel like waiting another half hour for a new order.]

Halfway through my sandwich, I discovered something that resembled a mushroom. I pulled it out only to find that it was, in fact, not a mushroom, but a cigarette butt. Our appetites left us very quickly. In fact, nausea is a more accurate description of what we were feeling at the time. I went up to our waitress to show her my discovery. She was very apologetic and asked me if I would like another sandwich. In the state I was in, I declined the offer and she informed me that we wouldn't have to pay for our meal.

I want to make it clear that neither the wrong orders or the cigarette butt were the fault of the waitress. I've been to the Hungry U several times and have been waited on by several women, who, for the most part, have provided excellent service. However, I have received the wrong order at least two times prior to Friday night and one time previously I found a hair in my pizza.

I am writing this letter on behalf on my

I am writing this letter on behalf of my Hungry and its patrons aware of this problem and in hopes that the Hungry U will improve their kitchen services and upgrade their sanitary standards. Until then we, the undersigned, and our friends will no longer eat at the Hungry U.

Learning from Afro-Am Festival

To the Editors:

As white students, we are anxiously awaiting the Duke Ellington Spring Music Festival. We enthusiasticly endorse the SGA's decision to support this concert. Frankly, we are sick of the monopoly capitalist "youth culture", especially its mass produced commercial music.

Why isn't Afro-American music more widely available in the country of its origin and development? Afro-American music is very popular throughout the earth, particularly in Europe, Africa, and Japan. The monopoly structure of the music and record industry is responsible. This is because the only reason for the existence of this industry is to make money, not to make music. This branch of the mass culture industry debases the cultural level of all working people throught its suppression of Afro-American music.

We need revolutionary music, i.e., music that helps develop creative awareness through its improvisational character. This is of great importance in a culture of mechanical reproduction of all art forms that denies working people the means to produce their own culture. We need a people's culture of resistance to oppose the mass culture industry.

Afro-Ameircan music is a music of liberation. Having its roots in Africa, developed under the lash of slavery and transformed through the Afro-American urban experience, this music speaks to the emotions and aspirations of people all over the world. Coltrane, Mingus, Tyner, Shepp, Roach and most of all, Duke Ellington [just to name a few] were and are cultural freedom fighters.

The racist attacks on the Duke Ellington concert must be condemned and struggle against. White students are not ignorant of Afro-American music just because they are white. This art form has never received mass distribution due to the structure and social relations of the music industry. The Duke Ellington Spring Music Festival is a great chance to expand our appreciation of this revolutionary art form.

We encourage all students, but especially white students, to volunteer to help with the Festival and to attend the concert to enjoy it and to learn from it.

The Duke lives! Bird lives! Trane lives! Afro-American music lives!

To the Editor:

We were pleased that the Learning Tomorrows Conference was going to be held here in our community. We were impressed by the brilliance of the stars; philosophers, commentators and critics of education who were scheduled to speak. We were excited as we looked through the program designing an educational smorgasbord for the entire family, student, spouse and two elementary age children.

We were appalled when we found that this educational experience was available free to the student only, and that the other family members would have to pay five dollars per day per person to attend, a total of $60.00! We were turned away! We were turned off!

'Diatribe typical'

To the Editor:

Sally Rees' pro-terrorist, anti-Israel diatribe is typical of the anti-Jewish propaganda which emanates from international Socialist circles. Despite her article's length, it really has little to do with the policies of Begin's government or that of his predecessors. Her main point is to be found in the last sentence which parrots the PLO line calling for the destruction of the state of Israel.

In their eyes only Palestinian Arabs and not Palestinian Jews have a right to their own state. What gives this "Socialist Alliance" to pontificate on the non-rights of three million Israeli Jews is anybody's guess. Perhaps it has something to do with the fact that they enjoy, supporting individuals and movements with pro-Nazi pasts like Sadat and the PLO and denounce those like Begin who actually fought the Nazis. This is what international Socialists have come to: they feel like Communists but they act like Nazis.

Headline protested

To the Editor:

We strongly object to the inflammatory use of the word "lesbian" in your headlines "Lesbian Rapists Get Life" in the April 19 edition of the Collegian. The issue here is the brutality of the acts committed, not the imputed sexual orientation of the women involved. Otherwise we should expect to see the words "heterosexual" and "rapist" automatically linked in headlines whenever cases of rapes and sexual attacks by men against women are made public.

Bugged by the SGA system

frank denton

In the great wisdom of our forebears,' we were given the gift of eternal strife. The happy state to which I allude may be called variously avarice, politics, or the last bastion of bastardized ethics. The very thought of it gives us a tingle.

Recently I had the misfortune to become entangled in the ways of the Student Senate, though this is not to say that I succumbed to their methods or their ideologies. Certain peculiar entomological traits brought themselves rather rapidly to my wandering attentions.

For instance, behold the faction. The faction is usually led by what might be termed a queen bee, often a mimic of Toynbee. The purpose of the faction is not always clear, many hypothesizing that it is created for the reproduction of the species. The faction is very rarely for anything (unless it be a queen bee), appearing most frequently under the term of opposition party. The species is more appropriately termed specious. At the University level, the species is very vague and indistinct, much like the democrats and republicans they so assiduously emulate.

Entomologists — those who study insects — are very careful to distinguish between the activities of the little bugs and those of the bigger buggers who study them. Perhaps these learned entities have never attended the political caucuses (tingle tingle) of our student body. At such an event one can witness the morphology of all types of parasites, worms, and preying mantisses.

Where else can one thrill to the buzz of excited hordes? At what other institutions can one participate in a society run entirely on adrenaline and nicotine (and sometimes ethanol or less frequent biodynamic substances). And issues: such large crumbs to drag around from pothole to pigeonhole.

Politics has appeal for the botanist, as well. Students might be classified as annuals. Every year, more appear to spurn the solutions of another, less wise age. Every year (for you zoologists) they get hung up over the same issues and go running off the deep end, like the lemmings. Unfortunately, students aren't lemmings. Students are invertebrates for the most part, having all the back bone of peer pressure, a backbone which becomes vestigial when they leave the receptive atmosphere of the University.

In this rush to possess views which are ideological defensible to their peers, many students discard all prior rational thought — especially if it is parental — and assume the entire liberal catalogue of dissent. They complain about the entire complacent populus permitting themselves to be oppressed, yoked, used. Meanwhile, they, themselves, have acceded to the demands of their political gurus.

Our burgeoning leaders are more than insects, vegetables, and lemmings, however. We must concede to them their egos. Without the mighty egos, students could not feel personally offended by a deodorant commercial. Without the ego, other students could not feel offended by the lack of such an influence on the other individuals person. Without the ego, campus politics could not maintain a stink on campus for months on end (such as SGA president).

My, but we are in a fine fettle. We have learned about elastic latitudes and plastic platitudes from our protests on the international scene. Domestically, we have learned to keep the wolf from the door by bearing our fangs and raising our hackles in true lupine fashion. Personally, we have learned how to offend and belittle every oppressive or (God forbid) conservative argument.

Unfortunately, most cannot tolerate themselves when alone. We run in packs because we run scared. We are scared of what we might find lurking within if we only stopped to reason for ourselves.

Frank Denton is a Collegian columnist.

Rape without tears

By ELIZABETH DWORAN

To whom am I speaking?

You who laughed in last Thursday's Psych 101 film, during the scene where the guy throws his wife down on the bed, with a joke about "keeping 'em down where they belong?"

Or you who make policy, with the comfortable call-words; racism, sexism, humanistic oppression, Marxist analysis, re-definition of stereotypes. Yes, you, who define, and define again the "criteria for prioritizing of the 'issue'."

Or to you who have, in fact forced her down on slated asphalt, broken brick and glass, in dim hallways, in conference rooms, on long tables heavy with polemic and computer printout, on your beds.

To you who have, in fact, raped her?

Yes, I suppose I speak to you who have raped her; who at this very moment are beating her brains against the concrete of the Campus Center; who have just ascended from a long and fruitful meeting in which you have discussed the rampant problem of "Reverse Sexism." What a masterful victory; you have once again "prioritized," indeed! You'll have some money for extras, now; speaking of which, Aerosmith's cut a good disc, have you heard? "Lord of the Thigh's." It's a fine album, you must get a copy for the office. Beer on earth, good will to men.

Back to the issue — Rape. It's been getting some of us pretty heated. But hey, why all the confusion? It's simple enough to understand ... A "Normal Reaction," if you look at some of the clothes these chicks wear, if you look at some of the things they do — bunch of them occupied a building last week. Only gettin' what they deserve, is what I say.

Yes. I suppose I speak to you who have raped her; who at this very moment are beating her brains against the concrete of the Campus Center;

She's asking for it; she's looking for it; she's begging for it. She musta known it would happen, coming home from the library so late; coming to the board meeting like a damn fool ... (For 'It' is a vague, undefined thing, something that just happens, you know? Not your penis, knifing through flesh, not Word on Word in the conference room, mind slowly bent under will, making the Rule, upholding Policy. Not hands forcing her legs apart in cold night air. Not you, certainly.)

So, the act is done. No need for lying, guilt, the pricks of conscience. In your four walled rooms, carpeted apartments, offices, meeting rooms, there's nothing to deny: you surely won't be chastized! You couldn't help it, anyway. It was what was going down at the time, that's all. Momentary Insanity, necessary release.

Man is an aggressive animal, according to Lorenz.

Ah hell, you've been indicted. Ain't as stiff as it sounds, though. The knowing wink over at Defense (guy you've played squash with), the shave, the best suit; the obsequiousness, carefully mustered hesitation before the fatherly Judge. "Ah, your Honor, ah ... " Oh, the pregnant pause. Prosecution will fill in the words, easy as pie. And there's nothing, but nothing like an inarticulate chick at the other end of the room!

Bail's a bitch, but "Hey, Dad, uh ... got a little problem, here ... " and you're out. Thank the Almighty you'd never get Life like those ol' Lesbian Rapists you read about in the Collegian the other day — Christ, what perverts!

Yes, God forbid you should ever get life ...

Bakke protest

A week ago, Saturday, 15,000 angry people converged on Washington, D.C. to smash the Bakke decision. They arrived by the busload from Chicago, Talahassee, Boston, New York, and every place in between. The busloads turned into thousands rallying across the street from the Washington monument; the thousands in that park formed what seemed an endless procession through the streets of the nation's capital. The tremendous potential for people to unite and fight national oppression and all discrimination was there for everyone from the Supreme Court justices to Jimmy Carter to see.

Size was not the only factor giving power to the demonstration. These were not people begging their representatives for a favor, these were people demanding an end to national oppression. Speaker after speaker cut through the myth of reverse discrimination and spoke of the real discrimination that oppressed nationalities face daily. They spoke of the real quotas in our society, the quotas that keep unemployment highest among minorities, the quotas that keep average incomes of blacks at half of what it is for whites, the quotas that keep the doctor ratio of Chicanos at one out of 30,000 as opposed to the national average of one out of seven hundred for whites. The Wilmington 10 frame up was pointed to as the kind of justice minorities can expect at the hands of United States courts. They spoke for all 15,000 people when they said "we're not going to take it." The power of the demonstration was even greater because of the unity that was forged between Whites, Blacks, Asians, Chicanos, and other oppressed nationalities. This unity put the lie to the claim that minorities and white peoples interests are fundamentally opposed. In fact it showed clearly that just the opposite is true, that people of all nationalities can unite to fight against a common oppressor.

In organizing a demonstration of this size many forces came together united around fighting the Bakke decision. Within that basic unity, however, there were many different explanations as to the nature of this attack, who is responsible for it, and why. The Medical Committee for Human Rights, African Liberation Support Committee, and the Revolutionary Communist Youth Brigade joined together to form a contingent within the march that boldly targeted the system under the banner "Fight Imperialism the Source of All Oppression." The Bakke decision is not a matter of white racism, and burning Allan Bakke is effigy or even for real will not stop the attacks on oppressed nationalities. The only way to really combat the oppression of minorities is to expose the system which uses racist ideas to exploit and divide people in order to maintain its rule. Chanting such slogans as "reverse discrimination is what they claim" but the capitalist system is really to blame," the anti-imperialist contingent pointed the finger at who is really responsible for not just the Bakke case, but all national oppression.

One speaker at the closing rally said that the march represented the beginning of "new civil rights movement." While a movement certainly is growing, it will not take the passive form of the early civil rights movement. As the economic situation in this country worsens, the capitalists will become ever more desperate, and will attempt to push the effects of their economic crisis onto the people. They will be unable to make the kinds of concessions to people that the prosperity of the 60's allowed them to do in the past. In particular, they will be forced to crush even more the minority nationalities in order to extract super-profits from them, in a vain attempt to relieve their crisis of profits. This will give rise to a wave of fierce resistance by minority and working people which will strike at the very foundations of this system.

The media can make believe the April 15 demonstration never happened. After all since the Bakke case drew such a bad reaction when it went to the Supreme Court last fall, the media has pretended Bakke disappeared. The capitalists can try keeping their verdict on "reverse discrimination" safely locked behind closed doors for as long as they can. But thousands of students, youth and workers of all nationalities around the country are saying our stand against the Bakke Decision and all attacks on minorities is for real. We will not sit by quietly and wait for the Supreme Court to drop the ax on minorities with a favorable decision for Bakke. The Revolutionary Communist Youth Brigade calls on all students to continue the struggle and prepare to take action on a bad decision.

Dukakis vetoes anti-abortion bill

BOSTON [UPI]-- Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis Monday vetoed a bill that would prohibit state workers, lawmakers and their dependents from using the state's group health insurance policy to pay for abortions.

The anti-abortion provision was tacked onto a supplementary budget that was intended to provide the funds to increase the state's share of group health insurance premiums.

The bill must now be returned to the Legislature, where a two-thirds vote in each house is needed to override the veto. On earlier votes in the Senate, pro-abortion forces demonstrated they had enough votes to sustain the veto.

"The issue here is certainly not abortion," Dukakais said in his veto message. "The U.S. Supreme Court made it clear in 1973 that women have the constitutional right to choose an abortion. Regardless of any of our personal feelings on the subject, that is the law, and it is not going to change in the foreseeable future."

He later added, "The real issue raised by this bill is whether we are going to have two classes of citizens: one with the right to choose an abortion and another that is effectively denied that right."

State employees, like workers in private business are entitled to health insurance policies that pay for abortions, he said. He said they "should not be denied health insurance coverage that they now receive."

Dukakis criticized the inclusion of the anti-abortion amendment in the health insurance bill.

"The time to debate the issue of public funding of abortions is when a bill in that subject is before the Legislature and not when completely unrelated matters are being considered," he said.

The bill would have increased the state's share of employees' health insurance payments from 7 percent of the monthly premium to 80 percent retroactive to July 1, 1979 to 85 percent, retrocative to Jan. 1, 1978.

The increases were included in the employees' contract with the state that took effect last summer, but final legislative approval was needed to make the funds available.

Bill sponsor Rep. Raymond Flynn, D-Boston, criticized Dukakis for his veto, charging Dukakis had "violated the consciences of the vast majority of Massachusetts taxpayers and reneged on the collective bargaining agreement reached for state employees."

In the last year, Dukakis has vetoed two similar provisions that would have kept state funds from being used to pay for abortions by Medicaid clients, state employees or their dependents. In each case, the House voted to override, but the senate sustained his veto.

Low-key wedding set

[AP] — Princess Caroline of Monaco will have a quiet, family-only June wedding quite unlike the publicity-splashed entrance into royalty of her mother, Grace Kelly of Philadelphia.

A palace statement said Monday the 21-year-old brunette beauty will marry Philippe Junot, a 38-year-old French financial adviser, in two "strictly private" ceremonies June 28 and 29 at the royal palace — one civil and the other Roman Catholic in accordance with custom.

The low-key wedding preparations apparently reflect Princess Grace's and Prince Rainier III's widely reported displeasure with the match because of Junot's age and reputation as a playboy.

Because of "the private, family character of the ceremonies," no journalists or photographers will be admitted, the palace statement said. Photographs would be issued afterwards "as soon as possible."

The surprise engagement of Caroline and Junot was announced last Aug. 25 by the royal family in the French daily newspaper Nice-Matin.

Caroline, one of Europe's most attractive catches, met Junot through mutual friends in December 1975 while she was a philosophy student at the Sorbonne in Paris. She and her fiance are often seen together frequenting chic discotheques, bridle paths and ski slopes.

Attractive and suave, Junot counsels international banks with offices in Paris and Montreal. His father, a former deputy mayor of Paris, is president of the French branch of Westinghouse Electric.

From all appearances, Caroline's wedding will bear little resemblance to her mother's.

Then a 26-year-old American movie star, Grace Kelly entered into one of the oldest princely families of Europe on April 18, 1956, in a simple exchange of "ouis" televised by Radio Monte Carlo and Europe's major networks. The religious ceremony followed a day later.

The storybook union transforming Grace Kelly into a real-life princess captured the imagination of millions of American fans of the blonde Academy Award winner and a week-long wedding celebration drew thousands to this 370-acre Mediterranean principality.

Close contest in vote for gay rights

ST. PAUL, Minn. [UPI] — A Baptist-led moralist group trying to repeal the city's "gay rights" ordinance, a human rights group fighting to keep it and a large number of undecided voters will decide the law's fate Tuesday.

Mayor George Latimer, who favors keeping the law, said he thinks the vote in the city election will be "very close." He said the bigger the turnout the more likely the repeal will be defeated.

The weather forecast predicted mild, sunny to partly cloudy weather. The polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m.

The Rev. Richard A. Angwin, pastor of the Temple Baptist Church and a leader of the repeal movement's Citizens Alert for Morality, said there's "tremendous excitement and confidence on our side and we feel we have 70 percent of the people solid on our side."

It's the first major challenge of gay rights legislation since a "Save Our Children" group in Miami headed by Anita Bryant promoted repeal of the gay rights ordinance in Dade County, Fla., last June.

Repeal forces led by Baptist and Assembly of God ministers, contend the issue is morality. Backers of homosexual rights argue the issue is human rights.

A poll by the St. Paul Dispatch indicated 35 percent for repeal, 32 percent for keeping the law and 33 percent undecided.

"Three or four days ago I would have predicted the repeal would pass," the mayor said. "Now I have a feeling it will be very close and I have more hope that the repeal effort will be defeated. If you ask me why, I'm in trouble.

"We are not endorsing a way of life but the human rights of individuals."

Anita Bryant's husband, Robert Green, told a pro-repeal rally last week the law should be thrown out to help stop the "moral breakdown of the nation."

The four-year-old law at the center of the controversy is part of the city's human rights ordinance and bars discrimination in housing, employment and other fields because of "sexual and affectional preference."

The main opponent of repeal is St. Paul Citizens for Human Rights, which also includes some clergymen. The Roman Catholic Church, while not taking a specified stand on the proposal, has said it does not condone homosexuality but favors protecting homosexuals' "basic human rights."

Also at stake in the election are the position of mayor and seven city council seats. Latimer, a Democrat, is opposed for reelection only by a third-party candidate. Five of the incumbent council members voted for the "gay rights" law when it was passed in 1974.

Daley aide to run for Chicago mayor

CHICAGO (UPI) — Jane M. Byrne, a favorite aide to Richard J. Daley but a thorn in the side of his successor, yesterday announced she will run for mayor because, she said, Mayor Michael A. Bilandic is controlled by evildoers.

"City Hall has become a place of oppression and hostility to the ordinary citizens of Chicago — those who have no clout," she said at a news conference.

Mrs. Byrne, who entered politics in 1960 as a volunteer for John F. Kennedy, served as Daley's consumer sales commissioner. In that role she helped the late mayor wage such consumer campaigns as getting grocery store meat counters kept open after 6 p.m. and on weekends.

She kept her job when Bilandic succeeded Daley. But Bilandic fired her late last year after she charged he headed a conspiracy to "grease" City Council approval of an 11.8 percent taxi cab fare increase.

Mrs. Byrne, 43, charged yesterday Bilandic is controlled by a "cabal that is dedicated only to the perpetuation of its own power, to the enrichment of its inner ruling clique and the prostitution of the forces of municipal government to selfish and purely political ends."

She said Bilandic deceived the voters by saying he would serve only as interim mayor after Daley died, then running for a term in his own right. "His record since then has been a series of equal deceptions, intrigues, secret meetings to concoct illegal schemes, evasions and falsehoods," she said.

The city's slow snow removal effort after a major January storm, she said, is symptomatic of Bilandic's abandonment of the average citizen — "While our mayor was jogging in the park, senior citizens in Chicago couldn't walk down the streets ... Mayor Daley would have carried the salt on his back."

Mrs. Byrne, a widow, has married reporter Jay McMullen since her dismissal, but prefers to be known as Mrs. Byrne in a professional role.

She said she hopes to raise $300,000 from "the people" to finance her campaign and she predicted other candidates also will challenge Bilandic, splitting the vote and giving her a chance to win.

She said Daley's organization has been "in trouble" since his death and predicted some of the members of the organization — including ward committeemen — will support her.

"I will be the underdog, I realize," she said. "But my former political mentor — the late Mayor Daley — always said that's the best way."

Senate begins budget debate; Muskie calls for discipline

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Budget Committee Chairman Edmund Muskie yesterday opened Senate debate on a $498.9 billion 1979 federal budget with a warning against "resurgence of a free spending mentality" in Congress.

Muskie, D-Maine, said that unless senators are careful first in enacting and then in following the budget, the $55.6 billion deficit projected by his committee could grow to $80 billion.

Muskie said the deficit would hit that figure if Congress simultaneously adopted spending totals proposed by the Senate Appropriations Committee plus tax cuts recommended by the Finance Committee.

"We confront a resurgence of free spending mentality," Muskie declared.

Giving no names, Muskie denounced "the spectacle of senators who vote for budget resolutions with apparent intention to violate them later."

"Even more discouraging," he said, "is the apparent cynicism of those who vote against budget resolutions as being too extravagant and then vote for bills which exceed them."

Twice last year, once in agriculture and once in energy taxes, Congress broke its own budget, Muskie said. He appealed for more discipline this year "even at the expense of temporary parochial political advantage."

The Senate is expected to take several days to finish work on the budget for fiscal 1979, which begins Oct. 1. The House starts debate next week.

When differences are negotiated, the resulting budget will guide the Congress in passing bills during the year. Congress then will refine the budget in September.

The committee's proposed budget calls for:

-A $19.4 billion income tax cut, $5 billion smaller than President Carter proposed. This is because the committee believes the cut could not begin until January 1979. Carter assumed it would start Oct. 1 1978.

-Continued real growth in national defense spending.

-Emphasis on energy programs

-A college tuition tax credit, which Carter opposes.

-No reduction in Social Security taxes next year. Muskie said Congress should await results of four federal studies on the subject and that "tinkering" with the program now reduces public confidence in it.

-Targeting half of the government's $13 billion job and training effort toward the "structurally unemployed"

17 good reasons to register to vote

1. It's easy—tables will be set up in the CC concourse from 10-4 today, tomorrow & Thursday.
2. If you don't do it now—when it's easy—you probably never will.
3. You're going to be in Amherst in September anyway, so why not vote here?
4. You could register at home this summer...but it's a drag. You've got to mail home for a ballot, find a notary to certify it, and mail it back home again. Sound like fun.
5. Unless you register in Amherst by the end of the summer, you can't vote here.
6. If you're not registered at home or in Amherst then you can't vote. Then you lose.
7. If you don't register you'll never get to vote on things like the bottle bill, the ERA or gun control.
8. You may like one of the candidates.
9. You may hate one of the candidates.
10. It's free.
11. It doesn't hurt.
12. It takes 2 minutes and 45 seconds.
13. Voting can be fun. (What else do you have planned for September 19 or November 7?)
14. Campaign literature makes good bathroom reading.
15. You will learn how to use sophisticated, highly technical, expensive voting machines.
16. If you don't like any of the candidates on the ballot you can practice your penmanship by writing in your Uncle Fred.
17. Registering to vote scares politicians silly.

Ruggers impress in weekend tilts

by ART SIMAS
Collegian Staff

Consistent play by the UMass A and B side packs highlighted last week's rugby games against Dover, N.H. on Sat. April 15 and Amherst on Mon. April 17. In the 4 games played the packs either dominated play from the beginning or, as in the Amherst A game, came on very strong.

UMass dropped 3 out of 4 contests, a 14-0 B side game at Dover, 11-3 B side loss at Amherst and a squeaker, 20-18 A game vs. Amherst. The A side win at Dover saw UMass trailing by 7 at one point but rallied for a 16-11 victory.

One of the reasons for the losses was inexperienced back play. In many of the B side games the backs have not played together because of the abundance of backs on the club. Rarely is the same backfield intact for consecutive games.

The Amherst A game was "probably the best game to date," Doc Lawrence, the faculty mentor for the club, said. UMass, although losing the services of scrum half Chuck Momnie and captain Brian Coolbaugh, a wing forward, through injuries, collected its forces and surged for 2 tries in the last 10 minutes of the game by Dave English and Joe Durant.

Previously hurt in the first half on long runs by the Amherst backs, UMass completely shut off their offense in the waning minutes with some superb hooking by Peter Bates enabling the Minutemen to keep possession.

But the comeback fell short and Amherst was relieved of the punishing UMass attack as time ran out.

The A side Dover game was close all the way, and "What it all came down to was physical conditioning", Ricky Cipriani, scrum half for the A side said.

UMass started a drive to try at midfield with the game tied at 11 with 6 minutes remaining. Crisp passing by the centers ended in an attempt to pass the ball to John Mulray, the wing. The ball never touched Mulray as he was cut down just shy of the goalline. The referee called a penalty on Dover and awarded the try to UMass.

The Minutemen stymied any further threats by Dover and celebrated a satisfving win.

Your Birthday

TUESDAY, APRIL 25

Born today, you are shrewd, economical, and family-oriented, and would rather see your entire family succeed that have the individual success that brings gain but overwork. You enjoy associations with friends and family: to give them up for even tremendous material benefits would upset you immensely.

You are a highly intuitive person, gaining insight into things more through intuition than academic study or personal experience. You are a passionate person, given to intense joy and deep depression. Susceptible to respiratory ills, you must guard against lung infections.

You are accomplished at expressing yourself. You can persuade almost anyone into almost anything, but you are practically unpersuadable yourself, for you set yourself against any who try to turn you to their way of thinking, regardless of the issue.

Also born on this date are: Ella Fitzgerald, singer; Melissa Hayden, ballet dancer.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) -- Unless you can say no firmly, you may be in a precarious position today.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) -- Craving for honor leads you to action which may harm another's chance for success.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) -- Increased effort this morning should increase profits, material or otherwise.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) -- Remove yourself from competition over new proposals for gain. Your entry could be harmful.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) -- An intuitive approach to problems with youngsters works best. Ask the right questions.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) -- Another's ability to find weak spots keeps you jumping. Try to keep out of sight.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) -- Closeness with money goes ill with you today. Try to pay large debts.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) -- Large enterprises prove stronger but no more important than you are. Make your wishes known.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) -- Your likeness to another's arch-enemy may cause problems. Explain your position early.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) -- Sensitivity may make you turn away from an exceptional opportunity. Take care.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) -- Attachment to material mementos may hinder your making plans for the morrow.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) -- Try to stand squarely before superiors. Shyness has no place today.

Men's golf go to tri-match

by GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's golf team, which has finished second in its first three matches this spring, will try to break that streak this afternoon when they travel to Lincoln, R.I. to take on Harvard and a talented Providence squad in a triangular match at Kirkbrae Country Club.

The Minutemen are coming off a frustrating second place finish to URI in a quadrangular match played last Thursday at Pleasant Valley.

The linksters, paced by Jim McDermott's second straight 75, finished with a 402 aggregate, six shots behind Providence, two strokes ahead of Holy Cross and nine in front of Boston College.

Other than McDermott's 75, the Minutemen did not fare very well at Pleasant Valley, which according to coach Ed Vlach played very short and easy. Vic Lahteine was the only other UMass player to break 80, he had a 79. Chuck Dempsey fired an 83, John Lien had an 81, Mary Hunt had an 85 and Steve Channen an 84.

The Minutemen, who have had their problems getting low, consistent scores from the fifth and sixth men in the lineup, will go with a lineup of McDermott, Lien, Dempsey, Bill Campbell, Channen, John Cibrewski and Eric Goldstein for today's match.

The match will be an 18 hole tournament with the best of five of seven scores counting in the final tally.

Vlach said he planned to use today's match and the match Friday against Sienna College at Hickory Ridge, to experiment with his lineups, using younger players like Channen, Cibrowski, Goldstein and others, trying to come up with the best lineup he can for the Salem State Tournament coming up April 30 and the New Englands on May 4 and 5.

CHIP SHOTS: Team captain Jim McDermott has fired two straight 75's that could very easily have been 72's or better. In each round, McDermott fired four birdies, but had them offset by double-bogies....Vlach said that the whole team has been plagued by double and triple-bogies, having rounds that should have been in the mid to high 70's, end up in the 80's.

The second game began as a hitting contest, with the first three batters on each team drilling base hits. By the end of the second inning it was 5-4, this time Maine on top.

Tom Nigro started for UMass but was ineffective, lasting only one inning. His appearance was so brief he never got a chance to thaw out unlike his Maine counterpart. Jim Lewis was summoned from the Minuteman bullpen and put an instant halt to the Black Bear attack. Lewis pitched six hitless, shutout innings before giving way to Mike Yacysnyn in the 8th.

UMass had Maine's starter on the ropes in the first inning, racking him for four hits and four runs but could not put him away permanently. They regretted it because the Maine righthander soon regained his poise, going on to a complete game victory.

Both teams had struggled through 4 scoreless innings before Maine got the gamebreaker in the ninth off Yacysnyn, ending the 5-5 deadlock.

Two singles surrounding a sacrifice put men on first and third with one out, setting the stage for the finishing blow. Kevin Buckley lofted a fly to medium deep center, with the runner on third set to tag up, Mike McEvilly caught the fly and fired a strike right to plate, but it was too late. Typical of the action all day it was an exciting conclusion to a memorable doubleheader.

Highlighting the second game were Leo Kalinowski's 4 for 4 performance and two catches by leftfielder George Kelley.

Without Kelley's efforts in left the game might never have been prolonged till the ninth. His two clutch catches would have made even Willie Mays salute in admiration.

In the third with two on he robbed Russ Quetti (definitely not his day) with a diving catch. Again in the eighth he thwarted Quetti's game ending bid by reaching over the short 4' wall, to snare a sure home run.

8 WHA teams will return in '78

NEW YORK [UPI] – Howard Baldwin, president of the World Hockey Association, said yesterday that "all eight teams will return next season.

"Since we have received no encouragement from the National Hockey League either as a league or as individual teams, we'll be operating as the WHA in 1978-79."

Baldwin revealed that problems in Houston, Indianapolis, Cincinnati and Winnipeg had been solved and that those teams were committed to the WHA.

"The new ownership in Winnipeg, which includes Bobby Hull, is with the WHA all the way," Baldwin said. "Our attendance is up 11 pe cent this year and half of our teams would be in the black except for the unfortunate problem with the roof in Hartford in January, which had the effect of reducing the New England Whalers income."

The Whalers expect to play one more season in Springfield, Mass., and then open a new 15,000 seat building Oct. 1, 1979 in Hartford.

Men's tennis is matched against Springfield

By MICHAEL SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's tennis team takes on Springfield College today at 3 p.m. on the Boyden lower courts in its last match before the New England Championships at Amherst College this weekend.

UMass, 4-1, is comming off a disasterous 9-0 loss to Boston College Sunday. Springfield, 5-4 this season, was saved from certain defeat against UMass last spring as rain chased the players from the courts minutes before UMass was to clinch the match.

The Minutemen defeated Central Connecticut on Saturday 7-2 but suffered their first loss the following day at the hands of the talented Eagle squad.

"They were out for revenge," said UMass captain Steve Heyl. Last spring BC suffered its only loss of the season to UMass, 5-4.

"We should have won a couple" of matches, said Rickey Sharton, UMass second singles player.

Top Minuteman Alan Green lost his first match of the season to BC's Kevin Nawn, 6-4, 6-3. Nawn, a good but erratic player, was on top of his hard hitting game Sunday.

Against Central Conn.'s Mario Dabrowski the previous day, Green faced four match points – three in one game – and recovered from a 5-2 deficit in the third set to win 6-0, 1-6, 7-6 (5-2 tie breaker).

Sharton, who caught an intestinal virus and couldn't play against Central Conn., seemed revitalized after losing the first set to BC's John Officer but lost the tie breaker, 6-4, 7-6 (5-4).

"I couldn't hit the ball in the first set," Sharton said. "But I played better in the second set."

In the fourth singles, UMass freshman Mark Huetteman dominated BC's Rick Ryan in the first set but quickly lost his edge. Ryan won 1-6, 6-2, 6-1.

Sixth singles player freshman Sergio Strepman also seemed like a sure win as he led BC's Kevin Naylor 5-2 on the first set. But Naylor caught on fire and won that set in a the tie breaker 7-6 (5-4), and ran up a 6-0 score in the second set against a dejected Strepman.

Although the Minutemen feel they could have won some of the matches, the day belonged to the Eagles. UMass coach Steve Williams, usually ready to offer an authoratative statement, had few comments.

"The scores speak for themselves," he said.

Softball team misses against Bridgewater

UMass erased a two-run deficit only to fall short in the final inning, 5-2, against the visiting Bridgewater State College in softball action yesterday.

The Bears opened the scoring with two tallies in the fourth. Until then UMass had the best scoring opportunities. In the first inning, Sue Peters ripped a two-out triple past Bridgewater's center fielder but was stranded.

With one on and one out, the UMies stopped a threat in the third with a double play combination of Rhonda McManus to Kathy Horrigan.

Then came the fourth, a single, a walk and a double off UMass' Kathy O'Connell brought across two. But the Bears came up empty in the fifth despite protesting by Bridgewater's coach that O'Connell fired an illegal pitch. The vocal mentor was issued a warning by the umpire and further protesting ended.

In the fifth the Minutewomen tied the score at 2-2. Pat Oski walked on and Carol Bruce reached on a bunt to fill first and second. The runners advanced on Cheryl Meliones' sacrifice bunt while O'Connell's infield grounder scored Oski. With two outs Peter's singled in Bruce for her second hit on the day.

The sixth was quiet except for shortstop Fran Cornacchioli's defensive stab on a ball hit up the middle that seem destined to be a base hit. Cornacchioli ranged to her left and drilled her throw to end the side.

UMass mentor Diane Thompson termed the contest the best defensive performance of the year not including the errorless fielding at the Boston State game.

The seventh frame was the straw that broke the camel's back. An error, a single and a walk put the UMies in hot water. Peters took the mound and promptly got the first out on a force at the plate. Another error allowed the Bears to go one up. A swinging bunt that hugged the line and a sacrifice fly tallied two to give Bridgewater its eighth win in nine starts. The loss dropped UMass to 10-4.

O'Connell suffered her first defeat on the season.

The junior varsity captured its fourth win on "awesome hitting by the whole team," noted jayvee coach Jean Lambert.

Beth "Stretch" O'Connell powered the attack with a two-run homer. Ellen Korelitz, Brenda Simons, Elaine Contant and Denise Andrews had one RBI apiece.

Lambert praised "Scoop" Simons, Korelitz and O'Connell for their fielding contributions.

Gail Clark picked up the win.

JV's Thompson fans 16; hammer Berkshire, 9-3

By WALT CHERNIAK
Collegian Staff

Yesterday was the seventh anniversary of the dedication of Earl Lorden Field, and the fabled old UMass baseball coach would have been more than proud of Chuck Thompson's pitching performance on it.

The hard-throwing righthander gave up only three unearned runs on seven hits and fanned 16 batters as the J.V. baseball team battered Berkshire Community College, 9-3.

Tom Grimes and Phil Small each homered, and drove in three runs apiece, as the Minutemen upped their record to 7-3 and tried to forget last Saturday's embarassment, when they surrended 16 walks and lost to Northampton High School 15-5.

Bershire jumped on top in the very first inning, taking advantage of three UMass errors (they made seven in all) to score two unearned runs against Thompson.

UMass finally broke into the scoring column in the bottom of the third. Tom Grimes lined a one-out double to right field, and scored one out later when hot-hitting Mark Litano (3 for 3 on the day) lofted a high fly ball which Berkshire right fielder Mike Kalisz misplayed for a triple. Center fielder Jeff Hoffman then drilled a line shot that hit three-quarters of the way up the wall at the 375-foot sign in right center for a double to tie the score.

Grimes produced what proved to be the game winning hit an inning later, as he slammed a towering three-run homer to left field with two outs to give UMass a 5-2 lead. Phil Small drilled his round tripper after a Mark Litano single in the fifth, and the Minutemen combined four walks, an error, and a fielder's choice to score two more runs without the benefit of a hit in the sixth to take a commanding 9-3 lead.

Berkshire managed only to push across another unearned run against Thompson in the top of the sixth, but the lanky hurler was more than a match for his opponents as he fanned six men in the last three frames to record his second victory of the season.

Thompson's 16 K's are the most by a J.V. pitcher this season, and his control, shaky earlier this season, was razor sharp, as he yielded only one walk in his nine innings of work.

Thompson fanned at least one man in each inning, and yielded only seven scattered singles. Seven UMass errors, however, made his job more difficult than he deserved.

Phil Small and Mark Litano each collected three hits for the Minutemen, who have now won six of their last seven contests.

The next game will be an "unofficial" contest on Tuesday afternoon, when coach Jim Bedard plans to send big Mark Brown to the mound against the Lord Jeffs of Amherst College. Game time will be 3:00 p.m.

Batmen in weekend split

Collegian Staff

With the exception of an electric blanket to survive Orono's Arctic conditions, Sunday's baseball doubleheader versus the Univ. of Maine provided everything you could possibly ask for.

As the afternoon continued, the bone chilling winds had sent most of the 1,000 diehard Maine-iac fans shivering back to their igloos. But, those that stayed for the entire 5 ½ hours of baseball were treated to a feast of hits, superb defensive plays, controversial calls, and two truly exciting, tense extra inning games.

By the time play was finished the two teams had battled each other to a standstill, splitting one game apiece.

UMass opened the two game set with a 5-4 victory while Maine captured the second game in equally close fashion, 6-5.

Doug Welenc outdueled Maine's ace Barry LaCasse through 9 innings to record his fifth win.

For Welenc it did not come easy. Maine quickly showed they were unimpressed with his reputation as one of New Englands top hurlers (4-2 record, 1.00 ERA entering the game), jumping on him for two runs and four hits in the first frame. Welenc beared down considerably allowing only two unearned runs the rest of the way.

Both teams on numerous occasions had chances to win, but it was not till UMass's Dale Stone singled home Doug Aylward (5 hits in the doubleheader) in the ninth that the game was finally decided.

The Minutemen had a golden chance in the 8th when Dave Oleksak was thrown out at the plate, following a Ed Skribiski double, by a perfect relay from the outfield wall to the plate. Oleksak tried to put the crunch on Maine's catcher Mark Armstrong, but when Armstrong got up from the collision he still had the ball in his glove and a wide grin on his face.

Maine came equally close to putting the game away in both the 7th and 9th but Welenc held firm despite feeling the effects of a stiff arm from the cold weather.

With men on first and second and only one out Welenc forced Maine's All-New England shortstop Russ Quetti to hit into an inning-ending double play. Quetti again had a chance to be a hero in the ninth. With runners in scoring position and two outs he hit a ground ball that had the home crowd jumping in expectation but 2nd baseman

Women's crew sink opponents

The women's crew team chalked up another victory Saturday as they defeated Northeastern University on their home course on the Connecticut River in Hadley.

The varsity eight for UMass finished their 1500 meter course in 5:00.2. UMass started out at a pace of 40 strokes per minute and settled into a 34. One of the Northeastern women jumped her slide after a minute of the race and never got back on it.

Leslie Bellows coxed the varsity boat. Cindy Hector was the first stroke, Sarah Piermarini was in seven seat, Maureen O'Brien in six, Debbie Quinn in five, Ginny Peebles in four, Dede Davis in three, Laura Love in two. and Julie Eggleston in the bow.

The JV women, after having had their troubles in the first 500 meters, defeated Northeastern in the time of 6:15.1. Northeastern finished second with a 6:30.5. A crew from Smith College competed in the race, finishing third. No time was recorded for them. Paula Condon coxed the JV. Stroking was Maria Malone. KC Dietz was in seven seat, Cindy Soma in six, Charmaine Wejeysenghe in five, Julie Ready in four, Kathy Bellows in three, Sue Witt in two, and Beth Brennan in the bow.

The women travel down to Providence, R.I. on Saturday, taking on Coast Guard and Brown.

O, say, can you see...

Whether drunken, buzzed, stoned, or straight, people attend sporting events. Basically, the fans all have one thing in common-they're out to have a good time at the game; be it under the lights in Schaffer Stadium, in the cinderbox, smoke infested Boston Garden, the bleacher benches of Fenway Park, or even the view from triple-decker Yankee Stadium.

In general also, these fans have another thing in common: when the "Star Spangled Banner" is played (a huge majority) stand up. It matters not whether it's the Sox-Blue Jays, Bruins-Sabres, or Celtics-Sonics, or whether this patriotic tune is played live, taped, or whatever.

In most NHL hockey rinks if a team from Canada is playing an American team, the anthems of both countries will be played-which in itself is a class move.

However, although this is a free country, the standing for and playing of the anthem has become mechanical. For the most part, that is.

When 'radicals' as they might be thought of, fail to abide by the unwritten law of respect to the song, others tend to pass this off as practically a communistic act.

What people fail to realize is that according to the same unwritten rule, anytime the national anthem is played, one is supposed to stand up: no stipulation exists saying it must be a live situation-that is, if you are watching the game on TV and the anthem is played, one is supposed to rise. The same is true if for some bizarre reason, the anthem was played in church, at a party, or anyplace else.

Ahhhh, but how many people sitting home with a beer in their hand, hop off their padded recliner, remove their Sox hat, and remain on their feet throughout the three minute rendition? Hypocritical rationale?

Maybe a better question would be, why is the anthem played before sporting events anyways? Is it to remind us through sports that we live in a patriotic community?

Of course since this is a free country, with freedoms of press, religion, etc., one is not obligated to stand up for anything; which includes this pre-game musical piece.

Not standing up for the anthem may offend others in the park personally.

But really it's nothing compared to the kind of physical abuse that goes on between disagreeing, inebriated fans.

But that's another story.

Line drives:....summarization of above:-not to ban the anthem though I question its significant purpose; but people shouldn't worry about others pre-game behavior which does not disrupt the contest itself...is it only rumor that the New England Patriots will play a Monday night game in Schaffer in the upcoming NFL season? If so, hope it's a close game; otherwise....If the Knicks and Sixers kept playing, eventually the Knicks would win a game.....isn't it strange how in pro sports some teams consistently have another team's number? Example, the Red Sox have problems with the Cleveland Indians, the Yankees have trouble with Toronto---a couple of years back, the Bruins had the Canadiens number.... Why do sportswriters pick on the 'Big Apple' teams? Jealousy? Naah. Justifyable? Yessss....how many kids lost teeth in 'Reggie' bars? Nothing like holding up a game while waiting for fans to clear the field....wonder why sporting events held outside are synonimous with drinking?...

Carter begs passage of Saudi arms sale

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter said yesterday that if Congress turns down his plans to sell U.S. jets to Saudi Arabia, he will withdraw companion proposals to supply planes to Israel and Egypt.

Carter told a news conference the jets he wants to sell the Saudis are defensive weapons, and he will not accept congressional rejection of any part of the controversial plan to sell jets to the three Middle East nations.

"If the Congress rejects one portion and accepts another, then my intent is to withdraw the whole package," Carter said.

Carter also said the offer by Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev not to build a neutron bomb if the United States drops its plan to build one "has no meaning, no significance at all."

"The Soviets know — and President Brezhnev knows — that the neutron weapon is designed to be used against overwhelming forces," Carter said.

"The Soviets have no use for a neutron weapon, so the offer by President Brezhnev has no significance in the European theater. He knows this."

And Carter spoke as Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan flew to Washington with the message that Israel is dead set against the U.S. sale of 60 sophisticated F-15 jets to Saudi Arabia and 50 F-5s to Egypt.

Dayan said earlier in the day Israel would even be willing to give up its package of fighters to scotch the deal with the Arabs. The United States has offered 15 F-15s and 75 F-16s to Israel.

White House press secretary Jody Powell said Monday Carter plans to send the package to Congress this week despite calls for a delay and the president would cancel the whole deal if it is tampered with piecemeal.

SGA elects Bishop, Dion

Senators Robert Dion and Donald Bishop were elected co-presidents of the Student Government Association last night, four weeks after the first electoral convention met in the Hatch.

Dion-Bishop won the presidency by 16.5 votes over Gordon-Tyson at last night's election convention. A quorum was reached at 8:27 p.m. Many delegates attributed this to the issuing of subpoenas to all delegates of the convention by the Student Judiciary.

The Student Government Association is made up of all 18,000 student activities tax-paying undergraduates on campus. The president's task is to represent students on the Board of Trustees and to carry out the executive duties of the student government, such as appointment to University-wide committees.

The major goals of the Dion-Bishop administration for the remainder of the semester are the reform of the budgeting process and the President's Council.

"The major concern of our administration is the establishment of credibility in the Student Government so that the students' needs are met," said Bob Dion.

The campaign began on February 24 when 16 candidates filed petitions for the presidency. Throughout the campaign candidates stressed themes of communication, apathy and student power.

On March 16, the last of two election days, Gordon and Tyson polled 26 percent of the vote. None-of-the-Above got 15.25 percent. Susan Birmingham and David Barenberg won 14.75 percent of the total vote. About 3,000 students voted out of an eligible 18,000. Since none of the candidates reached the necessary one third of the total, the election went to the Electoral Convention.

The first ballot of the Convention, March 29, included the Gordon-Tyson ticket and the Barenberg-Birmingham team. None-of-the-Above was ruled ineligible for convention voting. Write-ins were allowed on all convention ballots while only two candidacies were to appear on any one ballot.

Bishop-Dion came in second on the ballot through a write in effort. Gordon-Tyson came in first and the Bishop-Dion action pushed Barenberg-Birmingham off the second ballot.

At the Second ballot on April 4, Bishop-Dion came within 1.9 electoral votes of winning the presidency.

The next four conventions, including the last one on April 18, met without a quorum, or, in one case, with a delegation walking out to prevent a quorum before any ballot could be taken.

The convention began with a motion by James O'Connell to adjourn the convention and return the election to a popular vote.

The motion to adjourn was defeated by 3.55 electoral votes out of the 34 possible votes which could be cast. Joni Mersky, Southwest area president, then made a motion to move to an immediate vote. Following this motion, the Sylvan Area delegation lost its quorum.

"This was to the fact that the delegates of Sylvan felt the candidacy of Dion-Bishop should be put to the people in a popular election," said Vincent Ishrish, a Sylvan delegate. Despite the Sylvan delegation's lack of quorum, the convention moved to an immediate vote.

In an interview with Don Bishop and Bob Dion shortly after their presidential victory, Bob Dion discussed his reasons for not campaigning in the popular election.

"I felt I could do a better job as student trustee (in the Board of Trustees) but I felt I was needed more as Senate speaker. I would have prefered to have been elected by the student body," he said.

Greeks sponsor 100-mile run

Woodbury brings it in...

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

For some people the sky is the limit.

Woodbury, participating in yesterday's Greek-sponsored 100-mile run from Boston to Amherst, last night proved himself a winner as he led a cavalcade of cars and fellow joggers home through the darkness to the UMass campus.

"It was fun," gasped Woodbury, when asked how he felt the run had gone.

Dressed in a navy blue, white-striped sweat suit with white tennis shoes, Woodbury gave no serious signs of post-competition exhaustion.

Accoring to Woodbury, however, he has been ready and waiting for the event for some time now.

"Yes," he said in a pre-race interview, "I've been training very hard." However, he refused to disclose the extent of his training.

Training or no, Woodbury could not deny a serious case of pre-race jitters.

"I am feeling nervous about the whole thing," he admitted. "I managed a full lunch, but it will have to be a very light supper.

"I can only hope that I'll be able to calm down before I start," added the concerned Vice Cahncellor.

Woodbury, in true athletic form, pulled through and successfully completed his 100-yard run - the last of the total 100 miles run by others throughout the day.

He said the cause, raising money for the American Cancer Soicety, made it all worthwhile.

And no one had to carry him over the finish line.

...after start in Boston

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

Fifty UMass students yesterday took the Spartan route from Boston to Amherst.

But unlike brave Pheidippides after his fatal trek to Athens, there were no expirations of life at the finish line.

Instead, there was cheering from the 50 representatives of the UMass Greek Community who took part in the run from the steps of the Massachusetts State House to the Fine Arts Center.

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, Robert L. Woodbury, also participated in the event by finishing the last 100 yards of the run.

"The Greek system has the power to build a community," said Woodbury at 8 p.m. to a group of over 50 tired and smiling participants. "this is a good example of what the Greek system can accomplish when committed to doing something well."

The 100-mile, 11 hour run, sponsored by Sigma Alfa Epsilon (SAE) and Kappa Kappa Gamma (KKG), is an effort for Greek houses across campus to change their stereotypical, beer-drinking images, according to KKG spokeswoman Alicyn Kenney.

An annual Beer Blast has been the usual Greek Week event, and Greek members expressed hopes that this run, a more "philanthropic" activity, would catch on in future years.

Three KKG women started the race, as they left the steps of the Boston State House enroute to a grueling, day-long journey.

It was no long-distance trial, however, as each of the 24 houses participating alternated runners along the way. Each house with two representatives averaged a total of five miles per participant.

While members ran along the way, others collected funds with donation cans. A bus, rented by the Greeks, carried those resting.

"We're hoping to break the $100 mark," said Kenney. "This type of activity was common during Greek Week five or six years ago. Now, with the Greek area on a comeback, we hope a success again will make it an annual event."

No financial figure was known as of last night.

Kenney attributed all planning, and organizing, to fellow KKG member Sue Thomas.

Thomas, one of those participating in the run, said she was pleased with the race results.

"It started slow," she said of the race. "But it picked up, and we made good time."

"And," she added, "everyone involved had a good time."

The run started and ended with short speeches by area Cancer Society representatives.

Registration down; names may be axed

Amherst town officials do not plot to eliminate college students or anyone else from voter-registration lists but as many as 4,000 people will be crossed off the town list by July, according to Town Clerk Estelle Matusko.

Matusko, who has overseen voting registration in Amherst since 1971, yesterday said the town has developed as many flexible methods possible to facilitate voting registration of a transient community connected to the three colleges in town.

Matusko's office today and tomorrow is manning a table in the Campus Center Concourse to register students for the elections in Amherst this fall.

Town registrars yesterday reported 150 people registered to vote at the concourse table. A breakdown of party affiliation is not available yet.

Matusko said 12,000 people are registered to vote in Amherst this year, a drop from 14,000 during the residential election in 1976. There are 5,539 independents, 4,910 democrats and 1,504 republicans in Amherst.

State law requires Matusko's office to "visit or communicate" each year with town residents to compile a voting list. Town election workers once visited residents to compile the street list, but Matusko said she has found using the postal system to be more economic and feasible with a transient community. The mailing and computer processing costs about $9,000.

People not responding to the mailed "census" survey are eliminated from the voting list after a "drop notice" is also unanswered, but the clerk's office files those names until the next election, when some of those eliminated show up at a precinct to vote.

When determing voting eligibility of students previously registered to vote but not responding to the census, Matusko's office checks college listings to see whether the student has changed addresses within the campus or town, or has left the town.

Students have been allowed to vote in town elections by simply giving up voting rights in their home town since a decision from state Attorney Genreal Robert Quinn in 1971.

Students can register in the town of their college for voting purposes, Quinn said, and can regain voting privileges in their home town by registering there agqain.

Matusko said registering to vote in Amherst rarely affects a student's status in financial aid or other legal relations, but there are occasional exceptions.

Registration for voting in the primary this September is open until August 22, but one candidate for a county office is advocating a student registration drive this spring in the hope of gaining student support before summer vacation.

Thirty-year-old Jonathan Souweine, formerly an assistant to the state attorney general and executive director of the public research group, MASSPirg, is looking to a Five College vote to help beat four other democrats in the Franklin-Hampshire District Attorney primary this fall.

Academic sun rising on UM Asian studies

By Maria Messitt
Collegian Staff

Did you know that over 50 percent of the world's population lives in Asia? Or that Japanese has replaced French and German as the language to know in the scientific fields? Or that UMass is the only public institution in New England to offer a B.A. degree in Chinese and Japanese?

This week Asian Studies faculty and student representatives have an information table about courses on the Campus Center concourse.

Although Asian Studies is a small department - 31 majors and six professors - its courses are popular. Many business and history majors take introductory courses in Asian literature, civilization, and culture. Many art majors enroll in Chinese calligraphy classes.

"This is good from a vocational point of view," said Chinese language major Eric Sabatine. "There are lots of job possibilities combining Chinese or Japanese with business," he said.

Most Asian studies majors go on to graduate school, according to Department Secretary Nina Rose. "Usually they go to the best schools in the country," said Rose.

One recent graduate works at the Japanese Emabssey in Washington. A few work in the State Department while some go to Taiwan to teach English as a second language. Another recent graduate is employed in a Taiwan art history museum, said Rose.

Asian Studies nearly went up in smoke last year Rose said, when UMass Provost Paul L. Puryear called for the elimination of Asian Studies and Slavic languages in an administrative five-year plan. He also proposed a decrease in the History, German, English, and Afro-American departments, according to a memorandum dated last March.

Asian Studies was having trouble with staff shortages at the time. Puryear denied tenure and promotion to two Chinese language professors, thereby decreasing an already short-handed staff, Rose said.

Puryear had a bad attitude toward his colleagues, said Rose. He was fired in January, and since then things have begun to right themselves in Asian Studies, she said.

The department offers a Certificate in Asian Studies open to any major. There is no language requirement however, 24 credits must be taken in courses which range from Mystical Literature: East and West to Tea Ceremony.

Certification helps students learn more about the world, or in the case of business majors may give them more clout in the job market, Rose said.

Some Asian Studies courses attract graduate students, and older, unregistered people who've been to Asian countries, and come to share their knowledge, an Asian Studies student said.

Fifteen percent of our students are Asian," said Rose. "Approximately 10 percent of our course enrollment comes from the other four colleges in the area," she said. "Half of our faculty are Asian," she said.

Secretaries rally today

12 to 1 Commonwealth Clericals, an organization of office workers in the 5-college area, will hold a rally today at noon next to the Student Union in celebration of National Secretary's Day.

"We don't want roses on National Secretary's Day, we want better office hours," said Judith Kinney, a 12-1 staffer and Vista volunteer working with low-income women.

"Women are doing professional work and getting paid as though they are incompetent," Kinney said. "Clerical work is a dead-end job, there are no career ladders and many of these women who are trying to raise a family on their salary are struggling," she said.

12-1 is comprised of approximately 350 women who are office workers at one of the five ocleges.

The group is sponsoring a series of events including an information booth at Mountain Farms Mall from April 22 through April 29, a showing of the film "9-5" tonight at 5:15 at the Newman Center followed by a spaghetti supper at the Newman Center at 6 p.m.

Art extension awarded

The "Innovative Award in Continuing Education for 1978" was recently presented to the Arts Extension Service of Continuing Education for its festival training program.

The award, from the American College Testing Program and the National University Extension Association, was given to the UMass Festival Training Program because "it exposed many people to high quality artistic programming, and helped citizen groups to organize and to carry out a broad range of cultural activities on their own," according to the awards sponsor.

The Festival Training Program was developed for the annual New England Artist Festival and Showcase.

Symphony band plays

The UMass Symphony Band, conducted by John Jenkins, will perform in concert for the second time tonight at 8:00 in Bowker Auditorium.

The symphony band is the largest of the band ensembles at UMass and is made up of music majors and non-majors. The concert which features mucic from Wagner, Prokofieff, Chance and a movement from Holst's "The Planets" is free and open to the public.

DVP seeks members

The Distinguished Visitors Program, which has brought Dick Gregory, Angela Davis, Betty Friedan, and Daniel Shorr to UMass, will recruit new members this week.

The DVP is an organization which brings prominent speakers to campus. It also sponsors special events, such as Women's Week and Martin Luther King, Jr. Week.

DVP is entirely student run. Members choose the speakers, bid for them, and handle all publicity related to the lectures. In addition, one member is specifically assigned to handle the promotion and scheduling for a given speaker.

There are approximately 24 members in the organization who work with a student-funded budget of $30,000, according to Mary-Jude Dean, co-chairperson. Positions open to new members, in addition to those already mentioned, include treasurer and chairpersons for special events.

Orientation meetings will be held tonight and tomorrow evening at 7:30 p.m. in room 165 of the Campus Center. Attendance at one of the meetings is mandatory for new members.

The DVP office is located in room 415 of the Student Union.

More drug arrests expected

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

More arrests are expected in the investigation which led to the five drug-related arrests on Friday of three UMass students and two other persons, according to a spokesman at the Hartford office of the federal Drug Enforcement Agency.

Supervisor of Agents Edward Noon also said the investigation prior to Friday's night raid at the Cance dormitory in Southwest was a collaboration of federal and campus police.

Noon said the investigation included federal undercover agents on campus.

David A. Bruno, 21, of 348 Cance Dormitory, Joseph F. Cooper, 21, of 316 Moore House, David B. Hellman, 21, of 342 Cance Dormitory, Richard A. Kaufman, 32, of 11 Gorham Street, Brighton, Mass. and John Peterson, 27, of 252 West Newton, Boston, Mass. were arrested Friday in Amherst and arraigned Saturday in Federal District Court in Springfield.

Cooper and Hellman were charged with distribution of a controlled substance, cocaine, and Bruno, Kaufman and Peterson were charged with possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, according to Federal Magistrate, Charles K. Bergin.

"The investigation is continuing and we do expect to make more arrests in the Amherst area and other places," he said.

Federal agents conducted undercover work on the campus prior to the arrests, Noon admitted yesterday.

"The undercover work was done by DEA agents," he said.

During a chase Friday afternoon in which Hellman was apprehended, UMass and federal police sped down Commonwealth Avenue from Southwest into the Boyden Gymnasium parking lot, then chased Hellman on foot.

Members of the UMass lacrosse team watched the agents throw Hellman to the ground and hit him with the butt of a gun, according to a team member who asked his name be witheld.

"He was forcibly subdued," Noon said.

"They beat the shit out of him. His head was all bloody," the lacrosse player said.

According to Noon, Hellman was taken to the University Health Center by UMass police and received stitches. He was released from the infirmary before the arraignment.

The federal agents confiscated two ounces of cocaine, a quantity of marijuana amounting to approximately two pounds, and three automobiles, Noon said.

Hellman was also charged with assault on a federal agent, Noon said.

The five were released on $5000 bail and are waiting for their probable cause hearing, scheduled for May 12. The hearing will determine if the Government has a case against the five men.

Noon, speaking for Peter Gruden, Special Agent in charge of the Hartford District Office, acknowledged the investigation leading to the arrests were a joint effort of the UMass police department and the federal agency.

They said Philip J. Cavanaugh, a detective on the UMass police force, is the

SATF fund increases by 7 dollars

By ROBERT FALETRA
Collegian Staff

The Student Senate Budget Committee last night voted to increase the Student Activities Fee by $7. to cover cost of funding the student Transit Service and the rise in the cost of living.

Allen Drewes, co-chairman of the budget committee, said, "Last year's Transit Service budget was $92,000. This year the budget will be over $175,000.

Drewes said the Administration gave the senate the ultimatum to either fund the entire budget or they would take over the funding and add $10 on to students' bills to cover the cost.

The rise in the cost is due to new buses being purchased and the cost of converting them for use by the handicapped, Drewes said.

The committee was debating if it should combine the Student Organization Project (SOP) and the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER) into one organization with one budget late last night.

The two organizations budgets combined are $103,000, 10 percent of the Student Activities Fee, according to Drewes.

Drewes said the combined organization would be called the Student Center for Information Research in Advocacy. "It would come under the coordinating committee of the student senate and have its own director," he said.

"We are taking the first step in bringing to the senate what we see as two duplicating organizations to try and combine them," Drewes said.

Larry Magid, director of SCER said, "The SCER is capable of intensive research. By merging it with an organization of turmoil and internal dissension like the SOP, it will be stagnated."

"The SOP," Magid said, "has had six resignations or firings in the last five years; SCER has had none. This year the SCER has had a large personel drop-out because many of the people that were hired for research were being dragged into what they felt was organization."

"If the two organizations are combined then you will not be able to separate the two," Magid said.

Virginia Logan, a member of SCER said, "Why haven't people sat down and talked this out instead of presenting this at the budget hearings?"

"Just to come up with a plan, presto, as if things are going to be really coordinated because they're both in the same room, I don't see as workable," Logan said.

In other action the committee cut the Legal Services Office Budget (LSO) by $4,698. The full budget passed was $70,078.

Ken Ross, Graduate Student Senate treasurer opposed any cut in the LSO budget. Ross said the graduate senate contributions comprise one-fourth of the LSO budget and any cuts therefore cannot take place without their approval.

"We voted on the LSO budget last night and the undergraduate budget committee originally approved the full budget," Ross said. "I don't see it in your power to slash it without coming to the graduate senate first. We don't want the services cut," he said.

The budget committee suggested one of the two full-time clerical workers of the LSO be hired on a nine-month appointment from September to June.

"Clearly this is a cutback of services to graduates. There are more graduate students around in the summer and they would be most affected by this."

Court equalizes women's pensions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Women workers won an important legal victory yesterday as the Supreme Court outlawed all pension plans requiring them to contribute larger portions of their salaries than men.

The court ruled that women cannot be forced to make proportionately larger pension payments just because they generally live longer than men.

Such retirement plans, widespread throughout government and industry, violate federal law banning sex discrimination in employment, the justices decided in a 6-2 vote.

Millions of workers participate in retirement plans which base pension payments on lifeexpectancy studies showing that women generally live longer than men and therefore collect more retirement benefits.

The American Council of Life Insurance had said that outlawing such plans would "require radical changes in pension and retirement coverage available to American workers, and may substantially increase pension costs."

Those extra costs under certain circumstances could total billions of dollars each year, the council said.

In New York City alone, the court had been told by city officials, more than 300,000 Board of Education employees are covered by such pension plans.

City attorney W. Bernard Richland said outlawing such plans would have "dire consequences" in New York, and elsewhere.

The court's decision yesterday upheld rulings in favor of five women employees of the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power.

The women had sued the city in 1973 in protest of having to pay into a compulsory pension fund 15 percent more of their salaries than men earning the same amount.

In a separate matter, the court ruled unanimously that professional engineers violate federal antitrust law when barring each other from competing for clients through competitive bids.

The decision struck down a 14-year ethical practice enforced by the 69,000-member National Society of Professional Engineers under which engineers were not allowed to give prospective clients any hint of job costs until hired for the project.

Town wants more buses

By FRAN BASCHE
Collegian Staff

A warrant article for next month's Amherst Town Meeting calling for additional UMass bus routes to South Amherst was prompted by the town and not the UMass Transit Service, the UMass Director of Transportation and Parking last night said.

Director William Barrett also said South Amherst residents petitioned the UMass Transit Service several years ago for service into the south end of town but were told there was not enough funding to extend the service.

If May Town meeting members pass Article 33, $19,000 of the cost will be paid by the town and approximately $55,000 by the federal-subsidized Pioneer Valley Transportation Authority.

Wendy Kohler of the town transportation committee, Monday night told the Amherst Board of Selectmen the service would begin this summer and run nine times daily on weekdays. The selectmen endorsed the proposal.

The valley transit authority with the UMass bus service presently operates eight routes in the Amherst area, one of which goes to a section of South Amherst along East Hadley Road where there are also several apartment complexes.

The proposed route would extend farther into the south area from Orchard Valley by West Street to the South Amherst Common. Another proposed route would go to the Echo Hill area.

Meanwhile, the UMass Handicapped Student Collective has been meeting with University administrators in an attempt to have hydraulic lifts installed in the front end of the 26 new UMass buses scheduled to arrive here in August.

Collective member Peggy Griffin said she has contacted a California-based firm that can develop a lift to fit the new buses in four to six months at $12,000 to $14,000 per lift. In the past the collective has been told wheelchair lifts could not be fitted into the new buses.

Tower of Power's
Micheal Jeffries

By RENEE MOBLEY
Black Affairs Staff

Michael Jeffries, the newest member of the Tower of Power musical group, has been singing since he was of high school age.

The small, soft spoken, second tenor, from Memphis, Tennessee, displayed his talent as Tower of Power performed this past Sunday, April 23 at the Fine Arts Center.

His musical career began at the age of fourteen. He sang with neighborhood friends in garage bands around the Oakland area, where he was from originally.

Jeffries said he was influenced by other singers. "When I was young James Brown was a positive image for me." He remembered that Brown's music carried messages like "don't be a drop out" and "don't use drugs."

Sly Stone and Stevie Wonder were also models that Jeffries looked up to.

Jeffries received his formal training at the University of California. Later he attended the University of San Francisco as well.

While at college Jeffries played with several local bands. He cut records with some of these groups but their success was limited to the local area.

The leader of Tower of Power heard about Jeffries through another artist and asked him to audition. Jeffries got the job and his career as a professional singer began.

When asked about the commercialization of black music, Jeffries cited both good and bad aspects. "On the commercial level some groups are helpful." Earth Wind and Fire was mentioned as one such group. "A positive image is expressed in their music and in their lifestyle," said Jeffries.

On the other hand Jeffires believes some commercial groups are more detrimental than helpful. "I am not happy with the psychadelic space ship type of thing," Jeffries commented.

In looking toward the future of black music and its musicians Jeffries declined to comment on what he thinks will be the fate of black classical music. "I am not really into black classical music, so I really can't say anything on that."

Jeffries is unsure what will replace the "disco phase" but believes black musicians will play an important part in whatever the future holds. "Black musicians will always be innovative," said Jeffries. "We'll always set the trend."

Whatever the musical style Jeffries hopes that the music will carry an inspiring message to the people.

The young singer had some advice for aspiring musicians. "Make sure," he said. "There are a lot of talents out there and not all of them are in music. Explore everything. Music is not a dream world and you should go where your talents and your desire are the strongest." He then added, "If you do choose music, don't ever give up!"

At the age of 23 Michael Jeffries is a successful singer in a well known musical group, but his aspirations do not stop there. "Ultimately I would like to get into acting." He feels that he would not mind trying his talent as a solo singer, yet this is not one of his prime objectives.

Whatever the future holds for the young second tenor, his talent should carry him far.

Affirmative Action, Institutional Racism

By James Lewis
Black Affairs Assistant Editor

The 1978 Affirmative Action report for the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, was published February 6, revealing the universities' inability to work up to its Affirmative Action requirements.

In several academic departments there are no Third World faculty. In the Natural Sciences and Math departments, there are no Black or Hispanic Women, and no Native American or Alaskan Natives. In the Social and Behavior Sciences departments there are no Hispanic women. In the Business Administration Department there are no Black, Hispanics, or Native Americans, and only two Asian men. There are no Third World female instructors in the Engineering department, and only one Black male and one Hispanic male.

Reports and information about the rational of the University for not owning up to Affirmative Action can be gained at the Third World Affairs office. The Third World Affairs office will coordinte community efors in dealing with this issue.

Another report from the Third World Affairs office specifically states some problems within the Third World community in dealing with racism, and the responsibility of the Third World insitutions in bringing out awareness about insitutional racism at UMass.

More information will be forthcoming.

Protest against S.A. on the Boston Commons

By JAMES LEWIS
Black Affairs Asst. Editor

Another demonstration on the struggles of South Africa is coming up and sponsors from all over the region are supporting it. People like to circulate the idea that movements for human freedom in this country and in the world are no longer happening. They would like to swipe out the significance of the struggles in the sixties. Yet they are sadly mistaken.

Thousands of persons appeared from all over the country to protest at Vanderbilt University, at the Davis Cup, to keep the South African representatives out. Thousands demonstrated in Washington two weekends ago over the Bakke decisions. Thousands protested at the Seabrook Nuclear plant site. Thousands protested at Kent State University, in memory of the students killed protesting the Vietnam War, because the school wanted to construct a gymnasium instead of a memorial for that righteous protest for freedom. Thousands protested the arrival of the Shah of Iran, and the economic contract Rresident Carter signed. Hundreds of students spent a weekend at a South Africa conference at Yale University in New Haven, learning about South Africa.

Thousands of coal miners struck the country, with the support of striking farmers and many political organizations.

Commentary

There have been thousands of protests all over this country about South Africa. There is another regional demonstration this Sunday. Sponsors include the American Friends Service Committee, Citizens for Participation in Political Action, the Martin Luther King Center at Boston University, the Coalition for the Liberation of South Africa, Elma Lewis, and South African Liberation organizations in this area.

Buses leave this Sunday, April 30 at 10:30 a.m. at the five college bus stop at Amherst College. The cost is five dollars round trip, from 1:30 to 3:30, on the Boston Common.

Vorster accepts new rule for Nambia

CAPE TOWN, South Africa [UPI] — Prime Minister John Vorster yesterday accepted a U.S.-backed plan for black rule in Namibia paving the way for an end to 58 years of South African rule in the disputed territory.

The decision, announced in parliament, ends a year of intensive negotiations on Namibia (South West Africa) initiated by the United States, West Germany, France, Canada and Britain.

Vorster's acceptance placed the onus for a similar response upon the militant, Sovietbacked guerrilla movement operating in Namibia, the South West Africa Peoples Organization (SWAPO).

"If the international community truly wants peace in the territory, the way is now completely open to acheive it," Vorster said. He said the decision could lead to independence by "the end of this year."

(In Washington, Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs Richard Moose called Vorster's announcement "an extraordinarily statesmanlike and constructive step.")

Vorster said, however, that South Africa troops will remain in Namibia "until there was a complete cessation of hostilities."

He also said that Walvis Bay — Namibia's only deep-water port —will remain South African territory.

SWAPO's position is that all South African troops must leave the territory seven days after the election of a constituent assembly provided for in the new proposal.

Under the Western proposal, the presence of troops will be decided by the assembly after the election.

(At the United Nations, SWAPO president Sam Nujoma remained non-committal. "It is his (Vorster's) problem," he told correspondents. "We have made our position clear.")

South Africa ruled Namibia under a League of Nations mandate dating back to 1920. The United Nations canceled the mandate in 1946, but Pretoria continued as administrator despite repeated U.N. demands for withdrawal.

Vorster said the new plan provided for the current administrator-general, Marthinus Steyn, to continue in office during the transition.

Last week, Steyn invoked detention-without-trial laws after the assassination in Windhoek of black tribal leader, Clemens Kapuuo.

SWAPO reacted angrily to Steyn's announcement yesterday that four of its leaders were jailed under terms of the new law.

"It is self-evident that SWAPO is not allowed to proceed with an election campaign, if it so wishes, when its leaders are arrested," a SWAPO official said.

Town poorly controls DNA research effort

By MARIA MESSITT
Collegian Staff

UMass Graduate School Dean Eugene B. Piedmont said last night that Town of Amherst efforts to monitor and control local recombinant DNA research has been "ineffectual at best, and repressive at worst."

Piedmont spoke to the town's DNA study committee at 7:30 p.m. in the Town Hall's Board Room. The DNA study committee is chaired by UMass Physics Professor Arthur Quinton.

Piedmont referred to an article passed at last October's Town Meeting requiring that half the members of biohazard committees not be associated with any of the five colleges. These committees would use National Institute of Health guidelines to monitor research in this field where potential biological dangers exist.

Recombinant DNA research involves substituting genes from one organism to another creating a new organism not otherwise naturally occuring. Such research is important to biological research and to the study of diseases, but some fear that unless the new organisms are carefully contained, they represent a public health threat.

Piedmont feels controls should be set only at a national level. He said that academic freedom and free scientific inquiry are at stake. He said DNA research proposed by "senior and experienced scientists...had been delayed for a full year" by the town's ruling.

Piedmont called the ruling an "obnoxious piece of legislation" intending to "prevent outright the conduct of scientific inquiry." He did not hold anyone on the DNA study committee responsible for this ruling.

Microbiologist and DNA committee member Bruce Levin told Piedmont he agreed that control should be national and not local, but was concerned about the town's reactions.

"At stake is not just Amherst and DNA, but the town's right to be involved in our safety," said Levin.

Soviets renounce bomb

MOSCOW (UPI) — President Leonid Brezhnev, in his first public response to President Carter's decision to defer production of the neutron bomb, said yesterday the superpowers should jointly renounce the "inhuman" weapon.

Brezhnev also held out hopes a "sensible and realistic compromise" could be reached in Strategic Arms Limitations Treaty talks and sounded a generally positive note on U.S.Soviet relations.

Carter decided earlier this month to delay production of the neutron bomb in hopes the Soviet Union would make a similar, conciliatory gesture.

Britain immediately hailed Brezhnev's remarks and Frank Allan, a Labor member of parliament and top British disarmament expert, said in Helsinki, Finland: "Brezhnev's decision is exactly the measure Carter hoped for.

"It shows that Carter's decision, even though it was limited, has produced results," he said.

Brezhnev said Carter's decision to defer production was a "half-measure" and called on Washington to sign an agreement with Moscow under which neither superpower would produce the weapon. The Soviets are believed to be several years away from developing the bomb themselves.

liaison between the two departments in the investigations.

Cavanaugh admitted to the responsibility of liaison, but would not elaborate on his role in the investigation and arrests.

Bill Couchon and Bill McNamara, heads of residence of Cance House and Moore House refused to comment yesterday afternoon, and referred inquiries to Floyd Martin, associate director of Southwest, who also refused comment.

Vice Chancellor Robert L. Woodbury had no information about the arrest but said, "My position is it is a federal matter. They have to speak to it. It's a very serious thing, it's federally initiated," he said.

Saul L. Chafin, director of UMass Security also referred inquiries to the federal authorities.

Dean William F. Field said he would be contacting the three UMass students to discuss the arrests. He said under the Student Code of Conduct the students could be expelled or suspended.

"If they have presented a danger to the University, I will suggest expulsion," Field said.

Hatch opens fire on Dukakis' ed. policy

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

Republican gubernatorial candidate Francis Hatch said yesterday as far as Governor Michael S. Dukakis is concerned, "UMass-Amherst might as well be the University of Hawaii."

Hatch, R-Beverly, the Massachusetts House minority leader, spoke to about 70 pepole at the Student Union Ballroom on the first stop of a three-day campaign swing through western Massachusetts.

"I came to talk to you about education," Hatch said. He called the UMass campus "one of the finest campuses anywhere.

"But the way UMass has been treated in the last three years by the Dukakis admministration, public higher education in this state could be fundamentally jeopardized," said Hatch.

Hatch opened fire on Dukakis' level-finding policy and "its implied mediocrity." He explained that level-funding, the governor's policy that keeps the budgets of state agencies frozen at their previous fiscal year levels, maintains past standards of mediocrity.

"Level funding keeps dollars in places they shouldn't be," he said. Hatch said the UMass budget and all state agencies' budgets need "first-rate review and analysis."

Hatch said while he would like to see more state funds given to higher education, there is a limit to the amount of money that can be spent. He said he would like to see better administration and organization throughout the system.

"Organization of the system is little more than the figment of someone's imagination," he said.

"Boston State College has an advertising budget of $75,000 per month. We can't spend money like that these days."

After speaking for about 30 minutes, Hatch answered questions. Student Senator Jay A. Martus asked Hatch about his tuition plan which would have students pay a graduated rate based on their parent's income. Martus said the plan would mean more expense for more students.

"It bothers me that students attend UMass or Salem State or any public institution who are paying the low rate and could pay more," Hatch said.

Hatch said the money from the tuition increase would be referred back into the University to try and remedy the lack of scholarship money available to students.

Kelly subpoena sets House precedent

BOSTON (AP) — Powerful Ways and Means Committee chairman Sen. James A. Kelly Jr. was subpoenaed yesterday by a legislative committee investigating the MBM scandal in what is believed to be a first in Massachusetts legislative history.

Kelly is due to appear before the Post Audit and Oversight Committee at a public hearing Friday to answer questions about a $1,000 payment he allegedly received from McKeeBerger-Mansueto.

Still at issue is whether a committee of the legislature has the power to subpoena one of its own members. The subpoena was intentionally made returnable on Friday, a day of the week when the legislature is not in session.

The committee, which had hoped to finish its investigation within the next three weeks, will also make a decision this week on granting immunity to William Masiello, the alleged conduit for a number of payments by MBM officials to state politicians.

The Kelly subpoena, approved by a 15-0 vote of the full committee, was to be served on the senator "at a mutually acceptable spot," said Rep. Gerald Cohen, D-Andover, chairman of the special MBM subcommittee.

Approval of the subpoena follows a month of fruitless negotiations between committee counsel Charles Nesson and Kelly's lawyer, George McLaughlin Jr. Kelly, through his lawyer, had insisted all questions from the committee be submitted in writing in advance of any public hearing.

"Because Senator Kelly has the tremendous strain of simultaneously dealing with court reform legislation, educational funding reform, the so-called bottle bill, preparation of the Commonwealth's deficient budget...it is impossible for him to prepare any meaningful responses unless he has the opportunity to review questions in advance," McLaughlin said in his letter to the committee.

Kelly, according to McLaughlin, has already furnished the committee with some of his business records, including records of the fees paid to his accounting firm by Masiello & Associates. McLaughlin said Kelly did work for Masiello in 1971 and 1972, when the firm was owned by Kasuba Development Corp. of West Palm Beach, Fla.

This is no time to feel insecure

If you're going to make the most of this exciting day, self-confidence is important. And Tampax tampons can really help.

They're uniquely comfortable. In fact, once a Tampax tampon is properly in place, you can't even feel it.

And you never have to worry about odor. Because when a tampon is in use, embarrassing odor doesn't form. (Which is why Tampax tampons don't offer you a deodorant — and the added expense that goes with it.)

What's more, Tampax tampons are designed to conform to individual body contours. So there's less chance of an accident.

Tampax tampons. Because there'll never be another day quite like today.

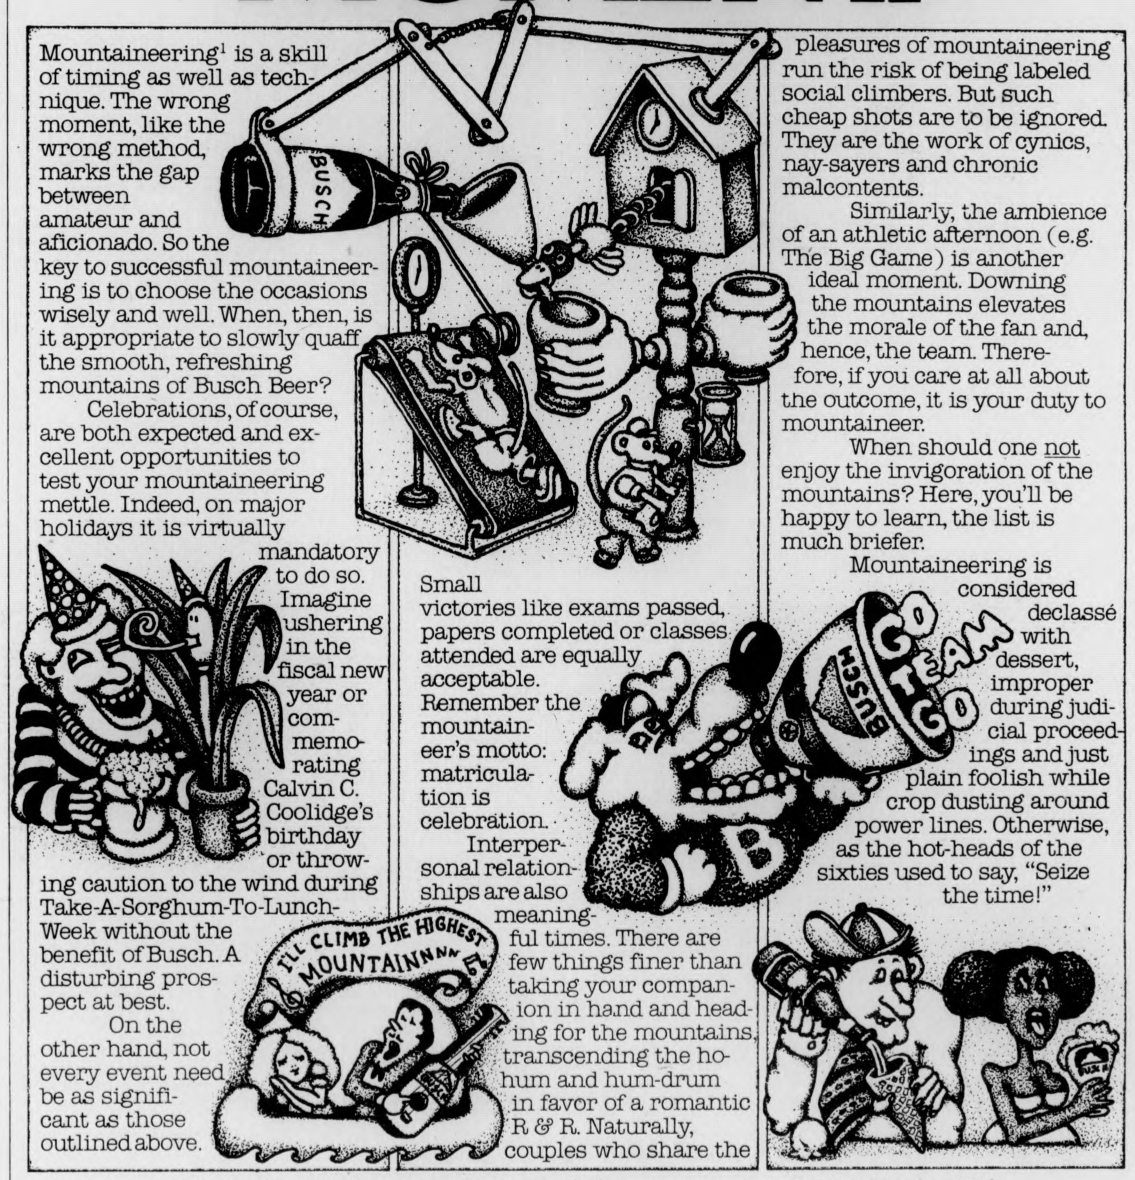
Mountaineering #4.

THE OPTIMUM MOMENT.



BUSCH
I'LL CLIMB THE HIGHEST MOUNTAINNNN

Mountaineering[1] is a skill of timing as well as technique. The wrong moment, like the wrong method, marks the gap between amateur and aficionado. So the key to successful mountaineering is to choose the occasions wisely and well. When, then, is it appropriate to slowly quaff the smooth, refreshing mountains of Busch Beer?

Celebrations, of course, are both expected and excellent opportunities to test your mountaineering mettle. Indeed, on major holidays it is virtually mandatory to do so. Imagine ushering in the fiscal new year or commemorating Calvin C. Coolidge's birthday or throwing caution to the wind during Take-A-Sorghum-To-Lunch-Week without the benefit of Busch. A disturbing prospect at best.

On the other hand, not every event need be as significant as those outlined above. Small victories like exams passed, papers completed or classes attended are equally acceptable. Remember the mountaineer's motto: matriculation is celebration.

Interpersonal relationships are also meaningful times. There are few things finer than taking your companion in hand and heading for the mountains, transcending the ho-hum and hum-drum in favor of a romantic R & R. Naturally, couples who share the pleasures of mountaineering run the risk of being labeled social climbers. But such cheap shots are to be ignored. They are the work of cynics, nay-sayers and chronic malcontents.

Similarly, the ambience of an athletic afternoon (e.g. The Big Game) is another ideal moment. Downing the mountains elevates the morale of the fan and, hence, the team. Therefore, if you care at all about the outcome, it is your duty to mountaineer.

When should one not enjoy the invigoration of the mountains? Here, you'll be happy to learn, the list is much briefer.

Mountaineering is considered declassé with dessert, improper during judicial proceedings and just plain foolish while crop dusting around power lines. Otherwise, as the hot-heads of the sixties used to say, "Seize the time!"

[1] Mountaineering is the science and art of drinking Busch. The term originates due to the snowy, icy peaks sported by the label outside and perpetuates due to the cold, naturally refreshing taste inside. (cf. lessons 1, 2 and 3.)

Don't just reach for a beer. BUSCH® Head for the mountains.

"Brothers" harass Van Meter

To the Editor:

At approximately midnight on Sunday April 23, the residents of Van Meter Dormitory had the priviledge of hosting a contingent of brothers from Beta Kappa Phi and witnessing the less than exemplary manner in which the members of this particular fraternity represented the 'Greeks' on this campus.

Having decided that their recruiting efforts at the house lacked the requisite appeal, this group took it upon themselves tdo initiate an outreach program of sorts and bring their pledge activities into the dormitory. In Van Meter these activities proved so unappealing that those individuals actually pledging Beta Kappa Phi refused to open their doors.

Unwilling to accept what they obviously felt was an inappropriate welcome, the brothers found it necessary to harass the RA on the floor, attempt to force her to open the door to the room they wanted to enter, and when she refused to comply, try to steal a set of her keys which they evidently hoped would include her submaster key. They continued their obnoxious behavior by violently kicking the door which stood between themselves and their pledges, harassing other residents of the corridor, and generally reinforcing the stereotypic notion of fraternity people as mindless, macho rowdies with nothing better to do than disrupt the lives of other people.

It would be nice to believe that this group did not represent the typical member of Beta Kappa Phi, but when one of the offending individuals has identified himself as the president of the frat, it becomes impossible not to pass a negative judgement on the entire organization.

I in the future the brothers of Beta Kappa Phi feel a compulsion to live up to this unsavory image I wish they would confine themselves to their house on North Pleasant Street. A dormitory is often a hard enough place to live; subjection to the kind of immature and insulting behavior displayed by the brothers of Beta Kappa Phi is an added indignity which the residents of a dorm should not be forced to undergo.

Johnson residents respond

To the Editor:

In response to the letter written by B. Roth and C. Petroph on Thursday, April 20, 1978, we would like to say that we agree with their allegations, but the letter should not have been directed to the entire residency of Johnson House. The letter signed by the "many concerned residents of Johnson House," was actually written by one person backed by approximately 50 non-varified "I agrees" out of 122 Johnson residents. This was not a true representation of the dorm.

The individual was incorrect in misleading the readers of his letter that the majority of residents felt that way; just as we cannot sign this letter for more than ourselves. We are not afraid to stand behind our own voices. We do not have to stand behind the facade of a nebulous group.

We would like to say that their allegations about the nature of a capitalistic society and racism are probably true, but they are not necessarily the cause of that student's attitudes. We do agree with them that ignorance and close-mindedness are the reasons. If this person has no previous knowledge of those bands, then he has nothing to base his attitude on except ignorance. We are here at the University to learn and expand our knowledge; we view the upcoming concert as a way to expand one's knowledge of the roots of America's music today. To understnad today's music, one should understand its beginnings.

In defense of ourselves and other students in the dorm, we wish to say that we do not choose to be labelled, stamped and approved as racist because of another individual's actions. We take no responsibility for his opinions. He had no right to sign the letter "the many concerned residents of Johnson House," since this implies that we agree with him. We do not understand why he could not have signed his own name alongside with those who supported him. That would have removed all doubt as to whom was responsible for the letter.

We are very concerned that the rest of the campus may get a prejudiced view of the residents of Johnson House as a result of the two previous letters. We do not wish to be included, and we are sure there are other residents who feel the same way.

'Lights' question on SW referendum

Southwest Residents:

"Should lights be put surrounding the Horseshoe basketball courts so that the courts could be used for basketball games, concerts, dances, and other activities at night?"

This will be a referendum question on the ballots on Thursday's Southwest Assembly elections.

At the present time there is a very good possibility that whem we return in the fall, these courts will be lit for night use.

There si already Southwest administrative support and Physical Plant support for these lights. All that is needed now is generated Southest student interest.

By voting "yes" on this question, we can prove that we want and need lights for night use of the Horseshoe.

I strongly urge all Southwest residents to vote on Thursday [in Hampshire and Berkshire Dining Commons] and show that there is overwhilming student support for these lights.

If you have any questions about the Referendum question or the elections, please call me at the Southwest Assmbly office [5-0960].

Thank you in advance for voting.

Joni Mersky, president Southwest Assembly

Collegian account able to community

To the Editor:

With all the excitement and antagonism stemming from the much-needed Women's Pages, maybe it is time for the Collegian and the University community to take a good hard look at the Collegian's accountabillity, responsibilities, and priorities.

The Collegian is the acclaimed "student newspaper of UMass". Obviosly, on paper this is true; it is run completely by students and is available to all students. But, is its main concern really student interest? How accountable is the Collegian to the student body?? I know that there were several weeks this simester that the Collegian did not cover Southwest Assembly meetings. How many other student meetings go on with no Collegian coverage? How many students are not represented by any part of the Collegian*? I don't think that the* Collegian is truly accountable to the students.

The Collegian*, as the major [and sometimes only] news source for much of the UMass community, has many responsibilities. One of these responsibilities is to cover, to some extent, outside news. This is done more than adequately through wire service membership.*

However, the Collegian also has the responsibility to report what is happening on campus. Many activities go unmentioned [e.g., the DAdienne Rich lecture on April 14 in Mahar]. Is this because the Collegian feels more responsible to ;the coverage of outside events than those at UMass?

Maybe the problem is the system of priorities of the Collegian's Board of Editors. It is high time that the Collegian became a true student newspaper. If this means having Women's Pages, Residential Areas' Pages, RSO Groups' Pages, etc., than this is what should be done.

By readusting its priorities, the Collegian will finally print a newspaper which is truly accountable and responsible to the students.

Joni Mersky, president Southwest Assembly

Re-evaluate pages

To the Editor:

I find the April 18th letter from a group of Crampton women opposing the Collegian Women's Pages extremely disconcerting.

Here is a dorm 185 women strong, located straight across from the Southwest Women's Center, part of a community whose area government's basic goal is "combatting racism and sexism" and the only public voice Crampton puts out is oppressive to its own group.

The Crampton women who wrote the article desire to see the news written by women and others scattered throughout the Collegian*. However, this desire is idealistic and far from possible especially when one is dealing with a predominately male-oriented publication. Given the present restrictions in society towards women, the only possible means of obtaining equality of media space is through segregation. It is therefore extremely positive and vital to have articles written by women and to have these women-written articles reemphasised by putting them under the heading of Women's Pages.*

These Crampton women are concerned that the Women's Pages are going to be devised by solely the women who demanded them. A simple solution to this worry would be if the Crampton women themselves worked on the pages. Therefore they themselves would enlarge the scope of women involved with the Women's Pages.

The Crampton women also feel that women have no right demanding Women's Pages but should "earn the space on a fair and equal basis". This is quite the wording. Did women earn the vote on a fair and equal basis? No, there was a need for demanding to get property rights, employment rights, abortion rights, and many other rights. Women have never gotten anything on a fair and equal basis and therefore demanding is the best and only technique.

I feel these Crampton women should better evaluate their situations and the resources around them. I applaud and thank the women who worked to get the Women's Pages and hope these pages will hilp to bring more unity among the women on campus.

Ann Scanlon

Bogus discount

To the Editor:

About a month ago the Collegian ran an ad for a company called "Albumart". They offered records at very low prices. I thought this might be a good deal, a new album for $2.55, but seemingly not. Now a month later, I have a cancelled check and, alas, no circular piece of P.V.C. This is curious as the ad said that they would ship within 5 days.

Was this a calculated rip-off? If so, does advertising like this appear reguarly in the Collegian*? It might be nice for you to investigate this company as I suspect that others on campus may be as gullible [read trusting] as myself.*

May Day-not Law Day

charlie bagli

May 1st is just around the corner. Here in the U.S. its called "Law Day". Nixon named it that although I'm not sure whose law he was talking abuut. In the past, in the U.S., its been called "Law and Order Day", "Child Protection day", anything but "Mayday - The Workers Day".

Around the world Mayday is the day that holiday or no, millions of workers throw down their tools and march. Last year demonstrations of workers and other oppressed people took place in Italy, France, Canada, Vietnam, China, Nicarauga, Iceland and a host of other countries.

Here in the U.S. though, the rulers have done everything they could to obliterate Mayday - The Workers Day and its significance. That's incredible considering this is where the holdiay was born.

On May 1, 1886 the rising of the working class movement burst like a tidal wave. Eight thousand workers struck in Chicago, 45,000 in New York, 32,000 in Cincinnati, 9,000 in Baltimore, 7,000 in Milwaukee, 4,700 in Boston, 4,250 in Pittsburgh, 3,000 in Detroit, 2,000 in St. Loouis, 1,500 in Washington, and 13,000 in other cities. The immediate issue was the eight hour day. In the factories, the mines and mills, workers were tired of being forced to work 12, 14, and 16 hours a day. In 1886 they stood up and fought together for the eight hour day, some not even waiting for May 1.

It is estimated that nearly 200,000 workers won shorter hours. This determined and united action of the working class against the employing class was an inspiration of international proportion. In 1889 at the International Workers' Congress in Paris, May 1 was designated May Day in honor of the massive demonstrations in the U.S. and the murder of the leaders of this struggle in Chicago.

Since then it has become an international workers holiday. In socialist countries it is a legal holiday and a day of strikes in the capitalist ones. Up until the 1940's there were big marches here in the U.S. also. Since then May day in the U.S. has been changed, distorted and slandered.

That is until the 1970's. Last year there were small but spirited marches or programs in more than forty cities. May Day is beginning to gain popularity again as working people stir.

The recent miners' strike stands as an example of workers standing together against the owners. Men and women in other industries took up the struggle as their own when autoworkers sent thousands of dollars, food and clothing to the miners. Many union locals in steel, teamsters and electronics also sent their strong support.

Mayday is the day working people pull together in an organized way to answer the 1001 abuses of the system of capitalism. In 1886 Mayday meant fighting back for the eight hour day and in 1978 it still means fighting back. It means bringing together the struggles against low wages, poor working conditions, decaying cities and the rents going up while the roof falls in.

Mayday stands for freedom. Mayday is the future freedom from discrimination, and end to having to send sons and daughters to fight wars and finally, no longer having to work your life away for peanuts only to make some boss richer. This is the Mayday Nixon wanted to rename Law Day. Nixon!

For students, Mayday is an opportunity to go with the seeds of the future, the force, the class, that is beginning to stir.

"The workers resolved to proclaim, precisely on this day, the first day of May, when nature is awakening from her winter sleep, when the woods and hills are donning their green mantles and the fields and meadows are adorning themselves with flowers, when the sun shines more warmly, the joy of revival fills the air and nature gives herself up to dancing and rejoicing, they resolved to proclaim loudly and openly to the whole world, precisely on this day, that the workers are bringing spring to mankind and deliverance from the shackles of capitalism, that is the mission of the workers to renovate the world on the basis of freedom and socialism."

Oppression of Women

by James Lewis
Create Women's Pages

The decision by the Collegian staff to deny women their pages remains a serious backward step in ignorance. The only justification for not allowing women their pages is the abundant ignorance of persons about the oppression of women. Women are oppressed people. This is not clear to some because of mis-education about women and what should be right for them.

A crystal clear argument can be made for women that they are oppressed, denied rights, discriminated against.

Women do not control government, economy, medicine, education or law. When a wooman is raped, it is almost impossible for it to be proven in this country. The entire educational system of this country is designed to encourage women to be housewives, child bearing, docile sex objects.

They are made to feel that their only pride is in their physical bodies, their ability to have babies, their ability to clean house. If she decides to want to run her own economy, she is usually on her own. The power of education the force of this indoctrination works by constant mental suggestion, constant mental pressure for women to be homely, beautiful.

The power is in the money, and women are regularly denied employment when qualified, but are encouraged to appear on the cover of Playboy as it is often the only way to come across some money; the men have all the jobs, they decide who gets work and who does not. The woman is screwed into marriage because it is the only supposed security they own, and they are forced to be sexual objects for men, like dolls.

The books in this country are mostly written by men. The views are male, and do not afford understanding about women. Women sell sex, in various forms, because it is the only value that men have placed upon them. You don't see women selling intelligence like men, because men control everything and they are severely threatened by women who do not want to sell their bodies, but their minds.

You all want to study psychology, study mindscrewing, then you all should try and concentrate a little about women's oppression. It is so deeply entrenched, so deeply encouraged, so subtily applied, and so overwhelming powerful that most people have not the slightest awareness of it, and all they do is fight against the change in the system. Unless some serious changes happen in the ethics of the situation, then this injustice will continue, and the women will remain wronged. Yes, she has been wronged by the society which is male powered, and by the men and women who continue to remain in ignoramce of the situation. If people don't think women have a need to have pages specifically designed to address those needs, then people are sickly wacked, without a doubt. Women go through evils that are never reported by mass media, like sterilization abuse. Doctors can literaly lie to a woman, get her to submit to an operation, and cut her tubes so she can't have children. The U.S. Supreme court ruled that doctors are immune from sterilization abuse charges. This is nothing short of murder.

These are facts! The wronged woman will have no power to help her in this country until she can start education about the problem. The necessity for women's pages is completely in order.

Issue not Feminism

By GEORGE SOMMERS

Collegian staff members voted last week 98 to 28 not to print the four daily ad-free women's pages that a certain group was pressuring for. Doubtlessly, the demonstrators are grumbling about the staff being "running dog lackeys of the white male power structure" or some such curse.

The issue at stake, however, is not feminism but freedom of the press. It's funny how restriction of the press is one of the favorite tactics of extremists on both sides of the spectrum — from Communists to Nazis. It's a purely paranoid reaction.

The demonstrators were not even truly representative of the campus female population. Women not involved in the affair brought up the valid point that a segregated women's section was tried some semesters ago, but it failed because there was not enough to write about. While many expressed the valid viewpoint that more women's articles should be included, they disagreed with the idea of a quota system.

The demonstrators' main complaint is that the Collegian is aimed at men. They failed to explain, however, how news about campus or national events could conceivably be turned into issues of concern to one sex only.

Collegian staffers legitimately argued that if one special interest group demanded and received its own section, everyone would want one. Before long, the paper would degenerate into several short blurbs advocating the interests of minority views, and nothing for the general public. One Collegian member said he'd vote for the quota because hjsfelt that it was a step towards getting a special Jewish section. When asked if the Catholics should be allowed their own section as well, he explained that that was different — the Jews were somehow more than just a religion. This type of bickering can only be magnified by news segregation.

The women involved in the demonstration went about it in the wrong way. They sought to make their views know through the negative, destructive tactics of demonstrations and quotas. Surprisingly, the thought never occured to them to simply walk into the Collegian office and submit any article or column they wish to see printed. The way to become part of the legitimate system is to act legitimately. Responsible feminists should take pains to disassociate themselves from the demonstrators' actions.

People and frustration

It is with a great sense of personal relief (and I'm sure much of the student body's as well) that I am returning from "heavy" to 4069520. The past year has been a great educational experience, as it is for any student who, in effect, takes an internship in the "real world." I would advise everyone to get involved in student governance or another extracurricular pursuit because you get an opportunity to learn about the most important subject there is; people.

You also learn the real meaning of the word frustration. Frustration is coming home day after day with stories about administrators (and the SGA heavies aren't much better) who just won't or don't understand what's going on around them. It is this frustration that causes people to take over buildings. It was a long string of frustrations caused by an administration so tied up in its own bureaucracy and heirarchy that it is afraid to demand its higher-ups move on an issue, or even move.

Unfortunately, there are some students who see demonstrations as campaign media events — places to grab the spotlight, standing on chairs, playing on the frustrations of others — while the people who began organizing the event have trouble working around them. Transforming a serious demonstration into a personal campaign media event makes you hope these politicos lose, to be replaced by other candidates who at least will learn how to be frustrated like most of those people who demonstrated in the Chancellor's office. It is an endless circle, a maze with no apparent opening, and even for a rat, frustration is a legitimate feeling.

Even the administration is frustrated with the system. Reorganizing the bureaucracy is an impossibility because, unlike building blocks or organizational charts, the actual bureaucracy is made up of people. Over the years each and every one of those people has carved out their own little niche and if you challenge who goes in which niche, you get clubbed to death. These people with the niches, not unlike the Jets and the Sharks of West Side Story have one constant goal; to protect their turf.

Having watched the process of reorganization once, the only analogy that fits is that of a dead carcass in the desert and hundreds of buzzards ripping it apart, seeing how much meat that they can get for themselves.

Even the Student Government Association, with its tearful, demagogic leaders, can't recognize. They tried like hell all summer, spending literally thousands of dollars on salaries, mine included, to come up with the "master plan." The only thing they forgot to do was ask the students what they wanted. As any politician or baseball freak knows, unless you touch all the bases, even a home run, which this plan wasn't, is only a ground rule double.

The only successful reorganization on this campus was pulled off by former Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, Dr. Robert Gage. To accomplish his reorganization not only did he cover all the bases, inviting everyone and his brother to help carve up the carcass, but he pulled the ultimate in reorg tactics — he resigned his job. Gage also had the pleasure of kicking a few administrative butts in the process.

It was not surprising then, that on the day of the Whitmore takeover, Dr. Gage, now back teaching in the public health school, was seen smiling as he walked out of Whitmore, feeling none of the frustration he felt as VC and knowing that this time the needed reorganization and personnel actions weren't his frustration. And for that he could smile.

Painter vandalizes Van Gogh artwork

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (UPI) — A young painter yesterday slashed two long cuts across Van Gogh's "Self Portrait with the Grey Hat" — the second such attack this month on a priceless work of art by the Dutch painter.

Police said the attacker made two diagonal cuts of 21 inches and 17 inches in the 17-inch by 15-inch painting and its supporting canvas.

They identified the slasher only by his initials — M.R. — his age — 32 — and his profession — painter.

"The attack came at the 5 p.m. closing hour when dozens of visitors were leaving the museum," a spokesman for the Van Gogh Museum said. "The man quitely drew a knife from his clothing and twice slashed through the canvas.

"The attack was almost immediately noticed by some guards who rushed over to him and grabbed him. He did not resist."

Museum officials said they had no immediate estimate of whether the painting could be restored.

The attack was remarkably similar to the April 5 slashing of Van Gogh's "La Berceuse," which hung at the municipal museum next door to the Van Gogh gallery, by a 31-year-old painter identified only as "P.L."

He told police he attacked the painting because he was upset about government subsidy rules for artists.

Amsterdam museums said they made no special security arrangements after the first slashing.

"It is impossible for museums to effectively guard their treasures," a spokesman for the municipal museum said. "It would mean hiding them in the cellars and so the public would not see them at all. It is just one of those sad things."

Charges should be secret

BOSTON (AP) — Charges filed against Superior Court Chief Justice Robert M. Bonin should be a strict secret, Bonin's attorney argued in state Supreme Court yesterday.

Attorney Dean Sargent said the Committee on Judicial Responsibility, which brought the charges against Bonin, may already have violated the judge's rights by raising the secrecy issue in an open session of court Friday.

Bonin, temporarily suspended from the bench by the Supreme Court, was investigated by the committee for attending a gayrights lecture, an action that his critics alleged gave the appearance of favoritism toward Boston-area men awaiting trial on morals charges. The committee also examined his wife's use of a car donated by a client and other matters.

Sargent, arguing before Supreme Court Justice Francis J. Quirico, pointed to several committee rules, all stating that committee proceedings against a judge shall be confidential unless the judge requests otherwise.

He said Robert W. Meserve, special counsel to the committee, may have unintentionally violated privacy rules Friday when he spoke about the Bonin case before open court.

Feds halt nuke plant

MONTAGUE, Mass. (AP) — Construction permit hearings on the proposed $2.3 billion Montague twin nuclear power plant have been postponed by federal officials at least until August.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission's Atomic Safety and Licensing Board deferred the hearings in a decision that cites refusal by state utility regulators to go ahead with the sessions, previously scheduled to start this spring.

The Massachusetts Energy Facilities Siting Council decided last winter that Northeast Utilities' construction timetable had been slowed down so much that hearings should be delayed.

The Town of Montague and Northeast, based in Berlin, Conn., had asked the NRC to proceed with the hearings despite the state's refusal to take part. Originally, the hearings were to be held jointly by the federal and state agencies.

In its decision, the Energy Facilities Siting Council said its authority to review power plant proposals covers only projects due to be completed within 10 years. Northeast recently said it plans to begin operation of its first Montague generator in about 1989.

The NRC said in its recent decision that it would review the situation again in August.

"MY VOTE DOESN'T MATTER ANYWAY, SO WHY SHOULD I BOTHER??"

There are a lot of people who believe this, and a lot of politicians who want you to. If you believe the above statement then keep your mouth shut the next time a politian starts a war or cuts a budget or votes against your favorite cause. You had your chance and blew it. For example:

1968- If one more person in every precinct in the nation had voted for Hubert Humphrey, Richard Nixon would have been put out to pasture six years earlier.

1974- U.S. Senator John Durkin of New Hampshire won his special run-off election against Louis Wyman in a landslide. Why a run-off? Because in the first election Wyman and Durkin tied. And in N.H. the word is out that if UNH students had voted, Gov. Meldron Thompson would have lost his election.

1976- In the Democratic primary for Congress from this district, the winner won by 14 votes.

- If 7000 more people in Ohio Voted for Jerry Ford, Jimmy Carter would be back home shucking peanuts.
- Rent Control lost in Amherst by 725 votes.

YOUR VOTE DOES COUNT

Your Birthday

WEDNESDAY, April 26, 1978

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26

Born today, you are a highly sensitive person who gains more knowledge through intuition than through experience or academics. You enjoy travel, and will spend as much time as you can in faraway places. Your interest in other cultures manifests itself in much collecting, which could turn into a profitable business.

You have a good head for business, though you prefer not to use it except in your own interest. You have no desire to make money from others' business, though if you can do another a business favor, you will. You are very thin-skinned and tend to take offense in much that is merely thoughtlessness.

Some find it difficult to reach you and think you a very private person. In fact you are outgoing, but only after you know another well. What others take for aloofness is really timidity; what they take for reserve is an inability to express yourself well. In time, you should get over both.

Also born on this date are: Carol Burnett, actress; William Shakespeare, poet, playwright.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, APRIL 27

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) -- Counter the opposition with your efforts. Guard against deceptive packaging.

Mitmen travel north, take on Dartmouth

By MEL WEBSTER
Collegian Staff

The UMass baseball team will travel to Hanover, N.H. today to take on the Green of Dartmouth in a 1 p.m. doubleheader.

Minuteman coach Dick Bergquist will send Chris Collins to the mound in the first game and senior Tom Nigro in the second. Nigro pitched only one inning Sunday against Maine and Bergquist said he wants to come back with him right away "to help him get his confidence back."

Collins has pitched in seven games and has compiled a 2-2 record and a 3.29 ERA, the second best on the staff. Nigro has a 2-4 record in eight games and an ERA of 8.76. Bergquist, however says he knows Nigro has the ability "and he just needs to get untracked."

As for Dartmouth, it has compiled a dismal 3-15 record, but is coming off an impressive doubleheader sweep of UNH in which it pounded out 15 runs. Bergquist said he was surprised at the poor record of the Green. One of their losses this season was a 23-0 drubbing at the hands of Connecticut.

Reflecting at the half-way point of the season, Bergquist said he was disappointed with the teams' record. "We've lost a lot of one run games," he commented.

"I feel we can still have a good season as we have either beaten or played good games against the top teams in New England. What we need right now is that Killer Instinct," he added.

The Minutemen go into today's ballgame with some impressive statistics. Outfielder Doug Aylward is the leading hitter in New England with 21 hits in 41 bats for a .512 average. In his last four games he has gone 8 for 14. Pitcher Doug Welenc has the second leading ERA in New England at 1.21 and the most victories with 5.

Outfielder Mike McEvilly and DH-first basemen John Gallagher, both batting .333, are also in the New England top 20 along with Leo Kalinowski and Mark Sullivan. Third baseman Kalinowski, who had six hits in the Maine doubleheader, has raised his average more than 70 points to .313. Shortstop Ed Skribiski has also begun to hit well according to Bergquist.

The Minutemen have been outscored 131-112, but they have outhit their opponents 220-183.

Bergquist admits to being optimistic, but at this point of the season he really feels the Minutemen can make the playoffs. "We know we can play with the best and we just have to go out and do it now," he said.

The 10-16 Minutemen (8-8 North) were rated fifth in New England in yesterday's coaches poll.

Gorillas entertain Hofstra

By RUSS SMITH
Collegian Staff

Today's game against the Flying Dutchmen of Hofstra University is the first in a series of four tough contests in a row that Garber's Gorillas will be hit with between now and a week from this Saturday, May 6th. Following the Hofstra game will be games vs. UNH (Durham this weekend) before both Army and Harvard drop in for games next week. For now, let's just deal with the Minutemen-Dutchmen matchup.

Led by Coach Harry Royal, the Dutchmen are 4-4, having won four of their last five outings. "We got off to a slow start because of the field conditions, but I'd say we've been growing in strength as the season goes on" said Royal.

"Lack of time on a field, snow, and weather conditions in general hindered us at first. Some of the southern teams were able to get a jump on us. We're going to have to stop UMass on the fast break," added Royal.

"They're (Hofstra) one of the few teams that plays a zone defense, similar to the one used in basketball" stated UMass Coach Dick Garber. He added "It works good for them. We practiced a couple plays (yesterday in practice) in case we get hung up with their zone. It has its advantages and disadvantages."

Part of the reason it works is because it attempts to change a team's style of play" he continued.

"You have to pass through a zone defense in order to break it down." commented Garber. "It should be a good game."

The Gorillas are currently 6-3 and coincedentally have also won four of their last five contests also, including three straight. But this games won't come as easily as have the past few against BC, Williams, and Brown.

Hofstra was rated high in the USILA (you can figure that out for yourself) polls early in the season as was UMass.

But following a couple losses to big teams, both squads fell in the ratings; UMass dropped out of the top fifteen following the Syracuse loss; Hofstra also exited early.

Hofstra has won the past couple runins they've had with the Minutemen, but this is their first trip to 'The Pit' as it's called by the Dutchmen players.

Since you have to pass the ball more to break the zone done, there are more chances of a turnover via missed passes and lest we forget, those evasive ground balls. While UMass' passing has been consistent enough not to warrent concern, those g-balls have made the going a little rougher.

'Cross checks ... never mentioned the assistants working with Garber: Mickey Menna, Randy Krutzler, Wayne Ament ... (assistant coach Pete Connolly) ... second issue of Lacrosse '78 is scheduled to be on sale at today's game ... who will hit the post this game? ... game time by the way is 3 p.m. ...

Lord Jeffs top JV batters

By WALT CHERNIAK
Collegian Staff

For the second straight day, the J.V. baseball team received fine pitching, but the hurling of Amherst College was just a little bit better, as they defeated UMass 5-2 here yesterday.

Mark Brown started for the Minutemen, and surrendered only two hits in his six innings, but the Lord Jeffs took advantage of three walks, a hit batsmen and an error to score two third inning runs. Both runs off Brown, who struck out 10, were unearned, as only the run he yielded in the fifth on a two out single was of the earned variety.

UMass closed the margin to 3-1 in the eighth, as Don Roeder scored when the Amherst shortstop mishandled Jason Thomas' ground ball and threw too late to first.

The Lord Jeffs pushed across two runs in the ninth against reliever Mark Waslick, however, and took a 5-1 lead into the bottom of the inning.

With two outs, Jim Aulenback doubled, and scored on a single by Mark Austin, but it wasn't enough, as the game ended with Minutemen on second and third. Coach Jim Bedard, though, was not all that displeased with his team's performance.

"We played pretty well, we made a couple of mistakes, but we just didn't hit. They (Amherst) got some pretty good pitching."

Both UMass and Amherst were stymied offensively, as each side collected only five hits. The loss drops the J.V. baseball record to 7-4. This afternoon they travel to New Hampshire to face Dartmouth in a 1:00 p.m. doubleheader.

Gazelles host Bears; shoot for sixth win

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

Winning is the name of the game for the undefeated UMass women's lacrosse team.

Coming off of a 12-4 victory over Williams College Thursday, the stickers (5-0) today will face Bridgewater State in a home game at NOPE, 3 p.m.

According to Coach Frank Garahan, things look good for yet another win.

Bridgewater state enters the competition with three losses and no wins.

'But the Bridgewater team is not to be underestimated," said Garahan. "They have a good program, and are coached by an excellent lacrosse player, Coach Ann Coakley."

Garahan said that the UMass women look to be in especially good form, as they will work to stay fit for a tough competition against the University of New Hampshire on Saturday.

"We're hoping to keep the level of play up," he stressed. "The team has been working on fundamentals, looking to execute as well as it can."

In competition against Williams last week, the UMass defense was not really up to par. Bridgewater shouldn't count on this for today's game, though the defense has been working hard, according to Garahan.

He also cited three people on the bench who have been doing especially well of late.

"Laura O'Neil, a defensive wing, Sue Kibling, an attack wing, and Joan Bulman, on defense, are really coming on strong," he said.

As for scoring ability, the UMass team seems to be well-endowed with talent. With 53 goals in five games, the women are averaging over 10 goals per game. What more need be said.

Bridgewater Coach Coakley said of today's competition, "I really don't know ... we hope to give them a good contest."

UMass hopes to give them a sound defeat.

JV action does not look to be so predictable, however, as an undefeated (3-0) UMass team meets head to head with an undefeated (2-0) Bridgewater team.

In action against Williams last week, the team sneaked past with a 3-2, last minute victory.

The winning goal scored while playing one man short, however, the stickers hope to be overpowering with a full squad.

Chimps dumped for first loss

By MICHAEL MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

Naval Academy Prep rode the back of attackman Jim Metzger (5 goals-3 assists), to rally from a 10-9 deficit in the fourth quarter and defeated the men's J.V. lacrosse team 13-11.

It was a bitter defeat for the Chimps to take, as they had overcome a 5-2 deficit to lead 9-5 three minutes into the second half.

The game had evey ingredient for a thriller, two inspired teams, hard hitting, disputed goals, and officiating bizarre enough to leave both coaches basket cases by the fourth quarter.

In the first quarter, Naval Prep took advantage of some sloppy UMass defensive play to take a 2-0 lead into the second quarter. In the second period, Naval Prep again dominated, and if it hadn't been for a brief UMass flurry, (2 goals in 12 seconds), and the outstanding play of goalie Ray McKinney, the Chimps were in danger of being blown right off the field with five minutes to play in the first half.

But with the score 5-2, and time running out in the first half, the UMass offense finally got untracked. Dickie Thomas scored at 10:38, taking a pass from Greg McKinney, faking a defender and bouncing the ball into the cage. McKinney followed 20 seconds later to make it 5-4, pouncing on a loose ball and drilling it past the surprised Naval Prep netminder.

UMass tied it two minutes later, as Paul Kinnane fired a blazing backhand into the top left corner of the net, and took the lead just before the half as Jeff Davies finished a Greg McKinney rush to make it 6-5.

The four goals in four minutes rally left the Naval Prep defense in a state of confusion, a condition that continued into the second half as UMass scored three times in the first three minutes of the half to take a 9-5 lead. Jeff Davis finished a pretty passing play at 1:21, and Kevin Allen and Burke Bero scored 8 seconds apart at 3:35 and 3:43.

The tempo of the game had swung completely in UMass' favor, when Prep's Jim Metzger netted the first of his four second half goals on an outstanding individual effort, taking the ball from the corner and beating two UMass defenders to score from point blank range.

The Preps made it 9-7 on a mystery goal at 9:29. Ray McKinney appeared to have the ball in his stick when the referees ruled that the ball had crossed the plane of the goal, and vociferous protest aside, Prep was within two goals.

Metzger pulled Prep to within one 30 seconds later on another unassisted goal, and suddenly it was UMass that was beginning to unravel.

Kevin Allen stopped the Prep run at 11:58, taking a Paul Kinnane feed and firing through a screen to give UMsss a 10-8 lead.

But Ron Caswell scored for Prep, on the man advantage, from Metzger and Prep was within one going into the fourth quarter, 10-9.

Naval Prep stormed to a 12-10 lead in an extremely rough fourth quarter on two unassisted goals by Metzger (remember this name lacrosse fans), and a goal by Dave Jones, set by, yes Metzger.

Jeff Davis made it 12-11 with 6 minutes left on only the second man-up situation that UMass got in a very rough game. Davis' goal inspired the Chimps, who stormed the Prep zone but were unable to come up with the equlaizer.

Prep scored with 30 seconds left, with Ron Caswell scoring after Metzger had killed off most of the last two minutes, and the issue was closed 13-11.

A dissapointed coach Peter Connolly praised his teams play, saying, "We never gave up, even when we were down early, and we battled to the end."

The loss drops the J.V.'s record to 5-1 while Naval Prep improves theirs to 6-1.

Heyl paces netmen over Springfield, 6-3

By MICHAEL SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

Senior captain Steve Heyl's victories in singles and doubles led the UMass men's tennis team to a 6-3 win over Springfield College here yesterday.

Heyl, who holds a 4-2 record in singles, easily defeated Brian Cormier 6-3, 6-0 to give UMass a 3-3 split in the singles matches.

Then, with UMass leading 4-3 after one doubles match, Heyl and partner Keith Hovland dropped their first set 6-2 to Cormier and Gregg Tomberlin, but exploded to win the match in the final two sets 6-2, 6-2 and clinch the victory for UMass.

UMass won the final match to sweep the doubles.

"They played good in the first set," Heyl said. "We just sat back. We didn't use our heads."

Heyl and Hovland changed tactics in the second set and used the Austrailian formation, where the server and netman line up on the same side of the court at the start of each point.

"That shook them up," Heyl said. "They didn't do anything with their return (of service)."

Heyl and Hovland kept the Springfield duo off balance with an unpredictable mixture of soft shots, lobs and hard hitting.

"They played out of their heads," said Tomberlin.

Springfield found the chilly wind and overcast skies more suitable than UMass in the early going. The situation looked grim for UMass when its top two singles players lost, but wins by Heyl and freshmen Mark Huetteman and Sergio Strepman kept the Minutemen in the match.

Springfield's Howard Shultz defeated Alan Green 6-4, 6-4 in the first singles match. Shultz hit crisp net vollies and was aided by Green's frequent double faults.

UMass' Rickey Sharton dropped the second match to Art Snow 6-4, 6-3. Sharton took the lead in several games but was unable to finish them off.

Heyl won the third match while Huetteman dominated the fourth and defeated Rob Furlani 6-0, 6-3 . Furlani attacked the net often only to watch Huetteman's sizzling passing shots sail by.

In the fifth match, Tommberlin outclassed UMass' Dave Nowak 6-3, 6-2 for Springfield's third and final point.

Strepman's methodical, steady play gave him a 6-1, 6-3 victory over Brian Cormier's brother Steve in the final singles match.

The UMass doubles sweep started with a quick victory by Nowak and Huetteman over Furlani and Ben Gaieski, 6-3, 6-2, which was followed by the Heyl-Hovland clincher.

A vengeful team of Green and Sharton made up for their down fall in singles by defeating Shultz and Snow 6-7 (5-2 tie breaker) 6-1, 6-4 for the final UMass point.

Golfers grab tri-match

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass Mens golf team ended its string of second place finishes yesterday, as they got a clutch round of 78 from junior Eric Goldstein, playing in his first for the Minutemen, and managed to squeak out a victory over Providence College and Harvard in a triangular match played at Kirkbrae Country Club in Lincoln R.I.

The Minutemen, who put together three rounds in the seventies for the first time this year, finished with a 477 aggregate. Providence finished a slim one stroke back at 478, Harvard at 481.

The match, played in cold, windy weather, was a nail-biter all the way to the finish. With Goldstein playing in the seventh position, the only UMass player left on the course, the Minutemen trailed Providence and Harvard by one shot. Goldstein came in with a 78, two shots better than his counterpart from Providence and five atop Harvard's seventh man.

The low scorer for the Minutemen was senior Chuck Dempsey, who despite trouble with his irons, scored well, finishing with a 76 stroke off the low medalist pace of 75, shot by Dave Paxton of Harvard.

Rounding out the UMass scoring: Team captain Jim McDermott continued his fine play, as he turned in a 77, John Cibrowski fired an 80, Jon Lien had an 81, Bill (Soup) Campbell had a disappointing 85, and Steve Channen had an 87, which did not figure in the best six of seven scores format.

UMass alternate Mark Duggan fired a 77, one of the best rounds of the day, that unfortunately did not count in the scoring.

Matt Ziti and Collin Ahern were the low scorers for Providence, each man turning in a 77.

Coach Ed Vlach was very pleased with the win, which came over a very tough team in Providence, and was particularly encouraged by the low numbers turned in by Goldstein and Duggan. "I've been lucky," said Vlach, "Each time I put new people in the lineup, they give me a boost."

With the Salem State and New England Tournaments coming up, Vlach said he was still uncertain of his lineup. Vlach said he would take a good look at all his players Friday, when the team takes on Sienna College at Hickory Ridge, with the best five making the trip to Manchester for the first big tournament of the year.

Globetrotter Lemon stabbed; wife charged with assault

NEW YORK [UPI] - Meadowlark Lemon, known as the "Clown Prince of Basketball" for his antics with the Harlem Globetrotters, was stabbed in the back by his wife on a Manhattan street last night, police reported.

The 45-year-old Lemon, a veteran of more than two decades with the Globetrotters, was reported in stable condition at Bellevue Hospital.

Police said Lemon was driving down a midtown street about 5:30 p.m. and his wife, Willie, 40, was following him in another auto.

According to police, Mrs. Lemon kept ramming her car into the auto her husband was driving.

Lemon spotted police officers Richard Myers and James Bohdoherty standing on a corner and got out of his car to speak to them.

At that point, according to police, Mrs. Lemon jumped out of her car and stabbed him in the back with a steak knife.

The officers aided Lemon and arrested his wife on a charge of first degree assault.

Police said the couple resides in Sierra Vista, Ariz., and they were uncertain of why the two were in New York Tuesday or the reason for the dispute.

The Lemons were married in 1955 in Wilmington, N.C., where they both grew up.

Lee notches 4th as Sox Win

MILWAUKEE [UPI] - Jim Rice and Carl Yastrzemski each drove in a pair of runs to help Bill Lee to his fourth triumph without a defeat and lead the Boston Red Sox to a 4-3 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

The Red Sox staked Lee, who joined California's Frank Tanana and Kansas City's Paul Splittoreff as the major league's only four game winners, to a 4-0 lead by scoring a pair of runs in each of the first two innings.

Jerry Remy singled off Brewer starter and loser Jerry Augustine, 3-2, to open the game, advanced to second when shortstop Paul Molitor committed an error on Rick Burleson's ground ball and scored on Rice's single. Burleson then scored on a single by Yastrzemski.

In the second inning, Remy singled, Burleson scored on Yastrzemsdki's gound out. Augustine then held Boston, now 11-5, in check the rest of the way by giving up only three hits over the last seven innings.

Gorman Thomas' sixth home run of the season in the fourth inning got Milwaukee a run and the Brewers added an unearned run in the fifth when Buck Martiez, who had walked, scored as Lee threw the ball into center field after fielding Cecil Cooper's grounder.

A solo home run by Larry Hisle, his sixth, in the sixth inning brought the Brewers to within a run, but after Cooper singled with two out in the seventh, Dick Drago relieved Lee and blanked the Brewers the rest of the way to earn his second save of the season.

The envelope please

At the end of the regular season, the NBA sees it fit to heap upon its members three major awards, the MVP, Rookie of the year, and Coach of the year honors. The leading candidates for the awards this year respectively are George Gervin and David Thompson, Marques Johnson, Bernard King and Walter Davis, and Hubie Brown and Lenny Wilkens.

However, the purpose at hand is to enlighten you to some of the awards and winners that the league does not make public each year.

Big things come in small packages award. To Calvin Murphy, Houston Rockets who shouldered all the responsibility for the team when Rudy T. was injured.

Small things come in big packages award. To Tom Burleson, Kansas City Kings. 7'3" of bench material.

Revolving door award. To Bird Averitt, Buffalo Braves. The Bird's number of times on and off of the Braves' roster was double that of his scoring output for 1978.

Golden Oldies award. To John Havlicek. Immortal above all other immortals.

Superman award [aka Go take a flying leap award]. To Bob McAdoo, New York Knicks, who did for the Knicks what Richard Nixon did for honesty in politics.

Lost leader award. To Ken Charles, Atlanta Hawks number one guard who suddenly found himself unemployed when owner Ted Turner discovered that Charles' salary exceeded $100,000.

Faded glory award. To Jamaal Wilkes, Los Angeles, and E.C. Coleman, Golden State. Both were signed for big bucks as free agents and both turned out to be worth less than the paper their contracts were printed on.

Gone and forgotten award. To Brian Taylor, Denver Nuggets (formerly). Taylor walked out on the Nuggets at the beginning of the season with a contract dispute and now Denver can't even remember who he is.

Kiss it and make it feel better award. To Walt Frazier, Cleveland Cavaliers. Walt missed the latter half of the season with a sprianed little toe. The healing process is greatly slowed when you reach Frazier's age.

Back in the saddle again award. To Cazzie Russell, Chicago Bulls. Relegated to a seat behind a microphone and the lowly job as a CBS analyst, Cazzie was approached by the Chicago Bulls and offered a roster space as a forward which he quickly accepted.

Only the good die young award. To Dennis Awtrey, Phoenix Suns, who manages to make the team every year despite an obvious lack of talent.

Lonely hearts award. To Randy Smith, Buffalo Braves, the lone survivor of the 76-77 Braves and likely to be the lone survivor of the 77-78 Braves.

Mr. Dependability award. To Ron Boone, Kansas City Kings, who hasn't missed a basketball game since he started playing in elementary school. He has now played in 826 consecutive pro games.

Back from the dead award. To Zaid Abdul Aziz, Houston Rockets, who returned from obscurity and a ten day Celtics contract to the Houston Rockets and a firm postion on their weakened roster.

Moonlighting award. To John Lucas, Houston Rockets or John Lucas, Golden Gaters, World Team Tennis, whichever you prefer.

Life is not a bowl of cherrie's award. To Bill Walton, Portland Trailblazers, who has seen more hospital beds in his career than basketball courts.

You may now applaud the winners.

Refund forms available for damages

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

Forms will soon be available for students to make claims for damage done to personal property in dormitory rooms, if the damage was caused by faulty maintenance of the dorm, according to Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury.

"I saw on my desk today a copy of one," Woodbury said, and forms should soon be available to students at the three offices or area management coordinators in Johnson House in Northeast, McIntyre House in Central and Kennedy in Southwest.

An agreement between students and administrators allowing students to collect money for damages to personal property, was struck as a result of the student occupation of Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery's Whitmore office. Students occupied the office April 6 and 7 and issued a set of demands to the University concerning dormitory living conditions, subsequently accepted by administrators.

If students return the claim form to the area coordinator offices on Monday, May 1, they may receive refund checks from the University by the end of the semester, according to Michael Brennan, who has been working on the claims for the Student Organizing Project, a student-funded group.

Woodbury used damage done to textbooks if a room roof has been leaking as an example.

Brennan said the administration declined to let the students working for the claims have access to campus mailboxes to distribute information about the claims.

"With the deadline May first, it is incumbent on the (student) committee to inform the students," Brennan said.

But John Finley, area coordinator for Southwest, in charge of negotiating with the students, attempted a hand delivered ad to the Collegian concerning reimbursements, Brennan said. The ad is scheduled to appear in Friday's paper.

If students return their forms after May 1, there is no guarantee about when the rebates will be received by students, Brennan said, but it would probably be sometime in the summer.

Woodbury yesterday said the claims procedure has existed before, but that the negotiations have resulted in "a refinement in that procedure." The money will come out of dorm rent funds, he said.

One problem which remains to be negotiated is the formation of a review board, to review claims and determine their authenticity, Brennan said.

If students feel their claim has not received proper attention from the review board, they will be able to file a grievance at the student attorney general's office in the Student Union.

Union says Whitmore breaks talks

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

The faculty union yesterday charged the administration with walking out of contract talks Monday and breaking off the negotiations.

"The management team said they would negotiate no further," said Mass. Society of Professors Chairman James E. Cathey. What they wanted us to accept is less than we have now."

The dispute arose over personnel policies, which include faculty evaluation. Details of the proposals of each side could not be obtained.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, who is also UMass vice-president in charge of faculty relations, disagreed and said he thought "administration personnel leaving the session didn't mean any more than any other thing."

The union has scheduled a meeting for tomorrow to discuss the matter, and to consider possible job action, such as a strike.

Bromery said the negotiations "were at a point where further discussion wasn't going anywhere."

Cathey said the administration team walked out when it would not accept the union demand on personnel policy.

"They walked out. There was no agreement to recess," Cathey said. "We did not want to give in (on the personnel matter) and when we didn't, they said they refused to talk to us any further."

Bromery said the talks came to the point where they could not progress further because the union "backed-off" on its personnel policy proposal after it returned from a dinner-time recess. He said the union asked to consider a position that fell short of what the two sides had already discussed.

"Negotiations have not reached the point where we are not talking to each other," Bromery said. "What we're saying is that the union should decide where it wants to go and to hold its position."

Bromery did say the two sides "left the table with the gap between them larger than it was before."

Cathey said the administration proposal could hurt faculty members, and therefore was unacceptable to the MSP.

Senate increases student activities fee by $8

By CINDY REGET
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night voted to increase the Student Activities Tax Fund by $8 effective next semester.

The 44 to 7 vote is an acceptance by the senate of a recommendation by the senate budget committee to increase the fee by $8.

The fee increase from $64 to $72 will fund increased costs of the Transit Service and cost-of-living increases mandated by Recognized Student Organization union contracts.

In other business, the senate passed a resolution calling for the add-drop and pass-fail periods to be extended to four weeks, discussed possible senate action on re-allocating Collegian space and equipment, swore in new Student Government Association co-Presidents Donald Bishop and Robert Dion, and heard a farewell speech by outgoing co-Presidents Jon Hite and Pinky Batiste.

Senate discussion on the fee increase centered around whether money from the increase should be placed in a trust fund until buses on order are equipped for the handicapped. Also discussed is whether the fee increase, passed after an apparent ultimatum from the University administration, would be a precedent for future senate action. (See related story, page 3.)

"I do agree we should increase the fee," said Dion. "The benefits of such an increase outweigh the disadvantages."

Dion said the senate could still "maintain a hold" on the bus system if it raised the fee.

Dion said the administration will pay for the construction of a $140,000 new bus repair facility, and that students will have a 7-2 majority on the Transit Advisory Committee under the funding.

A memo from the senate academic affairs committee said the add-drop period should be extended to provide students necessary time to properly choose courses.

The increase in the pass-fail period would be to coincide with the add-drop period to provide students with the time to "make this important decision."

The discussion on re-allocation of Collegian space and equipment followed the passage of a senate motion two weeks ago to freeze the newspaper's funding and confiscate its equipment if it did not grant four ad-free women's pages per week. The senate rescinded the motion in the face of a possible lawsuit by the Collegian on First Amendment violations.

"Freedom of expression," said Speaker Brian DeLima, "should be guaranteed to everyone. Hopefully, we the senate can give our support to the women, but we should not use pressure tactics."

Discussion on re-allocation of the Collegian's space and equipment generally involved clarification of the women's issue and no decision was reached.

Senate members were urged to boycott the paper by Senator Susan Birmingham.

Outgoing co-President Jon A. Hite thanked the senate for the time and effort the body had devoted to him during his term of office.

Hite cautioned new senate members against being afraid to ask questions, to clarify issues, and to rely on the "absolute authority" of the SGA presidents.

The comments of incoming co-Presidents Bishop and Dion were not available at press time.

Volunteers work with high school students in alternative program

" Because classes are so small the teachers become more like older brothers and sisters than authority figures"

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Whether you are interested in computers or wood carving, your knowledge could help a high school student to graduate, and also earn UMass credits.

"We don't expect people to be totally experienced and without need for support. The biggest thing volunteers can offer is themselves," said Marc Simon, head teacher at the UMass Alternative High School.

The Alternative Learning Program, established at Hampshire College in Feb. '74 and UMass in Sept. '75, enrolls 15 students from age 15-18 whose "needs were not met in one form or another at their home high schools, so they were referred to us," said Simon.

"Because classes are so small the teachers become more like older brothers and sisters than authority figures," said Simon.

"Most of them have found a community here. School has a lot to offer them," said Kerry Homstead, a School of Education graduate.

The students attend school from 8:30 to 2:30 and transportation is provided by their town.

Presently there are 20 volunteers and two full-time staff members in the program, funded by Mass. Low Chapter 766, and members applications are now being accepted for the fall semester.

"Volunteers in the past have not been mainly from the School of Ed., but from a lot of different departments," said Homstead.

Volunteers can earn up to six credits and are offered a seminar in "Teaching in an Alternative High School".

The seminar is one result of the UMass alliance with the School of Ed. It will give the volunteers a representative idea of what teaching in an alternative high school would be like and make it an appealing place for people to develop their skills," said Homstead.

Volunteers teach three times weekly for one hour-and-15 minutes with three to five students.

"Within any given subject area, the student teacher meets with the students and defines what they want to do. For example, English could be poetry, creative writing or journalism," said Simon.

Classes are set up by mutual agreement between the students and teacher who agree on a written contract, according to Simon.

He said the contract defines the subject, how it will be taught, required work, and criteria for evaluation.

Classes are held at the Alternative Learning Program, located in Cottage B behind Worcester Dining Commons, or in such areas as other dining commons, outdoor obstacle course and the Campus Center, according to Simon.

"Some students feel they can go back to high school and make it. Some go on to other programs like work study and some graduate early and go on to college. They need an individual learning atmosphere in order to be successful," said Simon.

"The small classes provide the student teachers with a rare teaching experience in order to develop the curriculum they're interested in. It's a give and take between the teachers and students," said Homstead.

Simon said one of the "strong components" of the program is that "the counseling is built in an informal way between students and teachers."

"Because classes are so small, the teachers become more like older brothers and sisters than authority figures," said Simon.

Meetings are held during the semester for the student teachers to compare ideas and curriculum, according to Homstead.

Open houses with parents and friends of the students are also held once a semester, said Simon.

"There's not much of a requirement for volunteers for previous experience. The application process of the student teacher is to see if the program fits our needs and theirs," said Homstead.

"We want to identify volunteers for the fall semester now so people can adjust their schedules with ours ahead of time," said Simon.

"We design the school differently every semester depending upon the time the student teacher can put in," said Homstead.

Many of the volunteers decide to go into teaching and many say this was "their best UMass experience," according to Homstead.

Leslie Miller, a 16-year-old junior from South Hadley quit school before she decided to "check out" the Alternative high school.

"Now I'm getting A's instead of F's," said Miller, whose favorite classes were sculpture and harmonica.

"I felt it'd be a second chance," said Garth Leadbetter, 16, from Amherst. "There were too many social games to play in high school."

Argentinian novelist to speak on human rights

"Facism and Military Dictatorship in the Southern Cone: Argentina, Chile, and Uruguay," will be the topic of a talk by David Vinas on May 1 in Campus Center 165 at 8 p.m.

Vinas is a noted Argentinian novelist and critic. His novel "Men on Horseback" about the Argentinian military, won the Casa de Las Americas prize in 1967.

Vinas' talk will focus on the growing political repression in and denial of human rights in Latin America.

Officers, referendum on Southwest ballot

Southwest residents go to the polls today to elect a president, vice-president, treasurer, and communications coordinator.

Also on the ballot will be a referendum on whether to light the basketball courts in the Southwest Horseshoe.

All Southwest residents are eligible to vote and may do so by presenting a valid student ID in the appropriate dining commons. Students living from Mackimmie south should vote in Berkshire dining commons, while residents from Crampton north should vote in Hampshire dining commons. Polls in Berkshire are open from 10:30 a.m.-7:00 p.m. Polls in Hampshire will be open from 11:00 a.m.-6:30 p.m.

Feminist to speak on 'math anxiety'

Sheila Tobias, feminist scholar and associate provost at Wesleyan University will speak tonight at 8 p.m. in the Hampden Student Center in Southwest on "Overcoming Math Anxiety".

The event will conclude the spring segment of the Master-Director's Series, which is designed to bring persons of unusual interest to the Southwest area.

Contraceptive studied; condom use advised

A spokeswoman for the University Health Services contraceptive clinic yesterday said that pending the results of a national study, a condom should be used with the new over-the-counter birth control Encare Oval.

Encare Oval is a contraceptive tablet made in West Germany. The manufacturers claim the tablet has a 99.4 success rate of preventing pregnancy. However, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration has said the tablet has only an 85% rate.

Construction begins on new Hadley mall

Construction has started on Hadley's Hampshire Mall, a $5 million Pyramid Corporation project that will house as many as 70 stores after its scheduled opening this fall.

Groundbreaking officially began April 20, although preliminary excavation had already begun on the 57.2-acre site across South Maple Street from Mountain Farms Mall on the south side of Route 9.

Pyramic Co. has posted $500,000 bond to insure the town it follow its plans with regards to drainage, traffic flow within the mall, landscaping and architectural design, according to Town Planner Joseph F. Zgrodnik.

An economic impact report conducted by the Hampshire County Planning Office will not be completed until mid-May, County Planner Richard M. Gaffney said yesterday. The report will then be presented to the Hampshire County Commissioners.

Campus groups split on bus funds

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

Undergraduate Student Senate leaders and University administrators disagree on the method by which the proposal to cover the cost of funding the student transit service was reached.

The senate last night voted 44-7 to increase by $8 per year the Student Activities Trust Fund fee to pay for 26 new buses added to the transit system for the fall.

Part of the $8 will also be used to pay for Recognized Student Organization cost of living increases.

Senate budget committee members, who had submitted the proposal accepted last night, charged it was developed under pressure from the administration.

Senate Budget Committee co-chairman Alfred Drewes, in the budget hearing Tuesday when the proposal was made, said the administration gave the senate an ultimatum to either fund the entire budget or they would take over funding, increasing the students' bill by $10 to cover the cost.

Administrators yesterday denied charges they pressured the decision.

UMass Budget Director George Beatty, Jr. yesterday said the administration did not issue the senate an ultimatum, but instead offered the senate the opportunity to devise their own proposal.

The accepted proposal grants three concessions by the administration, said Student Government Association Co-President elect Bob Dion.

The concessions include: establishment of a Transit Advisory Board to oversee the transit system; restriction on parking rate increases to core and academic lots (but not to residential and peripheral lots); and a bus repair facility built at a cost to the administration.

The Transit Advisory Board will have seven students and two administrators. One administrator will be designated by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery while the other will be the Director of Balanced Transportation and Parking.

Had the senate budget committee not devised a proposal, the administration was ready to submit their proposal which would set up a separate Transit Service Trust Fund, Beatty said.

The administration's proposal had called for a $10 line item bill, but would not have increased the SATF cost to students.

"Once you have a line item bill, students lose control of the money," Drewes said. "Our option is to keep the funding ourselves and raise the fee," he added.

Drewes yesterday said he and others working on the bus funding spent January in "absurd negotiations with the administation."

"They had no intention of putting forward our proposals," he said. "They (administration) kept stalling us until it came to this."

Dion last night questioned the control of the bus funding.

"We (the students) don't have much control of it anyway," he said. "The administration decided to add the 26 new buses which arefunded by the students."

"No one likes it but its something we have to live with," former SGA co-president Jon Hite last night said.

Hite said he and Jay Martus next week will sponsor an amendment placing the money for bus funding into an escrow fund until the UMass Board of Trustees makes a policy decision concerning transit service for the handicapped. He said the fund raising would be made regardless of the Trustees' decision.

"All we want is a decision, under the scrutiny of the Commonwealth, as to the service for the handicapped," Hite said.

UMass officials say one rape reported here this year

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

According to spokesperson at the UMass Department of Public Safety and the Everywomen's Center, only one on-campus rape has been reported since January.

That one case involves two UMass students. The woman, who was raped on Feb. 24 said she never met the alleged rapist before the night she was attacked in a bathroom in a UMass office building. That case will be tried in Hampshire County Superior Court in the coming months.

According to Ruth Fessenden from the Rape Counselor Advocacy program at the Everywoman's Center, "There's only one so far as we know," she said.

Also, only one rape was reported to UMass police last year during November of 1977. The defendant was arrested by UMass police within three days. The case went to Hampshire County District Court in Northampton, where it was thrown out in an unusual second "probable cause hearing,' according to Sgt. Philip J. Cavanaugh of the UMass police.

A probable cause hearing is a pre-trial hearing to determine if the prosecution has adequate evidence to send the case to review by the Grand Jury. In this case, two hearings were held. The first determined that there was adequate evidence, the second did not.

"In the last three rapes on campus, the defendants have been apprehended within 72 hours," UMass director of Security Saul Chaffin said.

Sgt. Cavanaugh, a detective on the UMass police force, discounted a recent letter to the editor in the Collegian which claimed that seven rapes had occurred in the Hills building.

"It's absolutely ludicrous," Cavanaugh said.

Fessenden also said she had no knowledge of the seven rumored rapes in the Hills building.

She said it is important for people to be aware of the threat of rape, but "not to panic." She said it can be self-perpetuating when people talk about rapes that have not occured.

The Everywomen's Center has dealt with six rapes this year, but only one occurred on campus. Some took place in Holyoke and Springfield, others did not take place this year, but have only come to light since January.

The rape counselor advocacy program also deals with other sex offenses including attempted rape, sexual assault, sexual harrassment, sexual intimidation and indecent exposure. They have had 18 calls in those areas, according to Fessenden.

Fessenden also pointed out that offenses are occurring without being reported. "We know that there's stuff happening that hasn't been reported," she said.

A person who has been raped may report it to the Everywoman's Center rape counselor advocacy program, to the Health Services or the the UMass police. A counselor is assigned to the victim to provide whatever aid necessary.

For the police to catch the rapist, the time element is important. First, there is a danger to the community as long as the rapist is free. Second, the less time between the notification and the rape, the better the chance of catching the offender.

The UMass police said they are aware of the dangers on campus, rape included. "We have, and will continue to place any sexual assault against women, men and children as the highest priority and that will continue to be our priority," Chafin said.

Student dies in France; body flown to Virginia

The body of a UMass exchange student, William H. Clark, was flown home to his family and his native Virginia yesterday from France, where he died Friday, April 15, following an automobile accident in Besancon. He was 24.

Clark was in France attending school at the University of Angers under a UMass exchange program.

According to Barbara Burn, head of International Programs at UMass, French officials said Clark had been hitch-hiking when the car he was riding in collided with another on April 14. Burn said Clark was returning to Angers at the time, after having spent a spring vacation traveling.

Burn, who was enroute to France when she learned of the death, said an ecumenical funeral ceremony was held for Clark on April 21 at the University of Angers. Although the people within the UMass group numbered less than 50, Burn said, more than 250 turned out for the ceremony.

The ceremony, she said, was officiated at by Monsignor Carton, the director of the Catholic university's Center for International French Studies.

According to a professor in the French department, a student with the UMass program read the eulogy.

Burn praised UMass professor Seymour Weiner, director of the Angers program, for his quick and responsible handling of the details, along with the American Consulate at Strasbourg, for seeing to the return of Clark's body.

In Angers, the UMass students contributed a total of $700 to help defray the expenses incurred by Clark's family in reclaiming his body, according to Burn. To this fund, she said, will be added a $500 contribution from International Programs.

Clark was one of eight children of Mr. and Mrs. Earl A. Clark, 1143 Manchester Avenue, Norfolk, Virginia. A sophomore political science major, he came to UMass last year after attending several other schools, including Old Dominican University in Virginia.

Quits job to run for DA

Candidate campaigning full time

EDITOR'S NOTE: The Collegian in the next few weeks will publish personal profiles of the five Democrats and two Republicans who have declared their candidacies for the district attorney's office in Franklin and Hampshire counties. The office next year becomes a full-time position for the first time, and the incumbent has decided not to seek reelection. This is the first in the series.

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

Jonathan Z. Souweine is the only candidate running for the district attorney's office in Franklin and Hampshire counties who has quit his job to campaign full-time for a primary election five months away.

It is probably the only way Souweine, a "newcomer" to the area, will be able to defeat four other Democrats who have family or political inroads to the office.

Souweine is also probably the only candidate counting on votes from the UMass and Five College community to help deliver him the election, and he's working daily to earn those votes.

Souweine says the district attorney's office, and the criminal justice system itself, is the one arm of the government that can most affect the personal lives of citizens. Yet, not too many people are aware of the practices of the criminal justice system, he says.

On a more local level, Souweine says younger people comprise a 9 percent of the population in the two counties, yet account for 33 percent of the people processed through the county courts.

And Souweine, a 30-year-old graduate of Harvard Law School and native of New York, says as the district attorney he would educate the public on the procedures of the court system.

But first Souweine must collect enough votes in the September primary to beat four other candidates who themselves or their families have roots in area politics and the county courts.

Souweine and his supporters have a table on the Campus Center Concourse daily to collect nomination signatures. They've also purchased Collegian ad space with the Souweine name urging students to register as Amherst voters.

Today is the third day a table for voter registration will be on the campus center concourse. Town officials estimate 300 people registered at the concourse table this week.

The area college vote in the past has been "predictable," according to one political observer. It's also been "unreliable," and Souweine has been campaigning elsewhere to break into established political bases.

Souweine's four primary opponents already hold jobs in some phase of the Hampshire County court system. Donal T. Dunphy and Michael Ryan are both public defenders and local attorneys. Dunphy's brother is a former mayor of Northampton, and Ryan's father a district court judge.

Salvatore Polito is the clerk of Hampshire County Superior Court, district attorney to John M. Callahan, the incumbant not seeking re-election.

Polito, the only candidate who has run for an office before, is said to have the strongest voting base in Hampshire County and Ryan, the strongest in Northampton.

The Souweine camp figures no one candidate will capture a large percentage of the vote total in the Easthampton-Northampton area to jump ahead in the race, because three candidates will be fighting for their neighborhood vote. Souweine, who lives in Pelham, also plans on support from precincts in the Smith College area, where he developed contacts in his work as executive director of MassPIRG and assistant to the state attorney general, a position he left earlier this spring.

Souweine says his managerial work with volunteers and college students provides him with the experience needed to handle a district attorney's office.

His year in the attorney general's office has given Souweine insight to court procedures that he says need reform.

Souweine says the district attorney's office should work with local police departments to coordinate a consistent system of issuing criminal charges against defendants to save time and personal and financial expense.

Souweine says the present system, in which individual police officers determine the number of citations, can result in unnecessary charges that are dropped during the trial.

Souweine said he would also like to see Hampshire and Franklin counties adopt the "creative sentencing" used in Norfolk County for rehabilitating repeat-criminals. This system, which Souweine says involves sentencing defendants to varying degrees of social work, will help decrease the number of repeat-criminals arrested shortly after jail terms.

Post-acceptance recruiting not UM admissions policy

By MYRNA HERSHMAN
Collegian Staff

UMass bucks the national trend of heavy post-acceptance recruiting of freshmen students, according to Dean of Admissions William D. Tunis.

The University boasts a 12.3 percent increase in fall applicants although the admissions office makes no efforts to recruit high school students after sending our acceptance letters. Tunis attributes the University's growing appeal to its low tuition. College nationwide, however, are recruiting prospective students with post-acceptance letter, phone calls, and open house weekends.

Meanwhile, Assistant Dean of Transfer Affairs Kathy L. Ryan said that more people are applying for transfer admission to UMass. Figures as of April 14 show an increase of 400 applications over last year.

UMass currently limits its recruiting efforts to representative visits to every high school in the state because of its small admissions staff and the large number of applicants, Tunis said. The admissions office also sponsors special days to attract Third World and women students to study subjects that have historically been considered non-traditional such a business and engineering, he said.

Tunis said he expects the University to begin post-acceptance recruiting within several years. He also said he foresees UMass appealing to high school seniors in the future, according to the students' tentative choice of major.

Tunis commented on the national decrease of students attending college. He said he felt it was due in part to fewer high school graduates.

UMass recruits transfer students from all community colleges and most junior colleges in Massachusetts, Ray said. The Transfer Affairs Office also relies greatly on student inquiry to recruit new students due to the difficulty in locating students interested in transferring to UMass, Ryan said.

John Erhlichman freed; leaves prison today

SAFFORD, Ariz. [UPI] — John D. Erhlichman, who with H.R. Haldeman formed the "Berlin Wall" of the Nixon White House, leaves federal prison a free man today after serving 18 months.

Ehrlichman, who was Nixon's chief domestic adviser, was expected to slip out of the sprawling 237-acre Stafford minimum-security facility, where he has lived among illegal aliens and drug offenders, in the pre-dawn hours. His plans were carefully guarded.

Ehrlichman, 53, was convicted in July 1974 of participating in the Watergate coverup, including charges of conspiracy, obstruction of justice and lying to a grand jury. He also served a concurrent sentence for helping plan the break-in at the office of Dr. Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist in the Pentagon Papers case.

Ehrlichman originally was sentenced to 2½ to 8 years, but the sentence was reduced to 1 to 4 years last year, and the U.S. Parole Commission approved his parole last December.

Home, dorm paraquat test outlined

By CLAUDE B. TETREAULT
Collegian Staff

If you smoke pot, the choice is your own.

You can spend approximately $1.50 for the ingredients of home paraquat test laboratory or take a high risk.

A simple test to detect the presence of the lethal herbicide paraquat in marijuana can be done in the dorm or home with readily available chemicals, according to New York State drug officials.

The test to detect the presence of paraquat can be done with water, baking soda (soda bicarbonate) and sodium dithionite, commonly used in photo-fixing solutions and available at most photography supply stores.

Here is the procedure:

Take the amount of pot used in one cigarette and wash it in five cubic centimeters of water, agitating it gently for 15 minutes. Strain out the leaves, which leave a brownish-yellow solution.

Add 100 milligrams each of sodium bicarbonate and sodium dithionite. If the solution turns bluish-green, paraquat is present.

Officials said the test can detect quantities of paraquat as low as 10 parts per million.

Paraquat is a lethal chemical used to kill vegetation that can cause respiratory failure and damage to the kidneys, liver and other body issues. Paraquat is colorless and odorless, and accumulates in the human body with effects that are irreversible.

A polling of UMass students has revealed a variety of attitudes concerning the herbicide.

"Since local officials do not provide testing services for testing," said UMass student Robert Strohmiaer, "The pot smokers are becoming paranoid."

"I think the marijuana sprayed with paraquat is a legitimate concern," said Skip Vosburgh, a student from John Adams Lower dormitory." Yet the amount of publicity is a hoax. If there is such a dilemma, authorities should be concerned instead of refusing to test the pot for kids."

Students charge 'stalling'

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

Students negotiating with the administration on proposed dorm leases, establishing for the first time a tenant-landlord relationship between students and the University, yesterday charged University negotiators with "stalling" tactics.

"They're nit-picking," said Jeff Baker, one of the student negotiators. "We feel it's been some sort of stalling tactic."

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Woodbury said "Frankly, I'm just a little bit surprised at the students' accusation.

Negotiations for dormitory leases or contracts, legally insuring certain service and maintenance levels, began earlier in the semester between administrators and students from the Student Center for Educational Research, the Student Organizing Project (both funded by student fees) and members of the Student Government Association. The negotiations were reaffirmed after the student occupation of Chancellor Bromery's Whitmore office on April 6 and 7 over dormitory problems.

Bryan Harvey, a member of Woodbury's staff working on the negotiations, said "Unfortunately, some of the students' expectations are higher than what you can accomplish."

The students made the allegations at a press conference yesterday afternoon in the Suffolk room of the Student Union.

David Barenberg, a student negotiator, said an official copy of the student's proposal was delivered to Woodbury March 1, and according to the demands accepted by the administration after the Whitmore occupation, an interim draft of the agreement must be delivered to Chancellor Bromery May 1. Negotiations must be completed by September 15, according to the agreement made.

Barenberg said there are still major points to be resolved before any draft can be delivered to Bromery Monday, May 1.

Two major points still to be resolved before Bromery is given a draft, Barenberg said, is whether or not the final agreement will take the form of a lease, outlining specific tenant rights, or that of a managerial contract with students, and a residential committee to establish dorm policies.

"My understanding was that (the students) would go into the summer on purpose," Harvey said, "I thought today's session was extremely productive."

$500 billion budget approved

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate held fast Wednesday against further efforts to trim the fiscal 1979 budget, and pushed toward approval of a $499 billion framework figure designed to gradually reduce unemployment and contain inflation.

That figure is nearly the same as President Carter proposed, and barring any last-minute changes, it would carry a deficit of $55.6 billion.

In three days of debate, the Senate rejected a series of efforts to cut the proposed budget.

"While the Senate talks austerity, it really has the old philosophy of spend, spend, spend, tax, tax, tax," complained Sen. William Roth, R-Del.

The House considers the budget next week. The result will guide Congress in passing tax and spending bills between now and September, when Congress will refine the budget figures.

The Senate Budget Committee estimated that under its formula, unemployment would fall from its recent 6.2 per cent to 5.7 per cent by the end of 1979. It assumed an increase of one-tenth of 1 per cent in the inflation rate.

The budget is based on a set of policies and assumptions which will not bind Congress when it considers specific legislation but which carry political weight. Among these:

— The budget assumes there no longer is time for Congress to enact President Carter's proposed $25 billion tax cut in time to begin Oct. 1, 1978, as he proposed. It would allow such a cut starting Jan. 1, 1979.

— It provides for no rollback of Social Security taxes, but allows room for a tuition tax credit limited to the college level.

— Defense spending would grow 3 per cent in addition to inflation, in an effort to bolster NATO and keep U.S. nuclear missiles from becoming vulnerable to Soviet attack.

— Job programs increasingly would be aimed at the disadvantagedm Half of the $13 billion employment and job training budget would be for the hard-core unemployed.

"Some people think Army Nursing is the rifle range and pulling K.P. It's really amazing how little they know."
—Lieutenant Mary Ann Hepner

"Though I'm an Army Nurse, I can also pursue outside interests like dress-designing and sailing.

"One of the pluses of Army Nursing is the nature of the nurse/patient relationship. I don't treat patients like numbers. I follow their progress. I visit them after the acute part of their illness is over. They are so appreciative. It's really part of a nurse's job to help the patient through an illness.

"To me, it's an important job . . . My family is very proud of me. I'm the first person in the family to join the military.

"The Army is a place of self-discovery. It's a total learning experience."

If you'd like to join Mary Ann Hepner in the Army Nurse Corps, here are a few facts you should know. Army Nursing is open to both men and women, under the age 33, with BSN degrees. Every Army Nurse is a commissioned officer.

You are not required to go through the Army's standard basic training: instead you attend a basic orientation course. Your initial tour is three years—just enough to try the job on for size.

For more information about opportunities for Registered Nurses in the Army Nurse Corps, you may write: Army Nurse Opportunities, Northeast Region, U.S. Army Recruiting Command, Fort George G. Meade, MD 20755. Or, you may telephone the nearest Army Nurse Opportunities office. Call collect to . . .

Cocaine shortages reported

Editor's note: five persons, including three UMass students, have recently been arrested on federal drug charges, including possession of cocaine.

PACIFIC NEWS SERVICE — Hospitals and pharmacies throughout the United States are reporting a serious shortage of cocaine — one of the most effective pain-relievers known to medicine.

While vast quantities of the drug are readily available on the black market, many physicians and dentists are having to wait weeks to obtain legal prescriptions of cocaine for patients who need it.

"There has been a shortage over the past year," said Michael Stolar of the American Society of Hospital Pharmacists, a Washington, D.C.-based organization that represents thousands of pharmacists and monitors drug supplies in over 100 U.S. hospitals.

"Pharmacists want to know why they can go to the street and get cocaine, but they can't get it from their wholesale distributor," Stolar said.

The American Pharmaceutical Association in Washington reports similar complaints from around the country.

Because cocaine is considered one of the most heavily abused drugs in the U.S., the Drug Enforcement Administration maintains a strict quota on the amount that can be manufactured here.

No Increase In Quota

And although legitimate supplies of the white powder are running low, the federal government has no plans to increase its cocaine quota for the coming year.

One reason for the drought, according to Stolar, is the sudden popularity of "Brompton's Cocktail" — a medicinally prescribed mixture of cocaine, morphine, alcohol and syrup given orally to dying cancer patients to relieve their agonizing pain.

"For about the last six months there has been a significant increase in demand for cocaine, both for surgical use and in Brompton's cocktails," said a spokesman for Stepan Chemical of Maywood, N.J., the only U.S. company licensed to extract cocaine from raw, imported coca leaves. The name "Brompton" comes from the British hospital that developed the mix.

Increase in imports

Last year, Stepan Chemical purchased over one million pounds of leaves from Peru, which grows 95 percent of the world's supply, and other South American countries — a five-fold increase over the amount imported into the U.S. in 1957.

The Drug Enforcement Administration told Stepan it could extract no more than 3,252 pounds of cocaine during fiscal year 1978. Things seemed to go smoothly, a Stepan spokesman said, until last fall.

"The upward usage of cocaine at that time," he noted, "left us without an inventory. We have since added another manufacturing procedure which has increased our output 30 to 40 percent."

Stepan is now producing almost as much cocaine as the quota will allow.

Shortage has affects

But the shortage has affected other drug companies as well.

Although Stepan isolates the cocaine alkaloid from coca leaves, other major pharmaceuticals — including Merck, Eli Lilly and Mallinckrodt — convert it into a commercially usable powder known as cocaine hydrochloride.

Roy Walker, spokesman for Merck's Rahway, in New Jersey, headquarters, said his company mailed letters to all its wholesalers last October informing them of the production slowdown and suggesting they distribute their supplies "as equitably as possible." Since then, Walker said, the shortage has "lessened," although "security as well as competitive factors" forbade him from discussing all the factors that led to the shortage.

None of the pharmaceutical corporations would reveal how much cocaine hydrochloride they sell each year, although a representative for Eli Lilly and Co. in Indianapolis called it "an insignificant part" of their corporate sales, which totaled over $1.5 billion last year.

Cocaine represents only about one percent of Stepan's $100 million operation.

A spokesman for Stepan, who did not want his name revealed, said the company does not foresee a more severe cocaine shortage — "unless the Brompton's Cocktail use increases."

Tests are underway at Methodist Hospital in Indianapolis, which has treated over 250 patients with Brompton's mix, named for the British hospital where it was first developed.

Studies in England show that a Brompton's mixture, including heroin, reduced pain in 95 percent of the patients tested.

Because heroin is banned in the U.S., American hospitals use morphine as a substitute, although research into heroin's effectiveness is now being sponsored by the federal government.

"By balancing out the morphine and alcohol depressants," says Methodist's clinical pharmacist K. Gregory Humma, "cocaine seems to relieve pain without totally knocking the patient out."

Parking board protests limits

By ROSEMARY E. CONWAY
Collegian Staff

The UMass Parking Appeals Board is protesting a compromise proposal submitted to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery by Vice-Chancellor of Administration and Finance James L. McBee which would limit the working hours and salary of the board's clerical assistant and cut funds available for tow refunds.

McBee's proposal would decrease the clerical assistant's hours from 20 to 16 and reduce wages from $3.75-hr. to 3.00-hr.

The proposal also would cut the board's current budget from $6,000 to $4,130, and provide for continuous board funding from the Parking Office. Presently the Parking Office is responsible for funding the board only for fiscal year '78.

McBee's proposal is a compromise between Parking Office Director Susan K. Campbell's original plan and a counter-proposal by the Parking Appeals Board.

Campbell called for a review of the board's expense and an administrative monitor of the board's transactions.

Campbell's proposal states that "due to the administrative decision to transfer the Campus Center Garage into the surface parking system, it is imperative in acting as a fund manager that all parking expenses be kept at a minimum," and recommends the board's funds to be cut in half.

Chairman of the Parking Appeals Board Mark L. Mendel questions the right of the Parking Office to control the board's funds.

"No member of the board may be affiliated with the Parking Office to avoid conflicts of interest," he said, "yet the office is basically dictating our funds now."

Mendel said the board would prefer funding from the chancellor's Discretionary Trust Fund.

McBee could not be reached for comment last night.

The function of the Parking Appeals Board is to review cases for possible voiding of parking tickets or reimbursement of towing fees.

Mendel said he sees no reason to expect a decrease in the number of cases before the board in the future, and that the clerical assistant's work is imperative for the operation of the board.

Q. WHAT IF THERE WAS AN ELECTION FOR GOVERNOR AND STUDENTS VOTED ?
A. THE STUDENTS MIGHT WIN, FOR A CHANGE.

There's an old adage among politicians: "Ignore the students; they don't vote." Unfortunately, the pols are right. Students don't vote. Of the 23,000 students at UMass only a few thousand are registered, and even fewer vote. So why should a candidate waste his or her time running around UMass looking for the needles in the haystack when they can stand outside a factory or a bank and meet voters?

On September 19, there's going to be a state primary to decide who is going to run for US Senate, Governor, Congress and about seven other offices. If you're not registered to vote, somebody else is going to decide the future of the state—again. We've just lived through a time when a war was dragged on and budgets were cut based on political expediency. And students got the business. As usual.

You live in Amherst nine months each year, so you might as well vote here. It's easy to register to vote. If you do, the politicians might start paying attention to students. They'll have to if they expect to get elected!

LAST DAY TO REGISTER ON CAMPUS IS TODAY

'Grass Roots' bureaucrat

To the Editor:

As interested observers in student politics on this campus we are continually amused at Adam Auster's anti-bureaucracy - pro-participatory campaign in and around the student senate, as well as on the Collegian editorial pages. Over the past three years Auster has held more bureaucratic positions than anyone in our memory. We will list them [this list may be incomplete]:

1. Paid staff member of the Student Organizing Project
2. SOP Board of Directors
3. Co-chair of the Student Senate Budgets Committee
4. Student Senator
5. Member of the Student Senate's Governmental Affairs Committee
6. Full-time summer staff-person Student Organizing Project
7. Student Senate Parlimentarian
8. Member of the Student Senate's Advocacy Services Committee
9. And most bureaucratic of them all, Registrar of Student Organizations.

Funds for Mr. Auster's salary have come out of Student Activities Tax Money; that which each student pays each semester to go towards his or her extra-curricular activities.

Hopefully, this will provide sufficient objective background for those students on the verge, or in the process, of being harangued and chided by Mr. Auster's 'anarchistic' rhetoric. He is left-wing in appearance, right-wing in essence.

A matter of 'bad taste'

To the Editor:

About the proposed women's pages in the Collegian : It is in our opinion that women are men's equals as human beings and that any discrimination is unnatural and should be opposed at its source.

But aren't there more pressing issues than the Women's pages which would by their nature, accentuate the differences between men and women and thus invite discrimination?

Such an issue is the food "problem" which the student must encounter every day. This institution, which we all have to financially support, consistently serves low-quality food. Apart from being bad tasting, it has questionable after effects, which may lead to intense nausea and 'runs'. Last night they had the nerve to limit the number of servings of codfish to one. Isn't it enough that because they do not have to worry about students taking their business elsewhere they serve us food with no taste appeal without them having the nerve to limit the servings of such a plentiful and cheap food as codfish in Massachusetts? The issue of forced subscription to the meal plan is one which concerns all students and should be protested with as much vigor as was Matlack's "Pierpont Plan."

SWA candidates endorsed

To the Editor:

As an active participant in the Southwest Assembly and as president this semester, I have had the opportunity to know and work with nearly all the candidates who are currently running for the various office positions of the Southwest Assembly.

Clearly, the candidates with the greatest qualifications are: for president: Jane Byington-Ed Childs; for vice president: Andy Mainini; for treasurer: Jay Enis-Beth Teixeira; and for communications coordinator: Ted Peitnik.

I urge you to vote and support these people in today's election as I am sure that they-will serve your best interest in the following year.

Corrections on Ellington festival

To the Editor:

In the April 13 Collegian there appeared an article announcing the upcoming "Duke Ellington Spring Music Festival: A Celebration of Black American Music" which contained several errors and omissions that I should like to call attention to.

Firstly, Mercer Ellington, leader of the Duke Ellington Orchestra, is reported to be the younger brother of the late Mr. Ellington. He is, rather, his son — Duke had no brothers, in the familial sense, at least. Mercer was leading his own bands as early as 1939 and in 1950 he joined his father's orchestra as a trumpeter, composer, arranger, and manager. His "Things Ain't What They Used To Be" comes immediately to mind as one of the standards in the Black Classical repetoire.

Secondly, to suggest that Junior Wells went from the Louisiana fields to Muddy Waters' band is not only inaccurate, it demeans and simplifies the difficult musical [and existential] struggle of this outstanding blues singer-harmonica player. Mr. Wells was born in Memphis in 1934. There he was able to drink from the well of Beale Street where Howlin' Wolf, Sonny Boy Williamson, B.B. King, and Big Walter Horton, to name but a few, were working in the 1940's. It wasn't until 1953 at age 19, however, that Wells, while AWOL, cut his first sides and replaced the great Little Walter in Muddy's band.

Thirdly, Buddy Guy established himself as one of the preeminent post-war blues singer-guitarists not on Chicago's eastside but on the Southside, the huge ghetto that has been the incubator of the "Chicago Blues" sound which spawned rock 'n roll. Chicago's eastside is Lake Michigan and the only effect it seems to have had on Mr. Guy is that its "water tastes to me just like turpentine." ["A Man And The Blues", Guy, Avalon Music]

Fourthly, WMUA radio advertisements include Messrs. Archie Shepp and Pharoah Sanders as performers at the festival, yet the article makes no mention of them. If, in fact, they are not going to perform shouldn't the Collegian make us aware of this?

We here in the Happy Valley have during this semester alone been blessed with the presence of many musicians-lecturers who are among the vanguard of contemporary African-American Music: Archie Shepp, Max Roach, Majeed Greenlee, Vishnu Wood, Barry Harris, Clifford Jordon, Son Seals, Billy Harpen, Dexter Gordon, Stanley Crouch, Michael Gregory Jackson, David Murray, et al. While some of these events [all free of charge] have been well attended, the audiences are too often small and their interest in the music seems not to extend beyond the concert hall. Invariably the question "why" is asked. What with the forces of racism and capitalist cultural hegemony being brought to bear on all of us this situation is hardly inexplicable. And a publication like the Collegian, which does seem to take an interest in informing the community of this music that speaks so cogently and truthfully to the human condition, can help to alleviate the deplorable neglect which it is subject to with more accurate notices, reporting, and reviews.

Is it any wonder that beyond the hallowed confines of academia, with its subsidies, "free speech", and receptive minds, many of the creators of this indigenous American art are literally starving to death?

Tom Reney

SUPE demands response

From: Students United for Public Education
To: Board of Trustees
Re: Response to the Board's Letters of April 7 and April

Students United for Public Education [SUPE] has received both of your recent letters: the one of April 7, concerning our request for an opening on May 3 at the UMass Amherst campus; and, the letter of April , informing us that the location of the May 3 meeting has been changed to UMass Worcester. This reply is an official SUPE response to both of your letters.

Having received the Board's response of April 7, 1978 stating that the Board of Trustees has granted "the request of Students United for Public Education to appear before the Board on May 3", we wish to respond. The Board did not honor our request.

We requested that "The Board of Trustees, as our administrative body, has the responsibility and obligation to have an open meeting with the student body for the purpose of direct communication". This is a direct quote from our written request submitted to the Long Range Planning Committee. The request was further qualified by the statement that "the purpose of this meeting is to ensure that responsible and interested students, students terribly concerned with the declining quality of education at UMass, and the public state system in general, can make known their needs, their ideas, and their recommendations for the form and content of our education."

Finally, we stated that "this forum is the most direct method of exchanging information, and should be made available to the students at least once a semester".

The granting of an half hour to SUPE, one of the many responsible groups on campus, is not what we requested.

At this time, SUPE is asking the Board of Trustees to respond to our initial request for an open meeting, meaning that any and all interested students and groups on campus should be able to address the board of Trustees at the May 3 meeting.

Concerning your second letter of April , informing us of the change in the location of the Board meeting, SUPE feels this also violates our request for "an open meeting with the Board of Trustees at the UMass Amherst campus."

In your letter, no specific reasons for such a major change were stated. We feel we have a right to information and input regarding a decision as pertinent to our plans as the meetings location. Furthermore, the Worcester campus, although not that far away, presents severe transportation problems. Students without cars and access to public transportation are being denied access to the meeting.

Since the purpose of the meeting has been clearly stated, to give students the opportunity to have "direct communication" with the Board of Trustees, a meeting which excludes students due to inaccessability blocks this vital communication.

It is our hope that both the format and location of the meeting can be changed in accordance with the function of this meeting as originally laid in our presentation to the Long Range Planning Committee.

The annual rituals of Schlitzarama, concerts and Frisbee are invariably accompanied by that ever-popular form of mass tribute to OSCAR — preregistration. Number two pencils and coin tosses are of course the order of the day.

For those a little more serious about the academic end of UMass, a valuable tool these days is On the Other Hand II, the combination course-and-teacher evaluation and course description guide. Entirely put together by students who shouldn't have to, the guide is not without its flaws, but represents an overall improvement over last semester's effort.

One problem with the guide that turns out to be something more than an annoyance is that it lacks a table of contents or index. While everything is in alphabetical order, it remains unclear where the reader should go for a number of departmental courses. And a general index is always useful for obtaining ideas for electives.

On the other hand (sic), just about every other aspect of the guide shows a level of improvement. Particularly encouraging is

As all students who walk through the Cape Cod Lounge, know by now — changes are in the air. New paint has been applied to the walls and there is talk of carpeting. The Cape Cod Lounge is being renovated. Hurray!

Well, almost.

The Campus Center (CC) Administration has its own plan for the renovation of the lounge. The CC Administration would like a "show piece" lounge that looks pretty for our parents and the conferees in the building who wander into that southwest corner of the Student Union.

What do we (students) want? Many students want that space open for varied activities, such as studying, eating, dancing, video sidewalk, coffeehouses, etc. If the CC Administration plans are carried out, however, the room will be restricted to sitting and studying, only. The Administration's plans are to place doors on both entrances and lay wall to wall carpeting throughout the entire room. Student activities deserve half of that room for varied events.

The Board of Governors (BOG) is running a referendum this week on the Campus Center concourse. The topic of this referendum concerns the Cape Cod Lounge and food services in the Campus Center Complex. The referendum has three basic parts.

A) Do you want the Cape Cod Lounge for studying space, only or for multiple use (studying, eating, dancing, etc.)?

B) Do you like the food in the co

FINE ARTS CENTER
CONCERT HALL

The Boston Ballet will perform the classic ballet Giselle on Friday and Saturday, May 5 and 6 in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at 8 p.m. Also featured will be a world premiere by choreographer and dancer Anna Sokolow.

The presentation of the Boston Ballet is a special attraction of the Fine Arts Center, University of Massachusetts/ Amherst.

The world premiere of "Visions of The Dark Night" will be on Friday, May 5 at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. The modern ballet by Anna Sokolow will feature Elaine Bower and David Brown.

Miss Sokolow studied dance at the Neighborhood Playhouse with Martha Graham and was a soloist with the Graham company until 1939. Since then, she has had her own dance companies in Mexico, Israel, and New York. On Broadway, Miss Sokolow has choreographed the dances in several major productions, including "Street Scene," "Candide," and "Camino Real."

"Visions of The Dark Night" will also be presented on Saturday, May 6.

Also with the world premiere, the Boston Ballet will perform the classic ballet, Giselle. First performed in London in 1842, Giselle is a love story of a peasant girl whose passion for dancing is second only to her man.

Giselle has a jealous suitor, Hilaron, who destroys her by exposing her lover Albrecht, the Duke of Silesia. In a dramatic moment, Giselle takes Albrecht's sword and plunges it into her heart. For a brief moment, she goes to him and they dance in a theme of romance, but she cannot perform the steps she once danced so gracefully, she then falls and dies.

Romantic supernatural powers come to light when Giselle and other dancers are transformed into dancers who've been returned to life. In long veils and white billowy gowns, they entice any man who enters the forest after dark, and relentlessly dance them to their death.

Tickets for the Boston Ballet performances are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center box office and all New England Ticketron locations. Ticket prices are: General public — $7, 6, 5. UMass students — $5, 4, 3. Senior citizens and other students are $6, 5, 4. For more information, call the Fine Arts Center box office, open Monday through Friday 9-4, at (413) 545-2511.

the best of both worlds

Robert Palmer
Double Fun
Island
Roomful of Blues
Island
Reviewed by K. STEPHEN SHAIN

With both of these fine acts booked to appear on campus this week and with both also having new releases out this month, it seems only appropriate that I bring them to your attention at this time. Though much hot air has been dispensed on campus lately in regard to the selection of the line-up of musicians to appear at the outdoor concert this spring, the fact is that Roomful of Blues and Robert Palmer both are about the best talent the white community can offer up at this time anyhow, and what we are getting in the long run on campus this month, indoors and out, all over campus is nothing but great music, white and black, or, as Robert Palmer would say, ".... double fun... best of both worlds..."

I mean really, I can see Roomful of Blues up there on stage in the big stadium playing for a house full of drunks but I just can't picture in my mind McCoy Tyner out at the bash in Orchard Hill running up and down the stairs, in and out of the dorms, getting high with all the students. I'm sorry; I just can't. At any rate, I'll limit my social commentary at this time, because, as some of my fellow Johnson residents have indicated to me in various sidious and insidious ways, "You open up a whole new can of worms when you antagonize the racists." And we wouldn't want to do that, now, would we?

Besides, I like Robert Palmer, and not because he's white, and despite what anyone says, he sings and writes songs that are more urgent, more universal and more readily accessible to us, the average but dedicated and discriminant listeners than anything currently hitting the racks in this year's model of the unmediated and unmitigated sound of punk. Like Nick Lowe infers from time to time, if you really care about people, you'd go out there and make responsible pop music rather than weird music that develops for itself cult followings. That is just what "Double Fun" is all about. It is quality music that is meaningful and fun that has wide appeal and doesn't insult anyone's intelligence. Because its sound is so carefully produced and engineered, the only thing it challenges is your sincerity. Believe it or not, but after all these years, while no one was looking or caring, Robert Palmer has emerged as not only another singer-songwriter with another record, a wing, and a prayer, but as a full-fledged talent capable of finally breaking the AM playlist open for Island Records. Songs like "Every Kinda People" and "Best of Both Worlds", seem to straddle the fine line between current American AM and FM programming (including collegiate, snoot-nose) and a song like "Night People", could raise a lot of lookers and listeners eyebrows during any summer night's dead heat, on the box or in the joint. Good luck to Robert Palmer and hope his concert's a smash. "Though he be no 'El', Palmer's pell-mell...."

Not a company to miss a base, Island Records within the last year added to its roster of rock, pop and reggae artists, blues-band extraordinaire and local favorite, Roomful of Blues. With their first record currently out and a free appearance at Orchard Hill-Central's annual spring party, they are a band to watch. The seven piece band churns a beat that tugs your heart and turns your feet with songs like "Red, Hot and Blue" and a re-worked version of the classic, "Stormy Monday". Though Roomful's brand of blues are more "white-as Jonah" than "straight 'nd nat'chl," they do maintain a tradition that has unfortunately been eclipsed in the past few years by a continuous stream of fads, each receiving more time and space in the media than they're worth.

Here's a tip: double your fun this spring and get the best of both worlds; hum Roomfuls' "Duke's Blues" on your way to the big decontroversialized spring event in the stadium and have yourself a hell of a good time, because you know, they're doing all for you, every single one of them....

tower of power...lenny white in concert

Tower of Power
Lenny White In Concert
April 23
Fine Arts Center
Reviewed by MARIO BARROS

Tower of Power and drummer Lenny White collaborated for a fine show at the F.A.C. on Sunday night. Special Guest Star White wasted no time in coming out and energizing the crowd with some thunderous drumming. His sticks were a blur as he machine-gunned his way through some selections off of his latest LP, "Adventures Of The Astral Pirates." As these pieces forcefully got his foot into the crowd's "door", slick rendition of his most familiar "Big City" pulled the door wide open. Once he had established a relationship with the audience, he aimed to please with a couple of soaring solos and some fatback, hand-clapping funk.

With the stage set, Tower of Power exploited the crowd's energy with their brand of Urban Soul. After performing selections from their latest LP ("We Came To Play") T of P and new lead singer Michael Jeffries taunted, teased and pleased. Jeffries was the seducer with his disarming honesty and his stabs at charm which were, thankfully, never "cutesy."

Things really seemed to get off the ground when the band gave out with their older repertoire. These were what the crowd seemed to have come to hear. While Jeffries and the famed T of P Horns' duel through "Lovin' You Is Gonna See Me Through" was entertaining, the building shook at the renditions of boogie classics like "What Is Hip?" While Jeffries was at home with the new music, he had to prove himself on the oldies in the shadow of Lenny Williams' ghost. By keeping up his cajoling stage presence, he won the approval of the audience as they seemed to accept his rendition of their memories.

At the end of their set, they left the stage but the crowd was going nowhere. The standing ovation persisted until the band came out for not one but three encores. The first was yet another memory lane item in "So Very Hard To Go." There were two more to follow with the last being a tribute to the audience in "To Say The Least, You're The Most." The group left the capacity crowd satisfied, to say the least. Another success in taking the show (now with Michael Jeffries doing the leads), without Williams, on the road.

Get it on your chest.

four moons

Aie!
  This whole is a chant.

Four moons spread high across the sky, black-no star & with the soft of dawn slip one by one away.

Some one leaning on a fance, great horizon away and across towards west going sun.
  he's one foot on rail & smoking, long trail skywards.
This picture rolls
   he moves down & into his yard, up short broad steps-
  he move on the great land & across the grain in a great engine of noise,
  he moves back bent & beaten,
   one dirt faced woman with thick arms and dry hair waiting.
   she is like cornhusks & silk smooth-
  he don't know
    her from princesses!
  They sit and watch night fall only in her dreams his hard fist on her head and his need.
So, Bang,
 he is gone great engine

       turning him under & thick arms pound head
   & are as alone as cacti.

City high scrapers
  & man leaning on fire escape black to blue sky cigarette dangling his back is so high from the standing of it.
And along comes fourth and third moons & meet on the corner in yellow, streetlight
She says she's here
   'cause he is-

     he is only 'cause
          he's nowhere & anything could kick back his feet to moving
        'stead of the great burn sear
     & she touches him
          he does a hand dance away,
        but his sides cave in,
          there are great walls of caving,
There are four moons
     & they crash
          & we crash &
          There is no warning nor clock to time the night.

Four moons rise.
  four moons rise,
     rising
        & one upon another set, so that their setting spreads across the horizon-blood red, angry birth coming.

One man in one cafe arm holding coffee woman across older-skittery like a mare he too.
 he looks closely.
  he's much younger suddenly & wants her.
     watches her arms
       move as she eats, watches rings flash.
        she looks into her plate.
One high crash.
 she stands screaming
     "I am not your mother
        -need-not daughter
        -need-
     he's holding his head,
        Oh high priestess!
   she stabs a long fingernail, beaten and chewed on by three unfaithful boors before.
   he is in their image cast.
      looks at hands
         not his but theirs, of her making.
he's left learning love
 three ways taught.
    Bible, first love,
        jaded thirty with sore skin
   he holds in his hand the wind.
   he is at his time rolling & the crashing of hundreds of waves brought him here — to the sea.

Fourth moon only
     great sea of red & it waits
       it is its time.

Fourth moon
    be a man,
  set on a hill crouched low one hand holds spear set running ta blast like a fire down hill sudden on the grass striking.
   be a man
set on dirt ground, staring at stars
           in a black sky.
   baring his teeth white.
  be a woman set on hill on hill screaming & teeth barred.
      she swirls fierce,
      she over the grass flies
         turns quick to lash.
     lays like red embers angry.

Red embers burning on the lines of the hills.
the burning turns earth to hot black.
Sun on hill comes & breaks
      & the reds;
       all the reds
         difuse into space
            & blue become.
Somewhere out in the grass an antelope moves
      'long the first ray,
       towards water.
Man-Woman, softer,
      move like drugged dolls,
  poking fire gone out smoking,
    & feel warmth down their backs.
      bare teeth white,
       feel wind flying,
  & age running down their faces like ants.

Music for Tuneheads

Renaissance
A Song for all Seasons
(Sire)

Reviewed by TOM ANDERSON

For all those Renaissance fans, including myself, who have been eagerly awaiting this album, I am happy to report that it is worth the wait. A Song for all Seasons may not be the ultimate album, but it is, as expected, one of the most musically accomplished releases I've heard in the last few years.

Side One begins with a classic album-opener: "Opening Out," a majestic piece that sets the stage for what's to follow. Next is "Day of the Dreamer," which is one of the best songs the group has recorded in their career, and along with "Northern Lights" one of the best cuts on this album. The soft "Closer Than Yesterday" follows, and the side concludes with "Kindness (At the End)." A flip of the record reveals an equally fine second side. First comes "Back Home Once Again," which features some excellent guitar work. Although the second cut, "She is Love" is probably the weakest song on the album, it is more than counterbalanced by the two final pieces, which already appear to be the choice cuts for airplay on album stations. "Northern Lights" is a superb example of Annie Haslam's vocal strength, and the 11-minute concluding title work "A Song for all Seasons" features some of the most effective orchestration the group has ever used.

The most notable difference between the music on this album and Renaissance's earlier music is the heavier sound of the group as a whole. While there are still quiet evocative passages of acoustic guitar and piano, most of the songs are in general more upbeat than those on the group's previous albums. Fortunately this is not a detriment. In many ways I am glad to see Renaissance moving into new musical territory where they are as unparalleled as always. There are several possible explanations for this trend toward a heavier sound, but I attribute it mainly to the ever-increasing role of Jon Camp, the bass guitarist. Whereas in the past most of the songwriting was done by the Dunford/Thatcher team, on this album Camp wrote or co-wrote six of the eight songs. In addition, Jon steps into the spotlight to sing lead on "Kindness" and "She is Love." While he doesn't have a great voice, he does provide a nice contrast to Haslam's incredible soprano.

Another fact should be mentioned about Camp's influence: he was the only member of Renaissance to contribute to Annie Haslam's solo album last year. Both Jon and Annie appear to have carried some of the experience from that project, which relied heavily on the genius of producer Roy Wood, into this album. Although I cannot in all honesty say that I like A Song for all Seasons as much as Scheherazade and Other Stories, it is still a superb album from one of the most talented and inventive groups in the contemporary music scene.

Strawbs
Deadlines
(Arista)

Reviewed by BRETT MILANO

One of the Strawbs's major strengths is that they refuse to let their music stand still, and maintain enough variety between albums to avoid becoming predictable. It is logical then, that their debut with a new label and new drummer should be one of their most adventurous albums in years. They take more chances on this one than on the previous few, which were totally successful attempts at making their music more accessible. Deadlines, in contrast, is a widely varied album which wanders off in several musical directions. The overall sound is generally more sophisticated, but unlike its predecessors, this one has some disappointing moments.

First the good news: The high points on this album rate with the finest music this band has produced. The opening "No Return" is a classic from the first listening. The band rocks along with a flourish, and the interplay between the two vocalists (Dave Cousins and Dave Lambert) has a joyful quality which is always welcome. "Joey And Me" is another classic — a strong melody coupled with an arrangement in which British balladry meets progressive rock and both benefit. Elsewhere on the album are other good moments — another fine Lambert vocal on "I Don't Want To Talk About It," more rocking on "The Last Resort," and some hot drumming from Tony Fernandez, who proves to be the right replacement for the departed Rod Coombes.

Unfortunately, the band runs into problems on the second side. All four songs here are the Strawbs at their most dramatic, and this mood becomes overbearing when sustained for an entire side. "Deadly Nightshade" tries to couple a folk-ballad melody with a Gothic arrangement, and the mixture is incongruous. And "Words of Wisdom," for all its grandeur, relies too heavily on keyboard effects and needs a stronger melody to carry it through. The band's performances are as skillful as ever, but the exuberance of the first side is missing here.

But it is nonetheless good to hear the Strawbs experiencing again, and this album's better moments show that their creative potential is by no means exhausted.

Root Boy Slim &
The Sex Change Band
Warner Brothers

Reviewed by R. B. NERENBERG

I've gotta be blunt about it; this album is such a dog that I can almost hear the barking in the background as it approaches my turntable. Supposedly, Root Boy spent his formative years in Yale, but one listen to this here convinces me that it must've been jail, no Yale. How else can one account for such a bizarre musical presentation? I'd be giving him the benefit of the doubt if I said that he sings like a shit-faced auctioneer with laryngitis, particularly on the opening track where he warbles, "Put a quarter in the juke-boogie 'til you puke-form a big boss line-it's puking time." Meanwhile, we're treated to his female backups (The Rootettes) coyly cooing, "Boogie, 'til you puke." How poetic can you get?

Other songs bear such heart-warming titles as 'I Used To Be A Radical," "Too Sick To Reggae," "My Wig Fell Off" and "Heartbreak Of Psoriasis." The latter is to be commended for featuring these immoral lines — "I better join Hare Krishna - become a Buddhist monk - sell flowers at the airport - with all the other pimply punks." Shit, man, if Shakespeare were alive and well today he'd be turning over in his grave!

Well, this album's a bigger loser than the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. As welcome as a walrus with a toothache, it earns for itself a "the only thing that ol' Root Boy appears to be slim in is brain cells" D-.

Chick Corea
The Mad Hatter
Polydor

Reviewed by JURGEN KERN

Ever since former Return to Forever band members Al DiMeola and Lenny White decided to go it alone, Chick Corea has returned his efforts to creative composing, and he hasn't looked back. Chick's latest effort, The Mad Hatter, encompasses a catch-all of musical styles. The Mad Hatter is Chick's first attempt at a concept album: the music portrays selected fragments from Lewis Carroll's "Alice in Wonderland."

The album opens with "The Woods," a composition in which Chick plays an assemblage of synthesizers and other electronic gadgetry so diverse, it could befuddle the hardiest of lexicographers. Following is a piece for string quartet and piano, "directly inspired by Bela Bartok's early works," according to a "Downbeat" interview. Next in line, "The Trial," is the worst cut on the albums. Chick's ambitious attempt at orchestrating chaos misfires when he includes an annoying vocal refrain, sung at least half a dozen times by Gayle Moran. Luckily "The Trial" is short, and quickly atoned for by the album's most outstanding cut, a bebop tune entitled "Humpty Dumpty" which showcases tenor saxophonist Joe Farrell and bassist Edie Gomez. Farrell's dazzling and sensitive performance on this piece alone should earn him a top ranking in this year's jazz polls. Drummer Steve Gadd, who most recently worked his magic on Steely Dan's Aja is back again, proving that he still has the best bass-drum foot in the business.

The rest of the album is more traditional Corea, very reminiscent of Return to Forever's Musicmagic, although occasionally exhibiting some of the Spanish styling also found on My Spanish Heart. Occasionally Chick still runs into a trite melodic line, but overall the music is fast-paced, elegant, exact. Herbie Hancock contributes a scorching electric piano solo to the album's final cut, "Madhatter Rhapsody," while Joe Farrell, Gayle Moran (who has a remarkably rich and beautiful voice) and the rest of Chick's crew provide him with the superb musicianship this album so richly deserves.

academy award winner performs with students

by JOHN M. MORAN

Gale Sondergaard's acting experience and expertise are more than, well, extensive. Since she won the first Academy Award given for Best Supporting Actress in 1936 for her role in Anthony Adverse (her first film!), she has continued to appear in production after production on both stage and screen. Each production has been a new challenge for her. "There is always something to move onto," she says and for her it has been the unique and unfamiliar.

Ms. Sondergaard is here at UMass as part of a Guest Artist program designed to let students work with professionals. The program has brought three stage designers and two other performers over the past two years.

Don Boros, director of Anastasia, first wrote, then called Gale in his efforts to get her here at UMass. "At first I thought, 'Oh, no'," Ms. Sondergaard said, "but I became fascinated with the idea of working with students and actors from the community, helping them to develop and improve." She has done nothing like this since the beginning of her professional career. And that is what finally attracted her, a new experience.

Speaking of the play Anastasia she said, "I have great respect for the writing of this play, especially its precise language. It is a unique and excellent play and certainly a challenge." Gale has played the role of the Dowager Empress in Anastasia once before many years ago at the Playhouse in the Park in Philadelphia. It was only a one week production. "I had to learn the part all over again," she said.

She has been wanting to play this role again, she said, to get into the character of the Dowager Empress more deeply. The role calls for a woman of advancing years and Gale herself is now more like the character than in that first production. These are just more reasons she decided to take the part here, even over the objections of her agent. ("He didn't want me to come," she said.)

Now that she's here of course, she is more than glad she came. (Doesn't everyone seem to love Amherst?) She has been in rehearsal with the rest of the cast now for three weeks. The other cast members have been rehearsing for over a month. I asked her during our interview at her Amherst apartment how she likes working in the Rand Theater at the Fine Arts Center. "Very nice," she said. "It is quite a design. A fascinating arrangement of seats. Of course I'll have to play in it before I can know how it sounds."

Ms. Sondergaard has seen one other person play the role of the Dowager Empress. That was Helen Hayes in the movie version of Anastasia. "I don't think the shooting or the casting of the movie was very well done," she said. "I respect Helen Hayes very much as an actress, but I don't think she was suited for the part. It (the play) hasn't been done very much and it requires a lot of technique."

Gale Sondergaard knows whereof she speaks when she talks about the motion picture industry. While working in the theater in New York she met and married movie director Herbert Biberman. Together they moved to Hollywood where she made such pictures as "Anna and the King of Siam," (her second Academy Award nomination) "Juarez", "The Letter", and "East Side, West Side." Ironically, she is probably better remembered by many for her films at Universal, most notably in the dangerous character of "The Spider Woman." Her most recent major motion picture appearance was in 1976 in "The Return of a Man Called Horse."

Even more recently, she has been involved in regional theater and television. I asked her about the differences for an actor between working for the different mediums of stage, screen, and television.

"Each one of these things is a different career," she said. "Moving from the stage to the studio you have to forget a lot of things: voice projection, for example. With a microphone near, you don't need projection. You could break the microphone.

"Movies are shot in segments not necessarily in sequence. This is for convenience and is important when the movie is being filmed on location. I like to act so it doesn't matter if I'm before a camera or on stage as long as I understand the character. That means understanding the progression of the character too if I'm going to play the scenes out of sequence."

"As far as television, I have found the "Visions" program on the PBS (Public Broadcasting) quite remarkable and other individual projects have been good. But just as there is a lot of trash in the theater in New York, there is trash on television. They are not for the classics, but for the money.

"That's why it is important to support the regional theaters. They are productions not on Broadway, not for commercials. They are for good culture and they are being supported through subscriptions, community aid, and grants."

I asked what she had coming up in the future. "I very seldom have anything upcoming. I just don't know what is going to happen. I was in New York when my agent called me and told me he had a major role for me. Five days later I'm in South Dakota shooting "The Return of A Man Called Horse" and then it was down to Mexico for three months after that."

Gale Sondergaard lives in Los Angeles so it may be she will return there for a while. But it is certain that she will soon be moving on to another production, on to something else she hasn't tried. She will always be changing. And perhaps that is why she loves to walk alongside the ocean and the waves.

The University Ensemble Theater has announced that veteran stage and screen actress, Gale Sondergaard will play the role of the Dowager Empress, Maria Feodorovna in its forthcoming production of Anastasia. The play will be produced at the Frank Prentice Rand Theater in the Fine Arts Center on April 28, 29, May 4, 5, 6, at 8 p.m. with a special Sunday Matinee, April 30 at 2 p.m. Tickets are on sale now at the Rand Theater Box Office.

Rahsaan's phenomenal legacy lives on

Rahsaan Roland Kirk
The Vibration Continues
Atlantic

Reviewed by MARIO BARROS

This review is a very difficult one for me to do for a few reasons. The biggest reason is the difficulty in finding a place to begin. Where do you begin to describe a phenomenon? To talk about a genius is easy as you only need to understand and examine his effect and work in his given field. You discuss the innovations, perfections, and contributions that the artist has made. To speak of Rahsaan in solely these terms, while accurate and astounding, falls short of even beginning to appreciate him.

The second reason is the perspective that I'm now forced to take. I have to speak of this phenomenon that is so much a part of the music as one of the past. This is as close to impossible as one can get. Partly because the man was so far ahead of his time in so many respects that artists will still be pursuing his inroads for eons to come. He's dead now and it's so hard to believe. Life has thrown so much at him: strokes, blindness, oppression and paralysis, to name a few, but none of these blows could chain or stunt his immense and significant musical growth. His music was always a joyful noise.

Rahsaan couldn't be stopped or even more than temporarily detained. The UMass community can attest to this as a couple of years ago, he was to do a performance here. Shortly before the performance, he had one of a series of strokes. The performance wasn't canceled as many of lesser spirit would be wont to do; it was postponed for the length of his recovery. Just one instance when he defied the odds.

The odds weren't all he defied either. When he played the music, he continuously defied what was, before him, the realm of possibility. He always seemed to do something no one had heard yet with every performance. He could always surprise even his closest followers.

His proficiency on all the reeds was unmatched. He was so damned good that his duets with himself were better than alot that two people were involved with. Even when stricken by paralysis, he'd still come out with two or more instruments strapped 'round his neck. While watching him play and seeing one hand motionless, you had to wonder, "Could I stand it if he was using both of his hands?!?".

He had total comand of any instrument he'd take to his lips. When you heard him play, you could feel it. He'd take the flute and not only play it but make it talk!! He could mouth the words into it and they'd come out the other end with hardly a flaw. No matter how many times you saw and heard the man play, there was no way you could predict what was coming next.

Rahsaan played two roles in his career; the interpreter and the innovator. As an interpreter, he displayed an amazing and relentless dedication to the music. He had to acknowledge who played — created the music and how they did it. He learned something from everything he heard. He learned and mastered all the music's developments. He studied the music with an obsession to know every chord that had been, is being and will be played. He studied Coltrane, the "Bird", Hawkins, et. al. Then when there were none left to study any more thoroughly, he'd shift his attention to other forms of music and incorporate them too. For instance, one could hear Latin percussion in some of his break-neck sax riffs.

Then, he'd take his outstanding musical knowledge and turn it into something new. As an innovator he continously synthesized his collection of elements breathing new life into the music. His role as interpretor was important to that of innovator though as he never adulterated the music. When he played something, it was the same thing when he was done with it as it was when he picked it up. It was different, and cosmically so, but it was still the same and you could still recognize it for what it was. In his innovation there was no bastardization of the original elements intact. It was uncanny the way he could make the music a totally different phenomenon without every leaving the boundaries of what it was and what it should grow to be. I only wish some people and artists today could be half as discriminate as he when they called something innovative.

Rahsaan took the music from the people, put his stamp on it and give it back to them. He'd take from the masters what he'd say they "...left for us to learn..." then turn around and embrace them — and us — with it. He was never slow to give recognition where it was due. It was part of the embrace to do so.

Also part of the embrace was giving comfort to those who would hear him. He was a symbol of a benevolent figure that oppressed people seek however consciously or unconsciously. He was also aware of special cases that would warrant special attention — a house call if you will. It's part of his "mission" to give "Water For Robeson And Williams". He was aware of their struggle and the significance of it. He had the courage (something some black entertainers lose sight of in cases like this) to support them publicly and show the lies for what they were. Rahsaan knew no compromise.

Rahsaan tried to do something for and show something to his people whenever the opportunity arose (remember, he didn't use the music to do his will; he wasn't like others who had the audacity to think that he could or even had the right). "Volunteered Slavery" was one of Rahsaan's many messages to the people. It seemed that his music was a manifestation of an indomitable Black spirit.

Rahsaan loved the music and he tried to pay homage to it by trying to start a movement to put it where it belonged. Years ago, Rahsaan coined the term "Black Classical Music". He used the term extensively when there was nothing like "An Evening of Black Classical Music" or Black Classical Radio Shows to share the term with him. He never felt foolish in his unique conviction but then how could a man who had eaten both money and maraccas on stage be made to feel foolish?!? Now, years after he felt it was the valid term, people are using it (and consequently, misusing it); Time is a funny thing isn't it? Thank goodness for people like Rahsaan Roland Kirk who come along and defy it.

The Vibration Continues is both a good chronicle of the years 1968-1976 and a proper title. It captures Rahsaan at his memorable performance at the 1968 Newport Jazz Festival (where he was the festival) and his various sessions at the Village Vanguard in New York. Producer Joel Dorn shows as much of Rahsaan as can be possible on two pieces of vinyl. I hope that he considers this only a start and that there will be more complications to come for those who missed such masterful moments as the "Inflated Tear" and "Blacknuss".

In ending this difficult review, I think I'll reiterate the approximate sentiment of good friend and colleague, Jack Cahill, in saying that while many brag about hearing the "Bird" and catchin' the "Trane", I'm not going to be jealous because, dammit, I heard Rahsaan Roland Kirk!!

Watermelon Wine:
The Spirit of Country Music
by Frye Gaillard
St. Martin's Press
($10.00 hard; 236 p.)
Reviewed by MARK HARRIS LEVITAN

This is the kind of book that gets read by someone kneeling in the bookstore. It has pictures and lyrics and attempts to follow some historical concept as it portrays the characters of country music (or rock or jazz etc.). In fact, you'd think you've seen this book before. You know, a book about the stars and high priests of Nashville country. A book promoting the few megastars that it has space to cover.

WELL, THAT JUST AIN'T THIS BOOK! Frye Gaillard jumps clear past the glossy outward mythology of country and digs into the heart of the matter. In his easily read, straightforward style, Gaillard uncovers it all — the best and worst aspects of country music and its world. He tears at the contradictions, the reactionaries and the almost complete loss of roots. Then he ties the roots back together where they started — blues, gospel, mountain music, folk, protest, rock. He looks the beast of commercially-spoiled country in the eye. He mixes the stories of the legends with the words of wisdom from those not so lucky. He shows that progressive country-rock from Austin and the Southern rock of Charlie Daniels and the Marshall Tucker Band have as much to do with the growth of country as did Bob Wills' Texas swing and Bill Monroe's bluegrass back in the '40s.

Gaillard restates the thesis that country reflects accurately the emotions of those involved in creating and listening to it. Those people have seen both good and bad times, and are subject to changing political and sexual values, too. I've listened to and read about lots of different country musics, and it's damned hard sometimes to figure out why Emmylou Harris is any more rooted in country than Olivia Newton-John, or why Olivia is more popular than Dolly Parton (is she?). Watermelon Wine answers a lot of questions in this regard; especially about roots and the burning moral questions about this style which has been dumped on so much in the past decade. There's so much to like about the broad scope of country, but there's so much to hate about it. "The tension between tradition and change," writes Gaillard, "has become a creative, dominating force in country music..." But commercialism is yet another, more destructive element.

This open-minded account is a most perceptive analysis of where country music has been and where it's likely to go. But I like it more for the perspective it yields about how country has changed other styles of music, and how those other styles have affected country music. Like everything else, it doesn't operate in a vacuum.

Jerry Brown:
The Man On The White Horse
by J.D. Lorenz
Houghton Mifflin
($8.95 hard; 261 p.)
Reviewed by MARK HARRIS LEVITAN

This is a devastating and potentially important book for those observing the changing national political scene and don't know what to make of it. It's about the media age of politics as it reaches advanced stages. It's about the merging of politics and entertainment. It's a primer on how to gain power and popularity by manipulating the right symbols. Jimmy Carter seems to have been mildly successful at this game, but Governor Jerry Brown of California may be the most proficient practitioner of "ruling by symbol". Indeed, Brown taught Carter a few tricks before the last election. Jerry Brown, of course, is the dedicated loner with "Zen consciousness," and is considered to have a fresh approach to politics.

It's a trifle shocking to find out what Brown's new approach consists of. He seems to understand the public perfectly. It was he that put forth the theory of "The Man On The White Horse," the benevolent leader that can accomplish more with the public mood than he can solve real problems. He's aware of the approach and he's good at it. He'll make a media splash about saving $20,000 on briefcases the day after the state loses millions of dollars in Federal funds. And he is unquestionably the most popular governor in California history.

J.D. Lorenz was one of Brown's top-level campaign aides and then served as director of the California Employment Development Dept. for eight months. He worked closely with Brown and found him unorganized, inefficient, and sometimes unable to cope with the problems of government. Lorenz writes of the oft-humorous encounters within the administration; the book as a whole reads easily and enjoyably. The weight of the substance is not exactly light, however. At times the account seems too personal, a trifle vindictive (Lorenze was fired), and even potentially libelous (although it is printed by a major house). I don't question its accuracy. The author makes several intelligent observations about the changing shape of politics in America, and his conclusions are on target: We do ask too much of government (one of Brown's themes), and maybe as a result the politics of symbolism are not entirely bad for morale. But symbols should not be the exclusive domain of the media-rich politicians. There will always be a need for pressure from outside the government for major change. The Man On The White Horse will make us feel too secure about the moment while the society crumbles.

In the end, Lorenz can't hold Jerry Brown accountable for his success at creating timely, solvable problems, and the other uses of symbolism. There is something larger, and more frightening at work here in the Age of Media, and we're all subject to the barrage. J.D. Lorenz has given us some timely information as to how we can be manipulated, even those of us that consider ourselves to be on the "outside". It's a new theme, a shaking one, and certainly one to take seriously.

carrots and asses

Fewer carrots are dangling lately,
many donkeys are after them.
Tramp, tramp, tramp, trampling each other.
We scurry for the spoils;
the dangler laughs.

Scurring for Bermuda vacation,
Scurry for chic, suburban sprawl,
scurry, scurry for bloated bank account,
he laughs.

Plenty of donkeys scheming lately,
plans for success, personal gain.
Figuring to chase carrots,
and cheat other asses
out of the biggest bite.

Lots of donkeys in school lately.
Days of dream and fantasy,
hoping to grow our own carrots,
but we donkeys spend all our time learning
how to beat other asses to dangling carrots.

Learning for cadillacs,
learning for gold threaded garments,
learning for capital gain-prestige.
Why not learning to live?
Why not learning to give?
They laugh.

Seems we're just asses
chasing carrots lately;
tramp, tramp, tramp, tampling each other.
They laugh at us.

Boston's highest form of entertainment costs less than a movie.

It's the Hancock Tower Observatory located 740 feet above the ground, atop the tallest building in New England. And from here you can see and feel the total Boston experience.

With 60 miles of breathtaking scenery, it's the most fantastic view of Boston there is. Especially at night.

Plus you'll see multi-media exhibits like an exciting light and sound show about the Revolution, featuring a 20-foot scale model of Boston in 1775.

The Observatory is open Monday through Saturday from 9am to 11pm and Sundays from noon till 11pm, every day except Thanksgiving and Christmas. Admission for students with a college I.D. is only $1.25. You'll find our ticket office on St. James Avenue opposite Copley Square.

So next time you spend a night on the town, visit Boston's highest spot. It's not only less expensive than a movie. It's live.

Those people have seen both good and bad times, and are subject to changing political and sexual values, too. I've listened to and read about lots of different country musics, and it's damned hard sometimes to figure out why Emmylou Harris is any more rooted in country than Olivia Newton-John, or why Olivia is more popular than Dolly Parton (is she?). Watermelon Wine answers a lot of questions in this regard; especially about roots and the burning moral questions about this style which has been dumped on so much in the past decade. There's so much to like about the broad scope of country, but there's so much to hate about it. "The tension between tradition and change," writes Gaillard, "has become a creative, dominating force in country music..." But commercialism is yet another, more destructive element.

This open-minded account is a most perceptive analysis of where country music has been and where it's likely to go. But I like it more for the perspective it yields about how country has changed other styles of music, and how those other styles have affected country music. Like everything else, it doesn't operate in a vacuum.

The Man On The White Horse

This is a devastating and potentially important book for those observing the changing national political scene and don't know what to make of it. It's about the media age of politics as it reaches advanced stages. It's about the merging of politics and entertainment. It's a primer on how to gain power and popularity by manipulating the right symbols. Jimmy Carter seems to have been mildly successful at this game, but Governor Jerry Brown of California may be the most proficient practitioner of "ruling by symbol". Indeed, Brown taught Carter a few tricks before the last election. Jerry Brown, of course, is the dedicated loner with "Zen consciousness," and is considered to have a fresh approach to politics.

It's a trifle shocking to find out what Brown's new approach consists of. He seems to understand the public perfectly. It was he that put forth the theory of "The Man On The White Horse," the benevolent leader that can accomplish more with the public mood than he can solve real problems. He's aware of the approach and he's good at it. He'll make a media splash about saving $20,000 on briefcases the day after the state loses millions of dollars in Federal funds. And he is unquestionably the most popular governor in California history.

J.D. Lorenz was one of Brown's top-level campaign aides and then served as director of the California Employment Development Dept. for eight months. He worked closely with Brown and found him unorganized, inefficient, and sometimes unable to cope with the problems of government. Lorenz writes of the oft-humorous encounters within the administration; the book as a whole reads easily and enjoyably. The weight of the substance is not exactly light, however. At times the account seems too personal, a trifle vindictive (Lorenze was fired), and even potentially libelous (although it is printed by a major house). I don't question its accuracy. The author makes several intelligent observations about the changing shape of politics in America, and his conclusions are on target: We do ask too much of government (one of Brown's themes), and maybe as a result the politics of symbolism are not entirely bad for morale. But symbols should not be the exclusive domain of the media-rich politicians. There will always be a need for pressure from outside the government for major change. The Man On The White Horse will make us feel too secure about the moment while the society crumbles.

In the end, Lorenz can't hold Jerry Brown accountable for his success at creating timely, solvable problems, and the other uses of symbolism. There is something larger, and more frightening at work here in the Age of Media, and we're all subject to the barrage. J.D. Lorenz has given us some timely information as to how we can be manipulated, even those of us that consider ourselves to be on the "outside". It's a new theme, a shaking one, and certainly one to take seriously.

carrots and asses

Fewer carrots are dangling lately,
many donkeys are after them.
Tramp, tramp, tramp, trampling each other.
We scurry for the spoils;
the dangler laughs.

Scurring for Bermuda vacation,
Scurry for chic, suburban sprawl,
scurry, scurry for bloated bank account,
he laughs.

Plenty of donkeys scheming lately,
plans for success, personal gain.
Figuring to chase carrots,
and cheat other asses
out of the biggest bite.

Lots of donkeys in school lately.
Days of dream and fantasy,
hoping to grow our own carrots,
but we donkeys spend all our time learning
how to beat other asses to dangling carrots.

Learning for cadillacs,
learning for gold threaded garments,
learning for capital gain-prestige.
Why not learning to live?
Why not learning to give?
They laugh.

Seems we're just asses
chasing carrots lately;
tramp, tramp, tramp, tampling each other.
They laugh at us.

Boston's highest form of entertainment costs less than a movie.

It's the Hancock Tower Observatory located 740 feet above the ground, atop the tallest building in New England. And from here you can see and feel the total Boston experience.
With 60 miles of breathtaking scenery, it's the most fantastic view of Boston there is. Especially at night.
Plus you'll see multi-media exhibits like an exciting light and sound show about the Revolution, featuring a 20-foot scale model of Boston in 1775.
The Observatory is open Monday through Saturday from 9am to 11pm and Sundays from noon till 11pm, every day except Thanksgiving and Christmas. Admission for students with a college I.D. is only $1.25. You'll find our ticket office on St. James Avenue opposite Copley Square.
So next time you spend a night on the town, visit Boston's highest spot. It's not only less expensive than a movie. It's live.

the one hand...

the knowledge that nearly twice as many professors released their evaluations this time. The evaluations are consequently that much more accurate, statistically speaking.

A second improvement is that the guide has been purged of those offensive graphics that caused such an uproar in the first edition. An added attraction is the fine photo by sporadic Collegian rhetorician Jim Paulin that graces the inside back cover.

One observation one might make is that grade inflation seems to have become the rule for professors as well as students these days. Looking through those evaluations which offer letter grades, there seems to be a predominance of A's and B's. Then again, maybe that's just an indication of the competence of our faculty members (sic II). And as usual, there are a number of professors who should be plAced on immediate academic probation ...

It is often noted that students are consumers of an eductional product and that as such they have every reason to expect that their right to be treated as consumers will not be violated. One important right all consumers should demand is that they be given complete information about the product they are purchasing (read the label!). Consumers of public education at UMass are forced to obtain that information themselves, an absurd and unfair requirement. While the efforts of the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee are laudable, the ultimate goal should be an evaluation-description guide financed and prepared by the administration, which unquestionably has greater access to the kinds of information that would make for a more complete and accurate guide.

The present guide is interesting for at least one more reason. Think of the best male professor you ever had here — then the best female. Now compare their salaries, which appear on pages 160-167. This is hardly scientific, but no doubt comparisons with friends will reveal a general pattern ... 'nuff said?

My last words come by way of warning to those who would take the guide a little too seriously. The two surest ways of finding good faculty members are talking to people who have had them and sitting in on a few classes this semester. But for the "rough ideas-plus" that can be drawn from On the Other Hand II, here's a "thanks" to all involved in creating this semester's edition.

nt's lounge or not?

feeshop, Hatch, Bluewall, TOC?

C) Should the BOG research student run operations for the Hatch and Bluewall.

I am a student involved with Earthfoods and the Co-op Coalition, a group of representatives from ten student coops. I am asking students to support multiple use of the Cape Cod Lounge. In any case, you should vote on this.

There is a long and sordid history around the Cape Cod Lounge. A member of the BOG was involved daily with the renovation of this Lounge. She involved an entire design class in planning three possible seating arrangements. These plans were cost-estimated by the CC Administration as being too expensive to implement. The students involved in this project quit the BOG with a deep sense of frustration. The CC Administration hired a professional designer to draw up the plans for the lounge. The BOG agreed in Nov. of 1977 for the CC Administration to buy furniture, but not approving the final plans for the room.

This spring, I have been involved with students who have been planning the use of the space in the Cape Cod Lounge. We would like to have half of the space for new furniture and carpet with the other half for Earthfoods in the morning and for lunch. Earthfoods will use stackable tables so that folk dancing can use that space at night.

To add my personal speculations on the motives of the CC Administration I must give some background history. I was very involved in getting the Credit Union their present space as a member of the Board of Governors. The colonial Lounge (the Credit Union space) had gone out to bid to commercial banks to come on to campus. When that space became a Student Federal Credit Union, the CC Administration drew up alternative plans. A set of blueprints exists with a bank operation set up in the study section of the Music Room of the CC Complex. A bank, right across from the Bluewall, would pay rent to the CC Administration. The bids were only to commercial banks, who primarily serve businesses not savings banks, who loan money back to people. The CC Administration has wanted a branch bank on campus for years, so all their money making operations get use of a bank right in the complex. A bank in the music room would knock out a quiet, relaxed atmosphere for listening to music and studying.

Aha! The Cape Cod Lounge could be a great music lounge, Bud Wilkes is assistant Director of the CC Complex. The corner of the Student Union becomes a tradeoff for their commercially rented space on the CC concourse. The Administration is willing to be patient on this issue, after all, time is always a relative question between students and Administrators.

If you want to participate in the decision on how the Cape Cod Lounge should be used, fill out a referendum located at a table on the CC concourse this week.

Consequences of lease breaking

By MICHAEL LEAF

As the end of the semester approaches, many student tenants wonder what will happen if they break their lease. This article will attempt to answer some of the more common questions.

What is a lease?

A lease is an agreement between a landlord and a tenant allowing the tenant to remain in an apartment or house for a certain length of time at a set rent. If you leave your apartment before the expiration date and stop paying rent, you may be sued by your landlord. While it is not "illegal" or "unlawful" to leave before your lease ends, you have signed a contract and may be held legally responsible for the unpaid rent. If your landlord does agree to let you out of the lease (highly unlikely at this time of year) be sure to get it in writing.

If Landlord Refuses?

If you landlord has refused to release you from paying rent, you have several options. Two of the most common ones are subletting to another person, or taking your chances on being sued and leaving anyway.

Subletting

Unless your lease forbids it, you may sublet your apartment for the remainder of your contract, if you are lucky enough to find somebody (a sublessee) who wants to move in. If you do find a sublessee be sure to have them sign a written agreement. There are forms for this available at the Legal Services Office, Room 922 Campus Center. At this point, you should ask your landlord to release you from your contract. The sublessee then becomes responsible to the landlord and you have fulfilled your contract. Even if the sublessee fails to pay the rent, you are off the hook. If your landlord refuses to release you from your contract, but still permits you to sublet, you are responsible for assuring that the rent is paid. In this case, it is wise to get a security deposit from your sublessee to protect yourself in the event that they also want to leave.

Can't Sublet?

Many students who cannot find anyone to sublet their apartment decide to just leave town anyway. If you do this, you risk being held responsible for the rent until somebody else moves in; that is, you might be sued by your landlard. The landlord must wait to sue until after the rent is due — so you cannot be sued in June for your unpaid August rent. Lawsuits are expensive and time consuming. Do not assume that the landlord will sue just because you owe rent. Many landlords figure that it is not worth the trouble because they will not be able to collect from the students anyway.

The end result is usually that the landlord will raise the rent the next year to compensate for summer losses.

If Your Landlord Sues

In the event that your landlord does sue you, you should be aware of the following things:

1. If you have sublet your apartment to somebody else without being released from your lease, you may sue the sublessee for any money which they owe.

2. The landlord will have to show that s-he has made an effort to try to re-rent the apartment. (Usually just listing with a realtor or placing an advertisement in the newspaper is sufficient).

3. If you have caused any damage to the apartment in excess of the amount of your security deposit, the landlord can sue you for this also. So be sure to leave the apartment in broom clean condition with only reasonable wear and tear left unfixed. If you think that the landlord will try to hold you responsible for damage done to your apartment, you should try to take pictures before you move out.

4. It might be important for you to prove when you left the apartment — so when you leave, drop off your keys with a note to the landlord stating that you are vacating and that s-he is free to re-rent the apartment. Be sure tc keep a copy of this note.

Security Deposit

One final point to keep in mind is that the landlord has the right to apply your security deposit toward any unpaid rent. So, even if you have left your apartment in good condition, there is a chance that you may not get your security deposit back.

There will be another article on the topic of Security Deposits in the near future. For further information, you can contact LSO for an appointment.

LSO To Hold Workshops

If you have any further questions, or wish to have any of the information presented here clarified, please come to one of the workshops scheduled during the remainder of the semester. These workshops will be held as follows: April 27th from 3 to 5 in room CC 162; May 3rd and May 16th from 3 to 5 in room 165 CC. In addition to the topics covered in this article, we will discuss various legal causes of action you might have against your landlord, and certain situations where the law recognizes the right of the tenant to move out before the expiration of the lease, without being liable for rent.

'Bounce for Beats' drive dunks on UM coaches

By MAURA A. HALKIOTIS
Collegian Staff

"Got em wet" was the popular slogan at the annual Bounce for Beats heart fund drive sponsored by Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity yesterday on the Campus Center concourse.

Over 20 gallons of water were dunked on the heads of such UMass "celebrities" as Ron Archer, head of the chemistry department, football coach Bob Pickette and basketball coach John Leaman. The event was held as part of Greek Week festivities.

Participants paid a quarter for two chances to sink a basketball in a garbage can. Those who did won the right to duck.

One woman, Joan Wysocki, won seven dunks on her boss Archer. "I never could have done it if it was anybody else," Wysocki said.

The highlight of the afternoon came with the appearance of Coach Leaman.

When a member of Leaman's team paid for the pleasure of dunking the coach, Leaman commented, "You didn't hit one all year, you better not hit one now, you stiff!"

"I've been doing this every year, it's a lot of fun," Leaman said.

All the participants said they enjoyed being dunked-on and were glad for the use of warm water, which overflowed plastic boundaries onto the surrounding concrete.

According to Leo Gray, chairman for the event, Bounce for Beats began at UMass as a basketball dribbling marathon but was changed to a dunkathon in 1968.

The event is a national one for Sigma Alpha Mu chapters throughout the country and is held at UMass during Greek Week every year.

Participating in today's dunkings will be lacrosse coach Dick Garber, Jon Hite of the SGA and Shu - the - Sandwich - Board - Man.

Your Birthday

THURSDAY, APRIL 27
Born today, you have a good, clear understanding of your place in the scheme of things. You take great joy from your home and family and have little trouble adapting to the stresses of your work. Articulate, conversational, eager to associate with others, you spend time alone only when you must.

You seek help when you need it, rather than suffer anguish in silence. You refuse to go through emotional upheaval without sharing it with loved ones, for you believe it their responsibility to you to help you through it, as it is yours to help them.

You are idealistic, but not afraid to look at life the way it is. You enjoy material things, but are not extravagant. You like to experiment with styles of living, different foods, fashions, and so on. You have no difficulty living uP to your view of yourself, for you are realistic about your abilities.

Also born on this date are: Coretta Scott King, civil rights leader and widow of civil rights leader Martin Luther King; Sandy Dennis, actress.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

FRIDAY, APRIL 28

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) -- Knowledge and training are different — you can teach with the former, but need the latter to perform.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) - Don't wear your heart on your sleeve. Keep your romantic activities to yourself.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) -- With definite purpose, you shouldn't have trouble deciding on a plan. Seek advice.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) -- Consider the problems at home more seriously. Answers are coming.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) -- Emotional response to another's success may surprise you. Don't let jealousy influence a decision.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) -- Calculate the difference between what you've paid for and what you've received. You may have a case.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) -- Your taste in clothes enables you to impress others easily. Relax; enjoy yourself.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) -- The religious tendency of a coworker may cause concern. Be patient.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) -- Concern yourself with the details of the situation at home. It's time to back-track.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) -- Determine your immediate future more fully. You may find options multiplying.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) -- Versatility is key today. Rid yourself of opinions you've been harboring.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) -- Cultivate will power. You can reach greater heights if you work.

Brewers rock Torrez, win 6-4

MILWAUKEE [UPI] — Home runs by Cecil Cooper and Charlie Moore yesterday night sparked the Milwaukee Brewers to a 6-4 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Cooper hit a solo shot, his sixth, off loser Mike Torrez in the first inning to snap a 1-1 tie. Moore's first homer of the season came off Torrez with Gorman Thomas aboard in the second inning and increased the Brewers' lead to 4-1.

The Brewers chased Torrez in the third with their fifth run on singles by Jim Gantner, Cooper and Ben Oglivie. The final Milwaukee run came in the sixth on a leadoff single by Oglivie, a fielder's choice, and an RBI single by Thomas.

Boston knocked out winner Mike Caldwell, 1-0, in the seventh when Jerry Remy and Rick Burleson hit one-out singles. Ed Rodriguez relieved and gave up a run-scoring double to Jim Rice. The Red Sox also scored two runs in the fifth on a double by Burleson and infield groundout by Carl Yastrzemski.

Anderson, and Vosburgh passed off to Norm Smith, who waltzed in, and tied things up. Timeout; Hofstra.

Hofstra's Scheno fired a long drive which appeared to be a routine save, but it slipped by Goldstein, and Hofstra led again, 6-5.

Good passing tied it up for UMass with eight minutes remaining in the first half. Dougie Brown put a pass right into Vosburgh's stick who caught Sweet alone near the Dutchmen goal. 6-6. However seconds later Stoecher just caught the right post with his shot and the Dutchmen led 7-6.

The give and go, perfectly timed, put Hofstra up 8-6 when the duo of Bobby Gilmartin to Stoecher connected. Eddie Murray tricked a shot just over the goal line and the half ended with Hofstra holding a slim 8-7 lead.

Sweet tied it one minute into the second half with the assist going to Smith. And twenty seconds later UMass had a golden opportunity to go ahead for the first time-but Murray's shot richocheted off the crossbar. Adding insult to injury, Hofstra then scored four straight goals and were up 12-8 after 75% of the game was over.

UMass couldn't close the gap in the final fifteen minutes: Mike Lettera scored in the first 40 seconds (from long range) to close to within three, 12-9, but it was only the beginning of the two teams trading goals the rest of the game (Vosburgh scored with 7 minutes gone to make it 13-10 and Sweet finished the scoring-assist to Smith, with one minute left to play).

Pipe shots... Hofstra goalie Paul Sanit played decent in net, coming up with some tough saves in close... faceoffs also hurt UMass, as Hofstra seemed in control of them throughout... UMass is currently second in New England-behind Harvard.... Sweet has 41 goals on the season, 14 short of Frank Garahan (women's lacrosse coach)'s record of 55.....

Netwomen top Smith; start 'unofficial season'

By MICHAEL SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's tennis team keeps a low profile. In fact, if you ask UMass sports information about the netwomen, you might come away unsure of the team's existence. But Smith College learned yesterday, via a 8-3 loss, that there is indeed a women's tennis team here.

In the first match of what the sports information office calls an "unofficial season," the women's tennis team reigned supreme on the Smith courts.

"Everybody played up to expectation," said UMass coach Bill Yu. "I expected a little better match."

UMass' top singles player, freshwoman Cathy Maher, led the onslaught with a 6-3, 6-1 victory over Debbie Dwight.

However, the match of the day was Cathy Sullivan's three hour triumph over Smith's Eall Suh, 6-2, 5-7, 7-5. Suh, severely handicapped by a pulled leg muscle, ignored pleas by Smith coach Chris Davis to quit the match.

"She was limping around by the third set," Yu said. "That was some match. She's a helluva competitor."

The women played seven singles and four doubles matches. Unlike men's intercollegiate tennis, rules forbid women from competing in both singles and doubles in the same match.

Coach Yu said he feels the ruling is worth while "because it allows more girls to play."

The premier doubles match was Chris and sister Jane Carson's 6-4, 6-3 victory over the Smith pair of Wendy Markus and Debbie Riester.

The women face UConn tomorrow at 2:30 p.m. on the NOPE courts and Yu said he expects a tougher match.

Netmen prepare for NE's

By MICHAEL SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The New England Tennis Championships open at Amherst College today at 3 p.m. and all is not well with the UMass participants.

The championship will utilize 95 tennis courts throughout the Five College area and include teams from 38 schools. The four day tournament will conclude with the finals on Sunday.

Despite UMass' 5-1 record, Coach Steve Williams was critical of his team yesterday and its chances of successfully competing with the Ivy league schools, the predominant powers in New England college tennis.

"We can't beat the local competition," Williams said. "We'll have trouble against the Harvards, the Yales ... "

Last year the Minutemen gave their best performance ever at the New England's and finished sixth out of 32 teams.

Williams, the head pro at the Amherst Tennis Academy in his first year as UMass coach, voiced skepticism about his top two singles players, Alan Green and Rickey Sharton.

Williams said their performance over "the past two weeks basically taints my view of how our much more talented players will do in the New England's."

Green, who holds a 4-2 singles record, and was undefeated before this week, said the criticism was not unjust.

"He knows I'm annoyed with the way I'm playing," Green said. "I'm just in a slump."

Last spring Green sported a 8-0 record and made it to the third round of the New England's before he lost to the eventual champion, Carrie Leeds of Yale.

Sharton, with an unimpressive 2-3 record, is unabashed in admitting that "I haven't played anyone I should have lost to."

At third singles, Steve Heyl started the season slow but has polished his net game and come on strong in recent weeks to attain a 4-2 record.

Williams has a string of talented freshmen who have added strength to the UMass lower singles.

Home grown Mark Huetteman 4-2, from Amherst High has shown he is a consistent tennis player at fourth singles.

Fifth singles player Keith Hovland, 3-1, has shared the fifth singles position with sophomore Dave Nowak. Hovland and Heyl comprise UMass' hottest double team.

Finally, base line rallier Sergio Strepman has worn down or outlasted four opponents and lost only one match.

Litano's bat lifts JVs to sweep of Dartmouth

By WALT CHERNIAK
Collegian Staff

Hard-hitting Mark Litano drove in three runs with two triples, a double and a single to power the J.V. baseball team to a 15-3 victory over Dartmouth yesterday, completing a doubleheader sweep.

UMass stroked five straight hits in the sixth inning to break a 3-3 tie and capture a 7-3 victory in the first game.

Litano tripled home Jason Thomas in the first inning of the nightcap, and scored on a single by Chris Koperniak to launch what was eventually an 18-hit attack, and doubled home another run in the second.

Tom Grimes, who was pressed into duty by injuries and exam conflicts, was the benefactor of the second game barrage, as he picked up a complete game win, yielding all three Dartmouth runs in the third. Normally an outfielder (he drove home two runs in the opener), Grimes fanned eight and allowed nine hits. In the meantime, his replacement Ernie Goulet smashed a two-run homer in the fifth to break the game wide open.

Both Litano and Chris Koperniak went 4-for-5 with three rbi's, while Jason Thomas had three hits, stole two based and scored twice.

Scott Hildreth picked up the first game win in an effective complete game seven-hitter, settling down after yielding two first inning runs, to pick up his second victory of the season.

Paul Rampone tied the game for UMass with a two-run triple, and scored on a fielder's choice by Grimes to put the Minutemen ahead in the fourth, before Dartmouth tied it up.

In the sixth, however, UMass took command, as they drilled four straight singles for two runs, and then Mark Litano (who else?) tripled home the final two runs.

Litano was 5-for-9 on the doubleheader, with 5 rbis, and raised his batting average to a lofty .518. Needless to say, coach Jim Bedard was pleased with the play of his team, now 9-4 on the season.

"We did very well. In the second game, every player in the line-up has at least one run batted in. That doesn't happen very often."

The hitting of the J.V.s, practically invisible in Tuesday's loss to Amherst College, was very sound yesterday, as they scored 22 runs and pounded out 28 hits in the double win in New Hampshire.

UMass returns home this afternoon, as they will take on AIC as the J.V. field this afternoon at 3:00 p.m. Righthander Steve Aulenback, who was unable to make the Dartmouth trip because of exams, is scheduled to start for the Minutemen. Aulenback has impressed in the early going this season.

UMass lacrosse; hot and cold

Gazelles win in rout over Bridgewater

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

The essence of quality ... each team strives for it. .. the UMass women's lacrosse team seems to have found it.

The stickers, in action yesterday afternoon on NOPE field, once again united with some fine precision play to defeat Bridgewater State, 12-0.

Their record now stands at an impressive 6-0 as they head into a Saturday doubleheader against an undefeated University of New Hampshire team.

If their quality stickwork and passing, as seen against Bridgewater yesterday continues, Saturday's game looks to be a good one.

Coach Garahan said that he was very happy with yesterday's play. "Well, I was hoping they'd execute ... I couldn't have asked for more."

First half action opened with a UMass goal three minutes into game play. Bridgewater, with many incomplete passes, seemed unprepared for UMass offensive pressure.

The stickers continued with a steady stream of goals (8 total) before the half-time whistle.

Jean Hackett, who was to score four goals in the game, put UMass on the scoreboard as she finished a downfield passing play of Gayle Hutchinson to Judy Kennedy and on to Hackett and the score.

This style of well-executed passing and team effort was to typify UMass play.

Hackett again scored two minutes later on a long pass from Grace Martinelli, at mid-field.

A Fiona McAllister goal from Carrie Nickerson, and another Hackett goal, off of the stick of Debbie Hartley, left the score at UMass 4, Bridgewater-0.

Meanwhile, a frustrated Bridgewater team, which had good potential but was unable to connect with passes, vainly struggled to score.

McAllister, who was displaying some fine stickwork in front of the net,continued the drive, as she scored from another great Martinelli pass from mid-field.

Julie Hall, Judy Kennedy, and Debbie Hartley finished 1st half scoring with one goal apiece, and the half-time score was 8-0.

In second half action, UMass was to score four more goals, although a pick-up in Bridgewater play and some sloppy UMass executions made the competition tight.

Hartley, took a beautiful pass from Allyson Toney on the right side of the net and put the ninth goal in from the left angle early in the half.

Nickerson, Kennedy, and Hackett scored the three final goals in the last four minutes of play, as UMass again got their offensive drive in action.

Gorillas fall in tight game to Dutchmen

By R.P. SMITH
Collegian Staff

I guess it just wasn't meant to be.

The Flying Dutchmen left the cozy confines of the Campus Center hotel, made themselves at home in 'The Pit' before over 631 rambunctious, rowdy fans, and earned themselves a 14-11 decision over the Minutemen.

The outcome gives both UMass and Hofstra 5-4 records.

Hofstra and UMas both played a close checking game at the outset. UMass, following a 'Duck' Goldstein save, executed a fast break play, but Norm Smith was checked off the ball nearby the Hofstra crease.

Hofstra's Vinnie Sombrotto cut the UMass crease, dumped a shot past Goldstein to put the Dutchmen up at the 2:52 mark of the opening period. The score became knotted when Pit Martin scouped up the loose ball at the tip of the Hofstra crease and flipped it into the empty net.

The Dutchmen then made their first bid to put the contest away by scoring the next three goals, making the score 4-1. The fourth one in particular was a thing of beauty. Hofstra's Mike Scheno moved the ball towards the UMass net. He passed off to teammate Rich Stoecher who, with his back to the next, tossed it over his shoulder into the strings. Pit Martin got his second of the game on an easy in close shot which narrowed the margin to 4-2 at the end of one period of play.

Early in the second quarter, Gary Burton upped the score to 5-2 after having camped at the left post. This led to a UMass timeout in hopes of regrouping the troops.

The Gorillas got cookin' and eventually evened the score at five, on a shot that squeeked out of Brooks Sweet stick (from Skip Vosburgh), a rifle shot from Billy

Minutemen sweep Green, Kalinowski adds six hits

By MEL WEBSTER
Collegian Staff

HANOVER, N.H. — On a day that seemed to be made just to play baseball, the UMass Minutemen rolled over the Green of Dartmouth 6-0 and 7-1 in a doubleheader at Red Rolfe Field.

The Minutemen combined good and timely hitting with strong pitching to nail down the two victories.

Chris Collins got the nod in the first game and he fired a three hitter at the Green. Collins had trouble in only the first inning as Dartmouth failed to get more than one runner on base after that.

In that first inning, Sandy Emery led off with a single and Brad Blair had a two-out hit, but Collins struck out Mike Durham looking to end the threat. Collins fanned five batters on the day, compared with only one walk.

The Minutemen got their offense show rolling in the third inning with two men out. Ed Skribiski started the rally with a walk, then four straight hits gave the Minutemen four runs. The hit getters were Doug Aylward and Dale Stone, doubles; and Mike McEvilly and Leo Kalinowski, singles. Kalinowski had six hits in the doubleheader and now has a total of 12 in his last four games.

UMass pushed across single runs in the fifth and seventh on two more Kalinowski RBI's to give him three for the game. Aylward also had two hits.

Collins raised his record to 3-2 and lowered his ERA to 2.81.

In the second game, the Minutemen jumped all over Dartmouth starter Joe Nicosia and reliever Steve Boulanger for seven runs in the first two innings. They scored one in the first on singles by Skribiski and Aylward and an error by Nicosia and then exploded for six in the second.

Catcher Mike Walsh started the surge with a hard single to left and then advanced to third on two wild pitches. Mike Stockley then walked and Skribiski tripled them both home. Boulanger was called in to pitch and he immediately proceeded to walk, Aylward and give up a long two-run triple to McEvilly. McEvilly then scored on a bad throw on an attempted pick off play.

The inning finally came to an end as John Czerapowicz reached on an error and was singled home by Kalinowski.

Tom Nigro started for UMass and pitched three hitless innings before he was replaced by Dave Tewhill. Coach Dick Bergquist said he wanted to save Nigro for one of the Rhode Island games Saturday and when he got the big lead he decided to take him out.

Dartmouth caused some trouble in the fourth when Tewhill walked the first two batters, but he got out of the inning allowing only one run to score on a sacrifice fly. Tewhill also worked out of a jam in the fifth when Tom Bird singled to left and Tony Luppino moved him to third when the sun played havoc with his fly ball to left.

Tewhill pitched effectively in the sixth and Mike Yacyshyn came in to mop up in the seventh. The Minutemen were continuously getting men on base between the third and seventh innings, but Boulanger managed to keep them off the board.

Nigro was given the victory despite pitching only three innings because Bergquist said he had planned to pitch he and Tewhill equally. In this case, the most effective pitcher gets the victory, according to Bergquist. Nigro's record is now 3-4.

FOUL TIPS — The Minutemen were six for six in the stolen base department... Kalinowski raised his average 39 points to .352 while Aylward who was named Yankee Conference player of the week was on base six times, 3 hits and 3 walks... The 12-16 Minutemen (10-8 North) will host Bridgeport todat at 3 p.m. in Bridgeport's final game of the season.

Yaz to retire? Can't be

The first I heard of it was early Tuesday morning when my still weary eyes spotted the headline in The Boston Globe. The implication was that Carl Yastrzemski was considering the prospects of retirement at the end of the 1979 season. Yaz ... retire? The thought is revolting. I mean, this famous potato farmer's son from Long Island is my only link between the present and the faraway past: my first grade teacher has long since been married and moved away, the family has sold the old house on Prospect St. in Mid Cambridge, and in sports I've already lost John Havlicek.

Oh sure, John Bucyk still wears number nine for the Boston Bruins, but that's about all he does these days; leaving Captain Carl as the only remnant from the early sixties still gracing the Boston sports scene.

My emotions tempt me to spend the next few minutes telling tales of my favorite Yaz memories, but I can't. After all, we each have our favorites.

Suffice it to say that any guy who can be booed in 1969 by just about everybody, as well as suffer the humiliation of a $500 "lack of hustle" fine levied by Dick Williams, and then make the turnaround that he has ... hmmm, too bad Reggie Smith couldn't handle the wrath of Joe Fan.

I feel that Carl Yastrzemski permanently endeared himself to the fans of Boston on that day in 1975 when he buried home plate with dirt after an alleged (by Yaz) bad third strike call by the plate umpire. There was something about that event that the fans likes. Sure, the umpires didn't like it ("He's a crybaby": Ron Luciano), but I haven't seen Yaz booed since.

Rebuttal Department

To the person who took offense to my recent column on past Red Sox opening days, did you ever stop to think that the only mistake made was in the year that Aparicio, Josephson, and Griffin were in the starting lineup? The interpretation I make of your letter is that none of those events I stated ever happened, but they happened in 1971, not 1970. If an all out apology is what you want, then please accept mine. Also, I find it humorous in that you were "downright insulted" by my error. May I suggest that you not take your sports so damn seriously? You spelled Little Looie's name incorrectly, by the way ... Now really, pal.

Sports Notes

Baseball coach Dick Bergquist has added to his roster two more players. Pete Rankowicz, a pitcher, has been working out with the team and John Czerapowicz is rejoining the team after an elbow operation. Czerapowicz, also a football player, will be used mostly as a designated hitter and pinch runner ... Former UMass hurler Jeff Reardon has been extremely impressive in early season action with the New York Mets' Double A farm team. Mets scouts consider him one of the top five or six prospects in the system ... Speaking of injuries, JV lacrosse tri-captain John Halpern has been lost for the season, the victim of a broken collarbone ... The wrestling team held their annual picnic last week, and Tim Fallon and Larry Otsuka were honored for their past season's performances. Charley Rigoglioso was named as the most improved wrestler. Otsuka will captain next year's team ... The Holyoke Millers just completed a seven game road trip in which three games were rained out. The Millers split the four games they played, leaving their seasonal record at 3-5. Best player in the young campaign has been first baseman Gary Holle, from Albany, New York, who has hit four homers already. Holle led the Eastern League in round trippers last season ...

51 fall to death in W. Virginia

ST. MARYS, W.Va. (AP) — All 51 workers atop a scaffold inside a power company cooling tower were killed yesterday when the construction framework collapsed and the crew fell 168 feet to the ground in a twisted mass of steel and rubble.

Scott Widmeyer, press aide to Gov. Jay Rockefeller, said hours after the accident, "There are 51 confirmed dead."

Rescuers had to pull many of the victims from under the debris inside the base of the huge circular concrete tower.

A local fire station was pressed into service as a temporary morgue where relatives came to identify the dead, including eight members of one family working at the site.

John Peppler, a laborer standing on the ground in the middle of the tower when the disaster occurred, said the scaffold, wrapped around the inside of the tower, began peeling away and then fell.

Peppler, 38, said, "The first thing I heard was concrete falling. I had just sent a basket ... up. I looked over my left shoulder and I could see it falling. I could see people falling through the air and everything falling."

"They just fell like dominoes," a witness said. "I looked up and men were screaming and hollering."

Peppler said he jumped under a truck ramp inside the tower and the four other workers with him ran to the center of the tower. All those on the ground escaped injury, he said.

A twisted mass of tables, lumber, steel and concrete lay over the scene an hour after the collapse.

Just after the accident, 21 bodies were wrapped in khaki blankets and lined up on plastic sheets at the plant site near this Ohio River town in northwestern West Virginia.

The cooling tower was being built for Monongahela Power Co., which draws river water to make steam and generate electricity. When completed, the cooling tower is to be used to cool down the water before it flows back into the river.

Research Cottrell of Bound brook, N.J. was building the tower for the power company.

Monongahela Power said the structure was about one-third completed. A spokesman said the diameter at the base was 360 feet and the tower was to be 430 feet tall when finished.

George Morrison, an engineer, said: "I was on the ground when it started making noise. It was just a roar."

Lee Steele, of nearby Shultz, said he lost four of his five sons, a brother, two brothersin-law and a nephew. The surviving son, Robert, 35, who said he was also employed at the construction site but was not on the scaffolding, identified his brothers as Gayle, 32; Ronnie, 30, Ernest, 28, and Miles, 25.

The Steeles and other weeping relatives gathered at the makeshift morgue at the fire station in Belmont to identify the victims.

Names of most of the victims were not immediately released.

DeLima found guilty

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

In a precedant-setting decision last night, Undergraduate Student Senate Speaker Brian J. DeLima was found guilty by the Student Judiciary on two charges stemming from his abuse of senate phones to make 73 long-distance phone calls worth $313 to his home state of Hawaii.

The Student Judiciary will meet again tonight to decide on the sentence for DeLima. A finding of guilty can lead to expulsion from the University, but Student Attorney General Jeffrey A. Lutsky said after the trial, "I can guarantee you that I will not ask for suspension."

It is the first time the judiciary has tried a case concerning abuse of telephones by a member of a Recognized Student Organization.

The three judges — Robin Zeigel, Steve Forman and presiding judge Donna Cohen — rejected DeLima's plea of "not guilty by reason of demurrer" on both charges.

By pleading demurrer, DeLima conceded that he had made the calls, but that he had done nothing wrong.

Three charges were brought against DeLima by Lutsky following a month-long investigation. The charges were: misrepresenting the senate "without prior consent of that group," and fradulently obtaining telephone service through "unauthorized charging to the account of another."

A third charge of "knowingly submitting false information" was withdrawn by Lutsky at the trial's beginning.

For four hours last night, room 169 of the Campus Center was transformed into a emotion-filled courtroom, as DeLima's defense advocate Jon Hensleigh and Lutsky argued whether the senate speaker has permission to use the senate phones for personal long-distance calls, and if DeLima had any intention of paying for his calls.

Lutsky argued throughout the evening that DeLima had "intentionally and deliberately diverted the system" and "never made any attempt to pay back the calls. The student body has paid for his personal phone calls."

Allowed by the judges to act in his own defense' along with Hensleigh, DeLima denied Lutsky's assertions in his opening statement, saying, "I did use the phones for personal business, had prior consent and made arrangements to pay back, before any investigation started."

DeLima testified that when he was first elected as speaker in October 1976, he was told by then senate Treasurer Thomas Kerrins " 'it was all right' to use the phones for long-distance, but said it would take a long time to be billed."

DeLima said it was common practice for officers to use office phones for personal calls.

When DeLima took the witness stand, Hensleigh asked him if he had "prior consent" to use the senate phones for

Tenants to meet with committee

By GEORGE O BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee will try to end nearly four months of inaction Sunday when it meets with the two tenant representatives to discuss their dissatisfaction with the five-member committee.

Tenant representative Mary Wentworth, who has boycotted committee meetings since January, agreed to the meeting after it was suggested by the Amherst Board of Selectmen April 10.

Wentworth told the selectmen she and tenant alternate Joanne Levenson were boycotting the meetings because the committee lacks the power to force landlords to comply with its recommendations.

Wentworth said the committee also lacks the power to force landlords to give it economic information concerning operating costs and revenues, which she says is necessary to render fair decisions.

Last May, town meeting members gave the committee power to "receive, investigate and make recommendations upon complaints of unfair and unreasonable practices in private rental units." Town Meeting voted down a proposal to give the committee more authority.

In a letter written to the committee in late January, Wentworth said that because of the uncompromising attitude of the landlords in cases brought before the committee, it should "come to the obvious conclusion that we are unable to implement the decisions we make. We should stop pretending to tenants that we can be of assistance and report to town meeting that we are unable to carry out its charge to us."

Walter Nicholson, committee chairman and one of three public members, last week questioned the committee's role in making fair rent decisions, citing the town meeting members' vote against rent control. Nicholson said that in rent-related matters, it is the role of the committee to "make sure landlords do not take unfair advantage of tenants."

Nicholson, who asked the selectmen to replace the boycotting committee members March 27, said Wentworth and Levenson were taking advantage of their positions and that town government "should not let them get away with it."

The boycotting effort has stymied committee action since January, because a quorum, which includes the tenant representatives, is needed to process complaints and make recommendations.

Nicholson said that since the boycott began, the committee has been unable to take action on three cases, two of which were not rent-related.

The tenant representatives' boycott began in January after the committee voted in favor of a rent increase involving a Colonial Village resident.

Wentworth said that because the committee asked for and did not receive economic information from the landlord in the Colonial Village case, the committee should "rescind the vote and consider rational alternatives." The committee voted to keep the decision.

Wentworth and Nicholson said they were unsure of what would happen at Sunday's meeting. Wentworth did say, however, that she would not return to the committee unless landlord compliance is assured and the Colonial Village case is repealed.

Nicholson said he did not believe the Colonial Village decison would be repealed.

Other members of the committee are landlord representative Stephen P. Puffer Jr. and his alternate Paul Jones, and public members David Kaplan and Joan Weston.

Panamanians discuss importance of canal

By PATRICIA KEEFE
Collegian Staff

Members of the New Panamanian Popular Alternative last night discussed the importance of the canal as a means of transit, the implications of the canal zone for Panama and the history of the canal to 12 persons.

Alternative members Elmo Doig, Humberto Brown and Esmeralda Brown participated in the panel discussion for Latin American Week last night. The week is sponsored by AHORA, a campus Latin American organization.

Due to scheduling difficulties, a lecture on Latin American literature by Manuel Puig, visiting professor from Columbia University, was canceled Tuesday. It will be rescheduled.

Speaking of the few events offered, AHORA President Jaime Pons stressed that "a week is any seven days." He said, "we don't need that many activities to give our culture exposure. What counts is not how many activities, or people attend, but how many English-speaking people are there."

Pons was pleased with the diverse turnout for the Puerto Rican group Haciendo Punto En Otro Son Wednesday night in the Student Union Ballroom. This week's emphasis represents a shift from that of the previous years' emphasis on Puerto Rico to an emphasis on other Latin-American countries. Pons said, "as the only country in Central-Latin America that is still a colony, there is a need for people to know about what happens in Puerto Rico."

There were problems, however, with the emphasis on Puerto Rico. Pons said, "with so much emphasis given to Puerto Rican issues, some members of the Latin American community, who were not Puerto Rican, felt their needs were not being met." He added, "as an organization, it's important to be diverse."

For the week, due to past experience, emphasis was placed more on a few activities that many could attend, rather than many activities that few attended.

To lead off the discussion, Doig stressed the need to understand the importance of Panama's geographic position to the rest of the world. "It has been the structure, the destiny of our country for 500 years," he said.

Doig then related how the "discovery" of another ocean by the Spanish conquistadors led to the colonization of the Pacific coast and "opened the path to the plunder and exploitation of the Panamanian

Celebrities turn down Harvard speech invites

Seniors at Harvard are having problems obtaining a speaker for their commencement June 7.

The students have already been turned down by author Isaac Asimov, Woody Allen, Lily Tomlin, and Orson Welles, according to Senior Class Marshall Llewellyn J. Marczuk.

Asimov will speak here at UMass next Wednesday as keynote speaker for Sun Day, sponsored by the Coalition for Environmental Quality.

Marczuk said the reason for the rejections in each case is that "they're busy, basically. We gave our first two or three choices a lot of time to respond; that's why we're in trouble now."

Harvard administrators usually speak at commencement, but this year, according to Marczuk, the students "wanted to be entertained so we went outside" of the university.

Trustees to review housing policy this June

The UMass Board of Trustees will make a decision at their board meeting in early June on the proposal to end mandatory on-campus housing for juniors, according to Robert Dion, Student Government Association co-president elect.

Dion said the proposal presently is in the hands of two committees of the trustees. He said the Student Affairs committee will vote on the proposal at their May 23 meeting, and the Budget and Finance Committee will vote on it at their May 24 meeting.

Dion said the proposal was drawn up by Acting Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury, former SGA Co-president Marion L. Batiste, and student senator Daniel Salse.

UM chemist a delegate for 3-week China tour

UMass polymer scientist Richard S. Stein has been named to a top-level U.S. delegation of chemists who will visit the People's Republic of China in May or June.

The 12-member delegation will spend about three weeks in China beginning May 17. As official guests of the People's Republic, they will visit universities, government institutes and industries. Upon their return in mid-June they will go to Washington for de-briefing and then will begin preparation of a report for the National Academy of Sciences on the status of chemistry in China.

Continuing Ed to offer workshops for women

The UMass Division of Continuing Education will offer a special group of new workshops for women in the Credit-Free Workshop Program this summer.

Workshops include such topics as art as self-discovery, basic money management, effective job leadership, and women's self-defense.

The workshops will begin on June 5 and run through July 12. They are each three to eight weeks long and will meet from one to four times a week, usually in the evening.

Doctors negate marijuana test

By DAN GUIDERA
Collegian Staff

The method for testing paraquat in marijuana reported throughout the country and described in yesterday's Collegian is "totally unreliable," according to a state health official.

There is no simple, home method of testing for the lethal herbicide in marijuana, said Dr. James Kinlaw of the Massachusetts Department of Public Health.

A report received from Dr. Kenneth Powell of the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta said a spectrophotometer is needed to test for paraquat in marijuana, and even that method is not accurate. Kinlaw said, "a negative indication of paraquat only "potential danger" to heavy users.

Paraquat cannot be seen, tasted or smelled, so the user is completely unaware that he is ingesting the chemical.

Sixty per cent of all marijuana in the United States comes from Mexico, and 20 per cent of that is believed to be contaminated. Marijuana with paraquat has been entering the country since October, 1976, said Kinlaw.

Federal Drug Enforcement Agency officials said 21 per cent of specimens confiscated by the agency contained paraquat.

Kinlaw listed symptoms of paraquat infection as a burning sensation in the throat, abdominal pain and diarrhea. Lung damage occurs between three hours and 14 days.

means that the sample is clean, not the whole ounce." He explained that spraying may not get to the bottom buds of the plant.

Dr. William Landrigan, also of the Center for Disease Control, said the presence of paraquat can only be detected through careful testing. He recommends that a test sample be submitted to a certified lab.

The Center for Disease Control will soon issue further instructions on testing procedures.

Several firms have recently been marketing testing kits. Landrigan said "they may be useful, but they have not been validated."

Paraquat is a chemical used to defoliate marijuana plants within 24 to 48 hours. It has been described by Landrigan as a

Several doctors around the United States are studying patients possibly infected with paraquat, but it will be a few weeks until the results are known, said Landrigan.

Paraquat is "terribly toxic" in occupational use, said Landrigan. It causes fibrosis of the lungs when inhaled and has caused the death of 100 sprayers said Landrigan.

There is no reliable information on the regional distribution of the paraquat-contaminated marijuana. Landrigan said the general street feeling was that most of the marijuana has gone to the West Coast, but added that a "fair bit of Mexican goes East."

Search underway for new UMass provost

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

The search committee for the next UMass provost has begun accepting applications.

The committee, which has met twice this semester, is seeking a permanent replacement for Paul L. Puryear, fired last January by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery. Jeremiah M. Allen is serving as acting provost.

The provost is the principle academic administrator on campus.

Committee members come from several different campus groups. Committee member Michael P. Ford of the political science department said 10 members will be nominated from the Faculty Senate. The chancellor chooses five from those 10. He also selects five "from the campus at large," Ford said.

The later group would include the undergraduate representative, who has not yet been chosen. The newly elected student government co-presidents, Bob Dion and Donald Bishop, will make the nominations.

Ford said that so far the committee has dealt only with "administrative procedures" such as selecting the advertisement for the position which has appeared in publications nationwide.

Ford said the "next set of tasks is to go through resumes." He added, "we would be lucky if we named someone by the end of the first (fall) semester." Ford said he expects 200 to 300 applicants.

According to former Student Government Association co-President Jon A. Hite, the search committee will make a "first cut" after receiving resumes. There will be interviews with the remaining candidates.

Later, three or four names will be sent to the chancellor, who will make an appointment and meet with his selection to discuss matters such as salary. According to Hite, the UMass Board of Trustees must approve the appointment.

Nursing Prof. Ruth A. Smith, another committee member, said she was looking for someone with "skills in administration and human relations." She said the ability to "oversee and work with all types of people" was a "crucial" requirement.

Youth agency declares land swap deal slanted

By ELIZABETH A. KEIFER
Collegian Staff

The North Amherst Youth Agency claims it is the forgotten party in the town meeting article proposing a land swap between the town and a North Amherst merchant.

The annual Amherst Town Meeting is scheduled to begin work on the 62-article warrant Monday at 7 p.m. at the Amherst Regional Junior High School.

At issue is the proposal by Chester Watroba to have his store, Watroba's AG, torn down and his operations moved into the town-owned North Amherst School building. The move would leave the youth agency homeless for the time being, while attempting to make the North Amherst Center more accessible and open for parking.

Laurie Alexander, a co-director of the youth agency, said she feels the proposal is being used as a method to get rid of the youth agency. She also said that after checking with local real estate agents the agency has "nowhere to go."

Diana H. Romer, chairman of the Amherst Board of Selectmen, said the town would definitely help the agency find another location. She also said the agency will stay in the North Amherst school until a new location is found.

"That agency", she said, is providing badly needed services for the community."

Town manager A. Louis Haywood, who was instrumental in the opening of the agency in 1976, agreed the town will help the agency find a new home.

Hayward however, questioned the present North Amherst location of the agency, suggesting instead a "site more central to the community."

The youth agency serves about 85 youths, sponsoring field trips and workshops in such subjects as self-defense, circus arts, video and cable television.

The building also houses an after-school and weekend drop-in center, as well as a survival center started two years ago to provide food, clothing and money to the needy.

Seven UMass students are presently doing internships at the youth center. David Palmer, a senior economics major, said he enjoys working at the agency.

"The kids need something," he said. "They would probably just be hanging out on the corner by Watroba's if they didn't have this agency."

Pat Whitehouse, a junior community services major, added, "It's a really good place for the kids to come. It's too bad they don't have more funding."

Youths at the agency echoed the same sentiments. Martin Micjonka, 16, said he has been going to the youth center since it opened two years ago.

"I like the staff," he said, "and the agency is an excellent place to go."

peoples."

He said, "the extraction of gold through the Pacific, through Panama to Europe provided the gold currency to fuel the industrial revolution in Europe to the beginning of the 19th century.

"Panama thus assumed a position of strategic importance as a vital link, pivotal in the system of commercial development of Europe for over three centuries," said Doig.

He said, "This meant that Panama developed no economy of its own except in response to the needs of the conquistadors and their merchants." This has been the pattern throughout the history of Panama. When the Spanish empire collapsed, so did the Panamanian economy. Panama then languished for 150 years.

In 1850, Panama again experienced a rise in industry in response to the needs of the U.S. In 1849, the San Fransican railroad increased the prosperity of Panama, "but the benefits accrued went to the business interests that built the railroad."

Doig referred to the French canal attempts as "an infusion of foreign capital and production that undercut those held by native interests.

"The French also imposed their racial problems," said Doig.

Esmerelda Brown related how the U.S. presence in Panama has led to the oppression of the Panamanian people. She described the canal zone as populated and controlled by 44,000 U.S. citizens and 14,000 U.S. military.

long-distance personal calls.

"At no time was use of phones ... frowned upon," DeLima said. "In fact it was sanctioned."

Upon further questioning, DeLima stated, "I am willing to pay back." But, "I have never seen the bills."

DeLima said he worked out a plan with Treasurer Priscilla West to pay for the $313 worth of calls by not accepting pay for senate work he performed over intersession.

DeLima said the time cards for the four weeks he worked over intersession have not been turned in and he has not been paid. He said when he turned them in, he would use the money he received to pay his phone bill.

Under questioning from Lutsky, though, DeLima admitted that time cards had not yet been turned in, and had so far paid only $15 toward the cost of the calls.

Lutsky persistently argued that DeLima had no right to work out a payback system with only West's approval. Lutsky said DeLima should have consulted "the senate as a whole" on the matter. But, "Mr. DeLima had no intention of making restitution," said Lutsky.

DeLima resigned as speaker last fall after serving since October 1976, but was re-elected to that position earlier this month.

He came to UMass in 1976 as an exchange student from Hilo, Hawaii, and subsequently transferred.

Dr. Carter to be CCEBS director

By ANGELA THOMAS
Black Affairs Editor

At the February 16, 1978 Board of Directors meeting of the Collegiate Committee for the Education of Black Students (CCEBS), Dr. Michael L. Jackson announced that he would be resigning as the program's Director effective August 1, 1978. The Board of Directors agreed to recommend to the Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs that Dr. Carol Carter the Associate Director of the Program, be promoted to Director with full responsibility for administering the CCEBS Program effective August 1, 1978.

In an interview, Dr. Carter spoke about her past and future position.

If anything can be recommended to women who are aspiring, is just that aspire

QUESTION — When did you become associate director of CCEBS, and what have been your responsibilities?

ANSWER — In October of 1975, I came on as the associate director of CCEBS. There were two responsibilities that Michael (Jackson) the present director of CCEBS indicated he wanted me to do when I came. One was to establish specific objectives for the CCEBS staff. Secondly, I was to identify objectives for the students in the program. Therefore I outlined two sets of goals and objectives. They overlapped, but they were distinct in terms of who would perform what.

With the staff we identified the five components in CCEBS, academic, administrative, special academic services, career guidance, and business.

From students I needed an idea of what was needed to assist them in making out their academic programs. I set up a method of obtaining the courses upon pre-registration, we have all pre-registration forms sent here. In this way we try to monitor what students are doing. We are relatively successful with this procedure. We contact about 75 percent of all the students in the program.

Some students do not need any real assistance from us. They know what they want to do, so they do not need that much assistance from us, only the support. To those we say fine, but there are many who need more assistance. They are still not clear what they want to do, where they want to go, and we attempt to make sound recommendations based on interests and career demands.

When I first started with CCEBS, I wore many hats. I soon determined that it was too much because I was inefficient in terms of what I could really do. While I outlined programs, I could not monitor them because I was distracted by advising students, counseling students, attending meetings, etc.

However, I feel very close to the class of '79. I worked with them when they first came to the University. I feel they are my class. Sometimes students see me and yell "Carol!" "I want to talk to you for a minute." They will then lay something on me, and I'll tell them to come over to the office so we can sit down and discuss it. Yet I still think I'm a much better administrator than I am a counselor.

QUESTION — Do you see your primary role with CCEBS as an administrator.

ANSWER — Yes I do, I view CCEBS as a constitute group within the larger university. There are about 500 students out of 19,000 undergraduates. I think in terms of providing the best information to students, identifying best resources, and giving assistance, we have a very good staff at CCEBS. They work very hard with the students to find out who students are, what they are doing, and even to operate on a "sixth sense of character" to make the best recommendations to them.

QUESTION — What is your role with the staff personnel of CCEBS.

ANSWER — I try to sustain the staff as much as possible. Due to the fact that counseling and advising can be an exacting experience dealing with students' problems all day. You have to do this, you have to do that, and by the end of the day, you're just frantic.

QUESTION — How did you new position come about?

ANSWER — Michael indicated to me that he was going to leave this summer, he asked me if I was interested in becoming director. Later, as the announcement notes, the chairman of the CCEBS Board approached and asked me if I would stay if offered the position of director, and I said I would. The transition should be a smooth one between Michael and myself. The information in terms of program planning and outlining is a good design. We know where we are, what we are doing, what is supposed to do what, when, why, and how. This is important.

QUESTION — Will there be any structural changes in CCEBS next year.

ANSWER — Structurally, I do not see any right now. I don't see too many major changes. The main thrust of CCEBS will continue as an academic support program. We work to facilitate those students who are admitted in the university via CCEBS. CCEBS is serious about those students who are serious about their education. We are concerned that students matriculate at this institution. It takes discipline, and more discipline, but it can be done. CCEBS is an advocate for students, and we're also an advocate for developing the best in students.

QUESTION — Being an administrator who is a woman, has this made a difference in your job?

ANSWER — Shirley Chrishom a few years ago indicated some of the unique misconceptions of people who view women in positions that are supposed to represent power and authority. She said it is all to difficult to deal with that conception as a woman. But what I have learned from my personal and professional experiences is I cannot disassociate the two. The only way to address these kinds of issues is to be prepared. Have your information correct, know what you are doing, be assertive about it, and have an opinion about it. Learn how to anticipate situations.

QUESTION — What advice would you give to others in positions similar to yours, or who are striving for positions similar to yours who will have to deal with similar problems.

ANSWER — I just attended a conference in Providence, Rhode Island a few weeks ago. It was the fifth annual conference for New England Women Minority Administrators. (NEWMA) Women from the New England region were in attendance. It was such a beautiful experience. The overriding factor for the whole conference was we are preparing administrators today, for tomorrow. If anything can be recommended to women who are aspiring, is just that — aspire. Shoot for the moon, if you miss; you might hit a star!

On the crest of the Women's Movement today, I think this is particularly profound, but for minority women it is imperative. We have to be about high aspirations. Numerically we are more than our brothers, and this is not lessening with each census. This means we will have to be in positions of leadership and authority, and women should strive for this.

I do not believe that we have to become so pre-occupied with the administration of an administration that we forget to be a human being. Once we lose our touch and sense of humanity so that we cannot share information, give support to others, we lose.

Festival date approaching

On Saturday May 6, there will be a festive celebration, commemorating an art form indigenous to this country, but one which has become the motivating force of popular music the world over. On that day set in Alumni Stadium, here at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, The Duke Ellington Spring Music Festival: A Celebration of Black American Music will be held.

The gates will open at 10:03 a.m. and the day promises to be a uniquely memorable one. Participating in this celebration will be a host of internationally known greats.

Tickets for the festival will be $6.00 students, $7.00 non-students and will be sold at all ticketron outlets. S.A.T.F. paying University of Massachusetts undergrad students will be admitted free of charge. There will be forthcoming announcements explaining the procedure for UMass students to obtain their free tickets.

Kicking off the program will be the Buddy Guy Junior Wells Blues Band. Buddy Guy and Junior Wells combine their talents to form one of the premier "Chicago Blues" bands in the world today. Buddy Guy established his reputation shortly after arriving in Chicago playing in weekly "Killer Guitar" competitions, with rivals such as Otis Rush, Freddie King, the late Magic Sam and other outstanding musicians.

Junior Wells came to Chicago and at age 14 was a featured member of the Muddy Waters Band. He replaced the late Little Walter and remained with Muddy Waters until he started work with his own band...

Next on the program will be the Duke Ellington Orchestra now under the direction of Mercer Ellington. The Ellington Orchestra, truly a cultural institution, represents a unique phenomenon in music history. It is rare if not unprecedented that such a major orchestra should continue on into a second generation. Under the capable leadership of Mercer Ellington the orchestra maintains the excellence that it was noted for during the "Dukes" life, as it continues to feature the tunes penned by America's foremost musical composer.

Patti Labelle will then take over the stage, sure to thrill the audience with her unique form of song-styling. Now a solo act for the first time in her 16-year musical career Patti's performances are filled with the excitement of an already successful career once again reborn!

Up next, the McCoy Tyner Sextet. McCoy Tyner unquestionably one of the finest pianists alive today, first received notoriety playing with the John Coltrane quartet. Since the passing of "Trane", McCoy Tyner has been uncompromising in maintaining the pure spiritual essence of this form of Black American Music.

Closing the show will be the fine new sound of Pharoah Sanders. Having also received notoriety while playing with the legendary John Coltrane, Sanders has now embarked on a new musical path combining his all pervasive and well-known spiritual elements with the tasty new sounds of funky rhythm and blues. With the recent release of his new album on Arista Records entitled; "Love Will Find A Way," Sanders and his energized group are a band in great demand and they promise to be a real treat to the festival audience.

Five College holds seminar

The Five College Black Studies Executive Committee will hold its spring seminar on Tuesday, May 2, 1978 at 7:30 p.m. in SBA 120. The seminar is entitled "Harlem: The Garvey Era."

Professors Ernest Allen, Department of Afro-American Studies, UMass and William E. Perkins, Dept. of History, Temple University will present historical analyses of the black cultural, economic and political movements of the Garvey era. Commentator for the seminar will be Mr. Lionel Yard, a former member of the Universal Negro Improvement Association.

This seminar is co-sponsored by the Afro-Am Society. All members of the Five College community are welcome. No admission charge. A reception will immediately follow the lecture-discussion.

'Hawkeye' at the Bluewall

If you have some spare time this weekend, stop by the Bluewall to check out the music group "Hawkeye." The Boston based group has been jamming hard at the Bluewall with no one to appreciate their sounds. If you enjoy "spanking and ecstasy," you will enjoy "Hawkeye." They will be at the Bluewall until Sunday.

'An Evening of Pan-Afrikan'

"An Evening of Pan-Afrikan Theatre, Dance, Music, and Folk Stories" will take place Tuesday, May 2, at 8:00 in Bowker Auditorium at UMass in Amherst. Admission is $2.00. Proceeds from the event will fund area residents to travel to Havana, Cuba in July as part of the U.S. delegation to the 11th World Festival of Youth and Students.

Director for the evening is Eno Washington, accomplished Pan-Afrikan dancer of 18 years, who has studied and performed nationally. He will be performing a number of dances including "Beautiful Black Women" and a street dance to James Brown's "Papa' Got a Brand New Bag".

Other performers will be: Pamela Benn, percussionist, dancer, and vocalist; Jorge Medina, percussionist of Sunlight and Shade; Brandon Ross, bassist; Eon John, vocalist; and Eshu Elegba, painter and vocalist.

Also performing are Chris Henderson, percussionist of the well known Unity Ensemble, Ima Henderson, narrator of West African Folk Tales, mimest, and dancer, and Valerie Stevens, actress, vocalist, and poet.

Musical director for the evening is David Jackson, pianist, vocalist, and Acting Director of the Voices of New Africa House Choir.

There will also be a benefit disco for the Youth Festival at Mackimmie House, Southwest Residential Area, UMass, Amherst, on Saturday, May 6, at 9:00 p.m. Donation will be $1.50 and the D.J. is "Mackimmie Joe" Andrews.

King of Soul and Queen of Disco?

The "King Of Soul" James Brown, made another claim to the throne. "Jam 1980's" sounds a lot like his past more frightful classics like, "Give It Up Or Turnitt Loose" but the primal screams are replaced by somewhat complacent electronic boogie rhythms. The shock value is softened by the electric overgloss.

The music is still funky though and as always with "The Godfather," to dance is an "offer that you can't refuse." "Eyesight" is the follow-up to "Get Up Off That Thing" and "Body Heat". While the endurance tests of "Jam" and "Nature" harken to "(Get Up, I Feel Like Being) A Sex Machine" of old, with its all-night-long, slow-grind drive.

If this album sounds imitative, it is — but don't fret 'cause Brown is only imitating himself or as he'd have it, "The King." He tries to capture his old interruptive, abrupt style when he used to rush out from behind the band's hypnotic plucking and cry like a cobra. Now, like a rattlesnake, he gives a warning first, but his strikes are still poisonous, if not as potent as before. It is still worth picking up though as Brown is still a step ahead of most of the field.

Gloria Gaynor had a tremendous love affair as "Queen Of the Discos" with "Casanova Brown," "Honey Bee," "Do It Yourself" et all. Feeling trapped, Gaynor wanted a new image (even though her music wasn't as it hit discos and then crossed over into soul and pop consistently) so she left producer Meco Monardo (of Star Wars fame), for Greg Diamond and a change in style. The change was for the worse as Gaynor was bogged down in syrupy arrangements.

Park Avenue Sound seems to be an attempt to make up for lost ground. The producers are none other than Baker, Harris, and Young of Philly fame (The Trammps, Double Exposure etc.) The best cut is the reworking of the Ashford and Simpson penned "You're All I Need To Get By". Gaynor is the most exciting she's been in a while as she runs up and down the scale showing showing her range. Needless to say, the cuts written by the producers along with Ron Tyson, sound like Trammps B sides, but Gaynor saves the day by giving them feeling and more substance.

This LP is smooth but with Gaynor, there's no lack of texture here. Baker, Harris and Young helped her back on the right track and back to her basics. She's freer here than she was with the sadly impotent "Glorious" and she takes the new-old wings out for a nice flight. This LP has to rate a "it's good to have ya' back B plus".

The legendary Pharoah Sanders, will be appearing at the Duke Ellington Spring Music Festival, May 6. (Photo by Edward Cohen)

News in Brief

Bonin to face nine charges

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts Superior Court Chief Justice Robert M. Bonin will face charges of "misconduct in office", including lying under oath, in connection with his attendance at a gay rights fundraiser.

The nine charges against the justice were made public yesterday by the state Supreme Court. The charges are being brought against Bonin by the watchdog Committee on Judicial Responsibility.

Bonin has 20 days in which to respond to the charges and the high court had said it stands ready to hear the case as soon as both sides want to proceed.

Bonih's lawyers had opposed release of the report, which lists both the charges against the judge and those accusations that were found to be groundless.

The 93-page committee report says Bonin, by attending the April 5 fundraising lecture, "failed to conduct himself in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary...and engaged in misconduct in office and conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice which bring the judicial office into disrepute."

Afghan rebels announce coup

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Rebel forces in Afghanistan claimed yesterday to have overthrown the authoritarian government of President Mohammed Daoud after armor and air attacks on the presidential headquarters and other government buildings in the capital of Kabul.

The rebel claim, broadcast on Kabul Radio, could not be immediately confirmed — many lines of communication were cut to the landlocked, mountainous nation. But in London, diplomatic dispatches and reports of monitored radio broadcasts from the Afghan capital said the armed forces had seized control and 'wiped out" Daoud's family.

Many bodies were seen in Kabul's streets after several hours of heavy fighting, said diplomatic sources here in contact with eyewitnesses in Kabul.

Gen. Abdul Qadir, who described himself as chief of defense forces, said in the rebel broadcast monitored here that a military revolutionary council had taken control of the Texassize nation of 20 million people, wedged between Pakistan, Iran and the Soviet Union.

"For the first time power has come into the hands of the people," he said. "The last remnant of imperialism and tyrrany of the Mohammedzai has been put to an end."

Committee hands budget to House

BOSTON (AP) — The House Ways and Means Committee recommended a $4.78 billion state budget yesterday that clamps the lid on public funding of elective abortions.

The bill, to be debated Wednesday, provides an additional $92 million in local aid, including state assumption in July of full court costs, a move bitterly opposed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

It calls for no tax increase or decrease, other than the potential impact of extra aid on local tax rates.

The committee attached an amendment to the Medicaid account that bars the use of public funds for nontherapeutic abortions. This is the same provision, recommended by Boston Democratic Reps. Charles R. Doyle and Raymond L. Flynn and repeatedly vetoed by Dukakis last year.

However a veto at this stage would block all Medicaid payments, Rep. John J. Finnegan, D-Boston, committee chairman, said.

60 tons of pot seized on coast

By United Press International Federal, state and local agents arrested 38 persons and seized some 60 tons of marijuana in raids less than 24 hours apart at opposite ends of the Atlantic seaboard, it was announced yesterday.

Authorities reported confis- cating marijuana worth about $47 million on the streets in raids Wednesday night near Tallahassee, Fla., and yesterday in Boothbay, Maine.

Officials said the drug busts resulted in two of the largest land seizures of marijuana ever. Larger hauls have been made at sea.

Federal, state and local agents of the Big Bend Drug Task Force followed an informant's tip to raid a prefabricat- ed aluminum country warehouse four miles north of Tallahasse, officials said yesterday.

Seven men were arrested and about 40 tons of high-grade Columbian marijuana worth $31 million were confiscated.

"This is one of the record seizures," said Eddie Boone, special agent with the Florida Department of Criminal Law Enforcement.

He said several large trucks will be needed to transport the contraband to an incinerator for destruction.

The seven suspects were charged with possession and intent to distribute more than 100 pounds of marijuana and one of them was also charged with possession of cocaine. They were held in Leon County Jail in lieu of $500,000 bond each.

Boone said the bust had "no obvious connection" with a drug seizure early Wednesday 30 miles south of Tallahassee in the coastal town of Shell Point. Five tons of marijuana were seized in the raid and seven men were arrested.

In Boothbay, undercover state drug agents capped a four-month investigation with a raid on a remote river landing and seized more than 20 tons of South American marijuana worth an estimated $16 million.

Thirty-one persons were arre- sted, including 21 from the New York City area, and police were looking for another man. All those arrested were booked on state and federal drug charges.

Lt. Cmdr. Ralph Brown of the U.S. Coast Guard said an 80- foot motor yacht, the Onalay, was also seized. He said it was worth more than $2 million and was filled with "a wall" of electronics gear, including radar and a sophisticated navigational computer.

Found on the boat, tied to a wooden dock on the Damaris- cotta River, were a half-dozen handguns and shotguns.

The raid site was two miles from where 49 large bales of marijuana and a 70-foot motor- ized sailboat were seized in an apparently unrelated incident last October.

Author offers solution for a math 'problem'

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

The solution to a case of math anxiety is merely a matter of mind over math, according to Sheila Tobias, who last night spoke on overcoming math anxiety at the Hampden Center in Southwest.

Tobias said math anxiety, in women or men can be dealt with. Her solution is a Math Anxiety Clinic, already tried and proven effective at her own Wesleyan University, she says.

An associate provost at Wesleyan, Tobias deals extensively with women and co-education on campus. Her latest text is "Overcoming Math Anxiety."

"It doesn't matter how much we teach them," she said. "The important thing is to get them to be able to do it or their own."

Tobias presented the mathematical issue from two perspectives: as a feminist and as a consumer of mathematics.

As a feminist, she detailed the role of present-day "occupational segregation by sex" in female math anxiety problems.

The traditional wife, mother and decorative (sex object) roles, she said, still ring true with working women — as teachers, technical assistants, and receptionists.

According to Tobias, those who try to move out and into other fields fall into the "witch bitch trough." Her role and actions are perceived very negatively, she said.

Many females are restricted in high school math preparation, she said, but added that it is much more complex than a simple avoidance issue.

Tobias argued for the need of a new math cirriculum, one not written by mathematicians in purely mathematical terms.

Ambiguous language that is technically unnecessary for comprehension needs to be eliminated, she stressed. Math Anxiety Clinics across the country today deal with this problem and more, and search for solutions, according to Tobias.

New UM buses inaccessible say handicapped students

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

The University transportation system was last night pinpointed by members of the UMass Handicapped Students Collective as an example of poor accessibility offered to disabled students.

Peggy Grinnin, chairperson of the Collective Transportation Subcommittee, said the collective disapproves of the University adding 26 new buses next semester because the buses are not designed to accommodate handicapped students.

Collective advisor William Santos said these buses are "the most expensive and the most difficult" for accommodating handicapped students.

The buses are being ordered by the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority and the Student Senate Transit Service.

Although some people have given several reasons to University officials for not recommending lift-equipped buses, Griffin said most of these reasons are "ridiculous."

★ Festival approaches

The event is sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Student Senate and all profits from both ticket sales and concessions will go to help fund the establishment of the "Edward Kennedy Ellington Center" based in New York City. The Edward Kennedy Ellington Center is a 'not for profit' organization, whose designated purpose is to provide a range of facilities to serve as vehicles for the advancement of Black American Music.

The initial projects of the Center are the establishment of: 1) a research component, set up to accomplish the major task of researching and cataloging the historical tradition of Black music in America and 2) an educational division which will utilize experts in the musical and ancillary professions as staff, consultants, and volunteers, to provide instruction to youth through musical workshops and lectures.

So the town of Amherst, Massachusetts will come alive this May 6, moved by the spirit of this great American tradition. It promises to be a day of entertainment, enlightenment and delight...

Minority whip from Montague runs for DA

EDITOR'S NOTE: The Collegian in the next few weeks will publish personal profiles of the five Democrats and two Republicans who have declared their candidacies for the district attorney's office in Franklin and Hampshire counties. The office next year becomes a full-time position for the first time. The incumbent has decided not to seek re-election. This is the second in story in the series.

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

Republican Thomas G. Simons of Montague thinks his political record as minority whip in the state legislature should appeal to student voters in the campaign for the district attorney's office of Franklin and Hampshire counties.

Simons' legislative district includes Montague, 15 miles north of Amherst, Sunderland, and other Franklin County towns.

"If students get to know me, they'll find my position to be very much attuned" to their concerns, Simons said yesterday while he viewed the campus of his alma mater from the Top of the Campus lounge.

Simons, captain of the UMass varsity tennis team while a student here in the early 60s, pointed to his progressive voting record during his eight years, as state representative as something appealing to student voters looking for a different type of candidate for district attorney.

Takes non-traditional view

Simons, an original sponsor of bottle bill legislation for the past seven years, said he is taking a "non-traditional" view of the role of a district attorney compared to other candidates with campaigns concerned with "who's been in court the most."

His opponent in the Republican primary, John Finn, is an assistant district attorney in Greenfield, and a candidate in the Democratic primary is also an assistant district attorney. Two other Democrats are public defenders and another is the clerk of Hampshire County Superior Court.

My view (of the district attorney's job) may be a little different," said Simons, who said his type of a district attorney would conduct and oversee some prosecution, but would mainly "do a lot of leading and work in the community."

He said that a district attorney must "go out of the framwork to change the system" in order to do a good job. Part of leaving the framework would include a "non-political screening operation" for selecting assistant district attorneys, who prosecute most of the criminal cases in the counties.

"Selected for merit"

Simons said it is important the public know that assistant district attorneys "are selected for merit" and not politics.

"That's the first thing I'd do," Simons said, referring to non-partisan screening of assistant district attorneys. He declined comment about the performance of the present district attorneys — one of whom is his opponent in the Republican primary — saying those assistant district attorneys now work on a part-time basis.

He also declined comment on whether as district attorney he would retain any of the present assistant district attorneys in his staff. Simons did note he doubts many of those now assistant district attorneys would want to keep their jobs because it means sacrificing private law practices to work full time for the county.

Simons said he would like to see the district attorney's office meet with the community to discuss issues of concern to citizens and also to explain the role of the district attorney.

He said he practices this policy during his office hours in the Montague area as its state representative.

Simons said the district attorney should work to keep young offenders out of the court system to keep them from developing into older criminals.

A combination of supervision and counseling of young offenders could help deter them from becoming repeat offenders.

Simons said he's "not a great fan of the phone company" and would like to devote time to advocating consumer protection through investigation of complaints and law suits on behalf of the public.

An active environmentalist

Simons has been an active environmentalist as a state representative and said he would continue this work as district attorney when appropriate to the job.

He noted that other state agencies oversee many environmental actions.

He said his visibility and work as a state representative will provide him a victory over Finn in the Republican primary this September.

Simons said he will have to campaign heavily in Hampshire County for votes because he is less known here and because there are more registered Democrats than republicans.

He said he isn't afraid to meet with UMass students and would like to lecture at classes.

He said he campaigns at least four days a week while the legislature is in session. Another 100 persons help campaign for him in the two counties, he said. Simons is not married, and this allows him more time to campaign, he said.

Simons said he won't be ignoring legislative duties to campaign, although he is not seeking re-election as a state representative. He said his role as a party leader requires his presence when bills are being debated. He noted the legislative session is shorter in an election year to allow members to campaign.

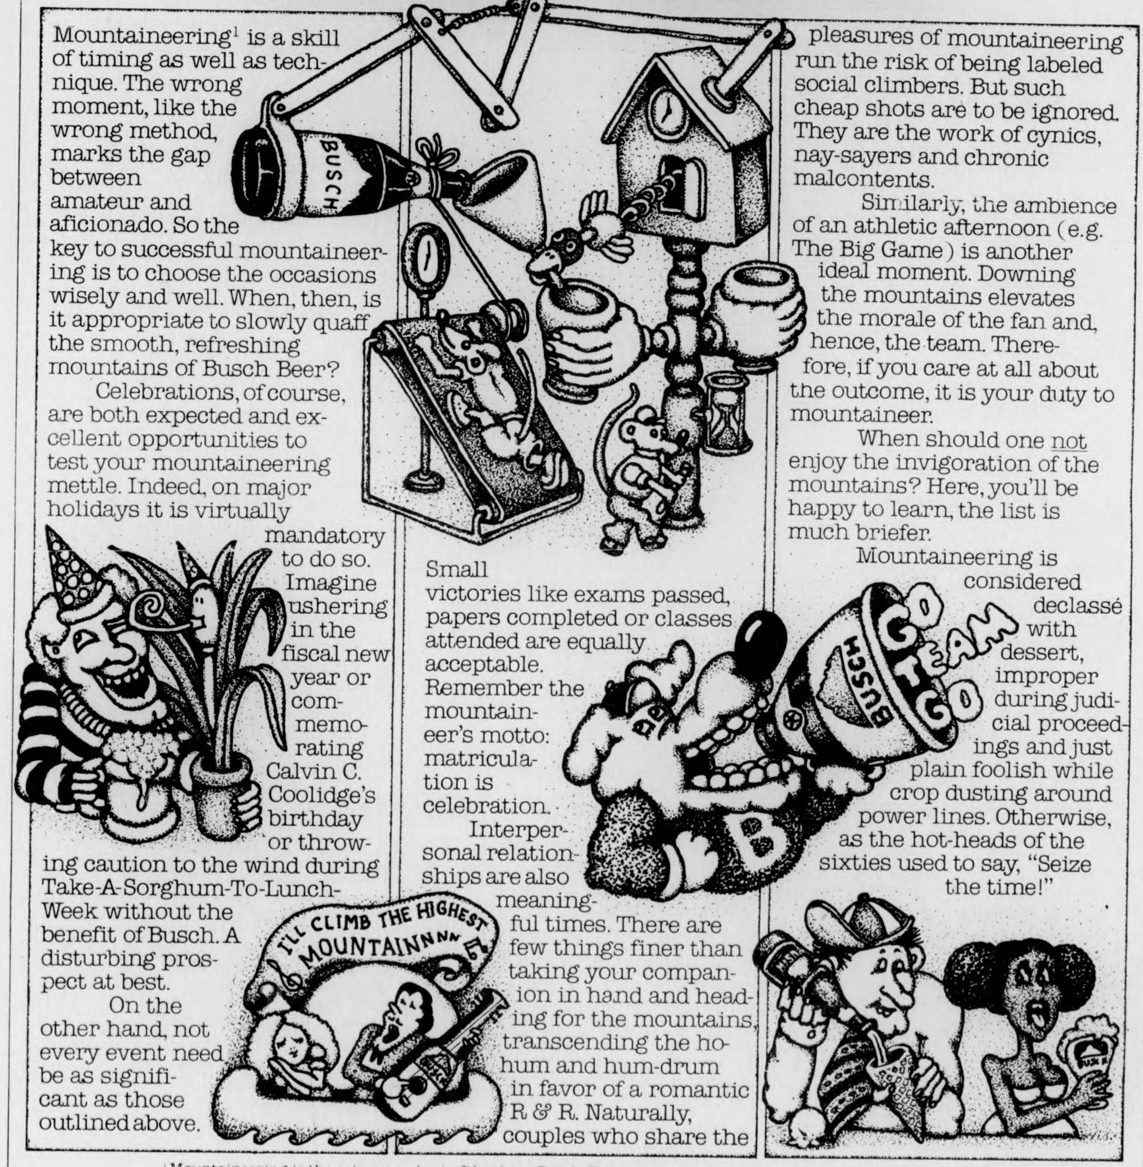
Mountaineering #4.
THE OPTIMUM MOMENT.



BUSCH
GO TEAM GO
BUSCH
I'LL CLIMB THE HIGHEST MOUNTAINNNN

Mountaineering[1] is a skill of timing as well as technique. The wrong moment, like the wrong method, marks the gap between amateur and aficionado. So the key to successful mountaineering is to choose the occasions wisely and well. When, then, is it appropriate to slowly quaff the smooth, refreshing mountains of Busch Beer?

Celebrations, of course, are both expected and excellent opportunities to test your mountaineering mettle. Indeed, on major holidays it is virtually mandatory to do so. Imagine ushering in the fiscal new year or commemorating Calvin C. Coolidge's birthday or throwing caution to the wind during Take-A-Sorghum-To-Lunch-Week without the benefit of Busch. A disturbing prospect at best.

On the other hand, not every event need be as significant as those outlined above. Small victories like exams passed, papers completed or classes attended are equally acceptable. Remember the mountaineer's motto: matriculation is celebration.

Interpersonal relationships are also meaningful times. There are few things finer than taking your companion in hand and heading for the mountains, transcending the ho-hum and hum-drum in favor of a romantic R & R. Naturally, couples who share the pleasures of mountaineering run the risk of being labeled social climbers. But such cheap shots are to be ignored. They are the work of cynics, nay-sayers and chronic malcontents.

Similarly, the ambience of an athletic afternoon (e.g. The Big Game) is another ideal moment. Downing the mountains elevates the morale of the fan and, hence, the team. Therefore, if you care at all about the outcome, it is your duty to mountaineer.

When should one not enjoy the invigoration of the mountains? Here, you'll be happy to learn, the list is much briefer.

Mountaineering is considered declassé with dessert, improper during judicial proceedings and just plain foolish while crop dusting around power lines. Otherwise, as the hot-heads of the sixties used to say, "Seize the time!"

[1] Mountaineering is the science and art of drinking Busch. The term originates due to the snowy, icy peaks sported by the label outside and perpetuates due to the cold, naturally refreshing taste inside. (cf. lessons 1, 2 and 3.)

Don't just reach for a beer. BUSCH® Head for the mountains.

Pornography at UMass a concern

To the Editor:

We are men who are concerned about the increasing presence at UMass of pornography which exploits and objectifies women's bodies and which presents sexual violence against women as entertainment for men.

We are interested in beginning a new public pressure group which would undertake various activist and educational projects on campus around the issue of pornography as woman-hating propaganda.

In the words of Laura Lederer and Diana Russell of Women Against Violence in Pornography and Media, a group in Berkeley, California "If it doesn't bother people to see women being raped or beaten or killed for sexual stimulation, then something is wrong ... Imagine the public outcry that would occur if there were special movie houses in every city across the country where viewers could see whites beating up Blacks, or Christians beating up Jews. But if it's called pornography and women are the victims, then you are seen as a prude to object."

We earnestly invite all people who are interested in organizing an ongoing, anti-pornography public pressure group at UMass to attend a meeting Monday, May 8, 1978, at 7:00 p.m. in the Campus Center, room 803.

If you have questions, or if you can't attend the meeting but would like to be kept informed, call Scott, 545-0264, Tuesday and Thursday, noon-5:00 p.m. [c-o South West Men's Center].

Tow Committee clarification

To the Editor:

The members of the Student Run Towing Committee wish to clarify some misconceptions which appeared in the Collegian article entitled "Bitter Student Tow Group Quits."

First, although Mr. Klein created the impression that we have some vendetta against student government leaders, it is simply not accurate. The personnel politics of Mr. Hite, et al are not of very much concern to us. What we feel to be true is that the structure of student government needs changing, not the people within that structure.

Secondly, we always have made the distinction between proven fact and the many rumors circulating about student leadership. Jon Hite's future political ambitions fall into the latter category. Unfortunately, Mr. Klein couldn't grasp this, even when we spelled it out to him. There are many instances of Hite and company shortchanging the student interest and Mr. Klein has succeeded in ignoring all of them.

As a result of Mr. Klein's article, all the intents and purposes of the Committee have been distorted. In our proposal to the Senate in October we stated the overall objective of the Committee as being "to give some relief from the hard reality of towing, while making a service responsible to the community." The major complaints students have about towing is the manner in which Amherst Towing conducts its business. Amherst Towing is not a responsible operation and should be removed from the UMass community. The creation of a Student Run Tow Service is first, the only feasible solution to Amherst Towing and second, a student co-op, would provide student jobs, redistribute income and create a valuable service.

Student leaders and administrators have ignored these issues in the past but they can do so no longer. Amherst Towing is still on campus and the problems associated with them remain.

Lack of support deplored

To the Editor:

We the staff members of Southwest Residential College deplore the recent withdrawal of support from James Matlack by the higher administrators during the Whitmore sit-in in April. This clear lack of support is accentuated by the fact that these same administrators were aware of, and previously supported, Jim Matlack's plan of action in the Pierpont housing situation.

As a staff, we wish to point out the implications of this lack of support. It not only undermines Jim's effectiveness as Master-Director, but also jeopardizes the credibility of decision-making administrators here at the University.

Members of the Southwest
Residential College Staff

Better results through cooperation

To the Editor:

First, let me say that I have been particularly pleased with the quality and subject matter of recent editorials and letters printed in the Collegian. I feel that the Collegian has been doing its job — presenting objective information — by printing differing perspectives in a variety of current issues, i.e., women's pages, student-administration relations, etc. Seeing the editorials and letters being signed by unfamilar names gives me quite a feeling of satisfaction also because it tells me that more people are becoming aware and involved in important matters.

Now I would like to address myself to the entire UMass community, and women in particular will [I assume] be interested in hearing my story.

Wednesday evening I visited a friend in Southwest. We were into a heavy discussion about women's page — whether they are indeed necessary and how women ought to change their tactics if they hope to get the news they feel is important to be printed, whether it be in separate women's pages or integrated with the rest of the news.

Before I knew it my watch said 2:00 a.m. I was afraid to walk home to my dorm in Northeast and had no money for a taxi. I thought I would have to spend the night there when Lisa [my friend] had an idea. I called the Campus Police and asked if they had any patrol cars cruising the area. I explained, to a very understanding desk clerk, that I was afraid to walk that distance alone at such a late hour because of the "few" [tsk, tsk, Collegian; not reporting "all the news fit to print."] rapes I'd heard or read about, and would it be possible for me to get a ride to Northeast? Within 15 minutes I was dropped off in front of my dorm by a very friendly officer.

It's so much more pleasant trying to cooperate with other people than to force yourself on them with threats. I was both surprised and content with the results I got. I'm not advocating the use of patrol cars as a taxi service, but I am in favor of people and police cooperating in order to insure a safer community.

Likewise, isn't it possible for women and men to cooperate-work together instead of against each other? I don't think each side is REALLY listening to what the other is saying. Each is too blinded by the anger it feels for the other. Men and women have to live together, so why fight each other? Isn't it time men and women were unified? Further segregation at this point will be detrimental and should be avoided at all costs.

Charlotte Trenchard

Press privilege entails responsibility

To the Editor:

"The issue at stake...is not feminism but freedom of the press."

So wrote a Collegian commentator on Wednesday, the 26th. I almost agree with that statement of fact. However, I'd add one word and let the statement read: "The issue is not only feminism but freedom of the press."

Admittedly, I find myself in near agreement with the commentator's statement because behind the words lies a definition of "freedom of the press" that has apparently never dawned on the Collegian staff and editors or the commentator.

The definition that I would offer demands that privilege of a communications medium to exist free from grovernmental coersion and control carries with it a concommitant responsibility to its audience to operate with a social definition of news that does not exclude any sector of that audience.

And let's face it folks, any paper that considers women a "special interest group" is, ahem, not quite meeting that responsibility.

Indeed, it's not just the incredible battles it has taken in the past few years to remove sexist and mysogonous ads from the paper. Or even, is it just the fact of virtually total, white male hegemony over top editorial positions that has created the context for the current demand for independent women's newsspace.

All of these situations have to be seen as parts of a systematic exclusion of issues, questions and ideas that relate, as news, to a majority sector of the Collegian's readership — women.

For the Collegian, the first step toward correcting this historic injustice is to lay down the shield of brazen stupidity that they have raised with wrong, defenisve arguments like "womens' pages fail because there's not enough to write about" or "women are a special interest group."

Beyond this willingness to open a dialogue in good faith with the women's community, the Collegian in particular and the press in general has to recognize or be made to recognize the fact of its duty to social justice in a manifestly unjust society that has as its cornerstones oppression on the basis of race, sex and class.

Jim Jordan

Quality of journalism questioned

To the Editor:

The recent and continuing fervor over the vacillation and reversals of the Collegian Board of Editors on the addition of four ad free Womens Pages is not very inspiring as to the credibility of the newspaper as a whole. But this is only part of the problem, the rest is the quality of the journalism in the paper as a whole. For a newspaper that purports to inform the students of this university as to what's happening on and off campus and in the world in general, the Collegian does a very poor job. The writing of articles is in a haphazard style and run on sentences, repetition where there need not be any and, the greatest reporting sin next to liable, inaccurate facts. One example of inaccurate facts are the ones that were printed about the Cyprus takeover and which Mr. Arthur Aliferis had to write his letter about.

As to a previous point, the syntax is abominable, I have seen such lines as "The reaction to the action..." when a person knows that the word reaction implies an action. Of course, there is always the excuse that the reporters are just learning the trade, but in college you are supposed to have the rudiments of grammar and spelling down.

Also the layout should be a bit more sane, as in equal time for everybody, without the "necessity" of having special pages for Women, Men, Blacks, Gays, Hispanics, etc., for examples they could use any of the major international papers in existence. The New York Times, The Boston Globe, The London Times, even The New York Daily News has a better format than the Collegian.

So, if the Collegian wants to constantly bog itself down in this kind of a silly dispute that shouldn't have taken place at all, then it should change its policies so that it can concentrate on the type of good reporting that it's capable of.

Joseph Adam Bailey

Article exhibits lack of understanding

To the Editor:

I question Sally Reess' ability to understand the English language, for if she did she surely wouldn't have written the editorial she did in the April 19th Collegian.

To begin with she calls Yitzhak Santis a "blind supporter of Israel and the Begin government..." Sally, you must have missed, or chosen not to understand the Collegian 2-1-78 where in reference to Begins' plan for the territories, Yitzhak wrote "Begins' limited self-rule is clearly not enough." This sure doesn't sound like "blind support" to me.

Let's take a look at what Yitzhak has to say about the Palestinian issue. He is by no means against the Palestinians as a people or their desire for a state, indeed in the 2-13-78 Collegian we read: "A Palestinian state....is not only possible but very tolerable." Is this the voice of the imperialistic war-monger you think Yitzhak is?

I can only sadly laugh at the idea expressed that Israel is imperialistic for economic reasons. The West Bank and Gaza have involved the expenditure of huge amounts of money for border patrol equipment, personnel and the improvement of living conditions for its' inhabitants [building roads, installing running water and electricity, education, etc. [which is more than Egypt or Jordan ever did for them]. Israel's economy is in bad shape and the territories are only an additional drain. Israel's expansion is composed mostly of the Sinai, taken in 1973 after the aggressive, surprise attack on Yom Kippur and the Israelies are now willing to return it to Egypt. Some imperialists — huh?

In the editorials' closing paragraph Sally implores us to "stop collecting money for bloodshed...." refering to the Israel Emergency Fund Drive that was held on campus April 3-14. Had she bothered to stop by the Zionist Alliance table in the campus center concourse where we were collecting, she would have been handed a booklet explaining the purpose of the drive. In that booklet was the following information in capital letters: "Our money goes to provide social and human services only!"

This lack of responsibility on Sally's part is not an isolated incident. I find that although Yitzhak has visited the YSA table many times in order to familiarize himself with the material, the reverse is not the case. Not once do I remember a YSA member ever stopping by the Zionist Alliance table for information. Sally and other members of the YSA, you cannot intelligently criticize without first learning about the object of your criticism. If you had taken the trouble to do so before writing your editorial you wouldn't have been able to write what you did.

A busy year awaits them

paul cronin

Well, at long last we have sent Pinky Batiste and Jon Hite to the retirement they desired so much. Tuesday night the Electoral Convention elected Don Bishop and Bob Dion SGA Co-Presidents. One has to wonder why anyone with any semblance of sanity would want the job. In any case, Don and Bob have a busy year ahead of them. Being SGA President is a very difficult role to fill; one that is usually thankless. There is so much to do than just setting an agenda for the issues the office should tackle is an immense effort in its own right.

It is worth taking a look at what needs to be done. First of all, Don and Bob have to assemble an efficient staff. All too often the day to day operations of the office take up more of a president's time than they should. In order to work on important business a president has to be free of such tasks as typing their own letters, constantly answering the phone, and doing all the research needed for effective administration. A staff, patterned along the lines of the cabinet model, can be very effective in helping the officeholders plan their time. Much of the first few months in office is consumed in just getting a feel for the office and how it fits in with the whole structure.

Because Don and Bob were elected so late in the semester, they will find themselves spending the majority of their time at the start of the fall semester trying to make 100 or so appointments to various committees. While it is sometimes difficult to find enough people willing to spend the time these committees require, placing people in these slots is very important, if students are to be aware of what is happening in all areas of the University. One good source for getting applicants for these posts is the Area Government system. There are a lot of concerned people in the areas who want to get involved. Don and Bob should, and most likely will, use the President's Council, which is made up of Area Government Presidents, to help in this process.

Bob Dion, as Student Trustee, will have a tough job. Not only will he have to know all about the Amherst Campus, but, as a member of the board, he will have to become familiar with the Boston and Worcester Campuses. They have their own distinct missions and goals, and Bob will have to decide how their development interfaces with Amherst's future. While the Student Trustee is the Amherst student body's representative on the board, that person must avoid becoming provincial, interested only in Amherst. This is a University made up of three campuses, and the Board has to be concerned about all of them. The Student Trustee can face a real dilemma on some votes, but he-she must realize that the Student Trustee should always have the interests of the entire University at the forefront.

> At the state level, there are the issues of the reorganization of public higher education, and the University's budget...Don and Bob will have to work towards forming a united effort to gain full funding for this institution.

Bob will have been on the board only a short time when the board appoints a new President for the University. Deciding on a President is the most important decision a board can make. It will be a difficult choice, not an easy one for a new trustee.

Establishing a close working relationship with the Boston Student Trustee is always valuable, as shown by Pinky Batiste and Judy Baker over the past year. By doing so, the students on the Board can exchange information, discuss problems facing students throughout the University, and divide up the mountain of paper and research which each Trustee has to deal with.

At the state level, there are the issues of the reorganization of public higher education, and the University's budget. The yearly budget battle is obviously important. Don and Bob will have to work towards forming an united effort to gain full funding for this institution. Reorg will have far reaching effects on the University. They will have to keep abreast of the deliberations of the special Legislative Commission examining reorg, so that they can react to UMass's role in any new system that may be proposed.

As for the Student Government Association and its future, Don and Bob will be heavily involved in the formulation of the SGA's restructuring. It is no secret that many people are unhappy with the present system, but as with higher-ed-reorg, no one can agree on what a better system would look like. The Co-Presidents will have to act as catalysts and mediators, bringing together a wide spectrum of opinion, including Student Senators, Area Government members, and average students, in order to design a plan which will have majority support. The first step in that direction will require the breaking down of the mistrust and factionalism which is rife in the SGA. That won't be easy, but there are a lot of people who are tired of the constant waring, and who are willing to help Don and Bob start patching up the torn lines.

The best of luck to Don Bishop and Bob Dion. It is not going to be easy, but they know that. Don and Bob are hard workers, who care quite a bit about what other people think. They have that all important quality of not taking themselves too seriously, which is so important if you hope to keep an optimistic view of the environment around you. We have two people in the President's Office who are going to give it their best shot. To have any measure of success they need our support. They should get it, they're deserving of it.

Good faith

After an initial show of good faith, it is a normal stalling tactic of the administration to bog concerned students down with unnecessary technicalities and bureaucratic runaround. This is the case with the current negotiations on a lease proposal for students living in University owned housing.

As the Collegian reported yesterday, the students who are negotiating for a student lease feel as if they are negotiating with the administration and getting nowhere fast. It is fairly obvious that the administration is trying to dissipate the student effort and make it impossible to reach an agreement before the students have to leave for summer vacation. This is unfortunate. Especially since it took a takeover to put the administration in a negotiating mood in the first place.

Related to this problem is the bad faith exhibited by the administration in the rebate negotiations, which were also explained in yesterday's Collegian. Giving students only until May 1 to fill out claim forms and then declining to make the campus-mail services available for mailings explaining the claim procedure illustrates that the administration is not as interested in paying rebates to students as placating students who are demanding fair treatment.

It is important to remember that the leaky unsound fire traps called dorms on this campus contain human beings who are entitled to better. A lease and a rebate program are not concessions to be made on the administration's part that will solve the problems and make everyone happy. These two programs are only the first step towards making this a livable campus for students.

Other programs have to include a comprehensive rehabilitation, plans for fire prevention and safety, handicapped renovations and basic health and safety improvements campus wide. The unwillingness to negotiate in good faith on the part of the administration can only indicate that similar tactics will be applied to these other needed changes. We strongly recommend that students and administrators work and negotiate in good faith toward solving a problem that affects all of us.

You May Be Eligible for Reimbursement....

PERSONAL PROPERTY DAMAGE CLAIM PROCEDURE

An issue that has affected dormitory residents is damage to personal property because of possible faulty maintenance, or as the result of other building system failures. The current procedure has been refined by concerned residents and staff and would reimburse dormitory students if they submit a valid claim form for damaged items. Every effort is being made to process claims received before Monday, May 1, so that residents with valid claims will receive a check prior to the final exam period. Claims made after May 1 will not be processed prior to the end of the semester due to lack of lead time. Examples of possible legitimate claims are books ruined by leaky roofs or clothes destroyed by bugs. Claims will be reviewed by a committee of students and administrators to determine the validity and value of each claim.

Claim forms can be picked up from your Head of Residence or your Area Management Coordinator's office. If you have further questions, please call the Area Management Coordinator in your area directly. Completed forms should be returned to your Area Management Coordinator's office.

Area Management Coordinators:

Northeast/Sylvan – Sandy Anderson, Johnson House, 5-0402
Central/Orchard – Don Pelkey, Field House, 5-1333
Southwest John Findley, Kennedy Lobby, 5-0392

Your Birthday

FRIDAY, APRIL 28

Born today, you are versatile, comfortable in the scientific world, the artistic, the business world and the leisurely. You have excellent judgment. You know if a project is going to please the public and therefore be profitable, and when it is doomed to failure. Such insight should keep you from making any financial blunders.

You enjoy travel and will try to indulge your interest in peoples and places often. You have considerable skill with languages and this will enhance your enjoyment of travel. You are not a collector, but will savor memories even when you cannot point to tangibles as souvenirs of journeys.

You have a great deal of will power but are disinclined to use it except for personal goals of high importance. When you aren't interested in a project find it impossible to sustain efforts for success.

Also born on this date are: Robert Anderson, playwright; Ann-Margret, actress.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

SATURDAY, APRIL 29

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) -- Enjoy present endeavors or give them up. Don't overestimate energy.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) - - Use restraint in new endeavors, or you will wind up without energy to proceed.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) -- Seek out a friend who has given good advice and ask your questions. Answers later.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) -- If you use will power, you should be able to gain ends before noon. Rest later.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) -- You will probably travel today. Read your future correctly.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) -- Versatility may not be the blessing you thought. You may have trouble deciding your course.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) -- Fondness for children leads you to decisions others may scorn. Keep to your view.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) -- Retain what you read and remember what you're told. Success follows.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) -- There is plain sailing ahead. Make yourself the object of another's admiration.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) -- You can usually get along easily with others, but it will take more than that this week.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) -- This is a good week for acting independently. Take care not to step on another's toes.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) -- Look for your chance for new experiences. Don't be alarmed by alarmists.

Gorillas hunt Wildcats

By RUSS SMITH
Collegian Staff

After being stung by the Dutchmen of Hofstra, the Minutemen will take to the hills of Durham for a 2 p.m. encounter tomorrow vs. the Wildcats of the University of New Hampshire in search of a rebound win.

The loss to the Dutchmen dealt a severe blow to the already slim chances of the Minutemen making the post season play tournament. The 'Crossers have just five games remaining in their schedule — with only two against nationally ranked teams, Army and Harvard.

The UNH matchup could go a long way to decide who is number one in New England. Currently Harvard is holding down first place, with UMass in the bridal position – a rarity in past seasons. UMass has handled the coastal schools pretty easily so far, smashing UConn, Vermont and BC, before toying with Brown.

But UNH could be a different story. This game won't be a cakewalk like some of those easier contests preceding this. UNH has been having a somewhat successful season — and has given teams fits, though they did 'squeak by' teams that UMass handily beat: UNH dropped BC 10-6 (UMass whitewashed BC 21-3) and slipped by UConn 10-7 (UMass smacked UConn 15-6).

Still UNH will be tough (or should be) Saturday — Schlitzarama Day in Amherst. Before their home fans, they'll be psyched to avenge last year's embarrassing 19-9 loss to the Gorillas, and at the same time attempt to catch a UMass squad maybe thinking past them to Army (in town Wednesday).

But since this game could further enhance UMass' respectability in New England, count on a slugfest between the two squads.

For those who can't make the trip, two home games next week-after Army on Wednesday, Harvard on Saturday.

UMass is 5-4, UNH is 5-2 (8th in N.E.).

UM stickwomen face tough UNH

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

The undefeated UMass women's lacrosse team tomorrow morning at 11 a.m. will face off against the University of New Hampshire, also undefeated in what looks to be its toughest competition of the season.

UMass, coming off of a six-game winning streak, is looking for a good game, with "good matchups all up and down the field," according to Coach Fran Garahan.

The stickers, said Garahan, have been working and practicing hard in preparation for the game.

In action against Bridgewater State Wednesday, the team looked offensively and defensively to be in top shape, with an impressive win, 12-0.

Garahan said that the biggest threat posed by the UNH team will be ball stalling. In tournament action against UMass last year, the UNH team pulled ahead 4-2, and stalled play, to win the game.

"We don't want to get into that position again," said Garahan. "Our strategy will be to get ahead and stay there."

UNH has an impressive scoring record of its own, however, and competition should be intense.

Green, Strepman win in tennis championship

By MICHAEL SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

UMass top singles player Alan Green and freshman Sergio Strepman won their first round matches yesterday at the New England Intercollegiate Tennis Championships.

Green and Strepman are the only Minutemen to advance to today's second round as their four teammates lost in the opening round of the Amherst College based tournament.

While players from 38 schools flooded the five college area tennis courts, Green defeated Vermont's Jeff Stone, 6-3, 7-6 (5-4 tie breaker) on the windy Amherst courts.

Green, who lost to Stone 6-4, 6-4, last fall in the seminfinals of the Yankee Conference Championships, will face Felipe Balaboni today.

After winning the first set, Green saw a 4-1 advantage in the second deteriorate in to a 6-5 lead for Stone. Green evened the match at six but quickly fell behind in the tie breaker 4-1. Green, who said he hadn't "been able to hit a volley worth anything" lately, then put away three shots at net and ended the match with an overhead smash.

Strepman, a steady performer at sixth singles for UMass, won a quick first set against Mark Erving of Southern Connecticut State College, but Erving forced the second into a tie breaker. Strepman prevailed 6-1, 7-6, (5-0).

Strepman takes on Brown's John Harkevy in the second round today.

UMass' Rickey Sharton lost to Amherst's Roy Andrews 3-6, 7-5, 6-0. Steve Heyl split sets with SCSC's Mike Ricco then fell in the third, 6-1, 3-6, 6-3. Freshman Mark Huetteman was defeated by Williams' Jim Parsons, 6-3, 6-4. Classmate Keith Hovland suffered the same fate at the hands of Williams' Evan Bash.

Minutemen doubles commence today as that competition begins; UMass players not in contention Saturday will travel to play SUNY Albany.

Track teams in action

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

A select handful of tracksters boarded a van at Curry Hicks Cage yesterday, with their destination Philadelphia and competition in the prestigious Penn Relays.

Several athletes that have reserved space in the meet record books, also have registered noticeable performances from the 1976 Olympic Games.

Gold Medal winner Edwin Moses holds the Penn Relays 400 meter intermediate hurdles record, an honor he achieved in 1976.

The meet high jump record belongs to Greg Joy, silver medalist in Montreal.

Herman Frazier achieved gold medal and meet record status while sharing the distinction with members of a 1600 meter relay team.

The outdoor track meet has become an eastern playground for spawning Olympic hopefuls. All entrants competing in Friday's and Saturday's program have complied with the qualifying standards. The festivities have attracted a huge following, as the 78 teams entered in the sprint medley will attest.

No more than nine Minutemen have been chosen by coach Ken O'Brien to compete in this year's contest. Don Dowden in the high jump, Paul Derby in the javelin, Kevin McCusker in the steeplechase, and Mickey Baugh, Fran O'Keefe, Steve MacDougall, Bob Hunt, Mark Healy, and Joe Martens in the relay portion of the competition, construct the handful of qualified trackmen in Pennsylvania.

The relay men will shuttle their talents in either the sprint medley, mile or two mile relays.

Meanwhile, the women's team will entertain the University of Vermont today at the Llewelyn Derby Track Complex. Field events begin at 3 p.m. and running events start at 3:30.

The Minutewomen are basically healthy and looking for a close meet from UVM. The Catamounts lost by only one point to UMass this past indoor season, 50-49.

In last week's BC Relays, the UMass sprint medley relay team of Diana Sealy, Nancy Cominoli, Linda Stillman and Cindi Martin beat the Vermont quartet by one second. That showdown should make for an exciting finale if the meet should come down to the closing event.

That quartet will also provide a major block of points in other events, as Sealy runs the 4x110 relay and quarter; Cominoli the 4x110 and 100 meter hurdles; Stillman the 100 yard dash, 4x110 and long jump; and Martin the half and 4x110.

Throwing events, with Karen Snow, Dianne Crawford, Mary Ann Stravinskas and Kelly Butler, should be strong.

Distance events, from the half-mile on up, will also be deep. Martin, Co-captain Bonnie Bukowski, Sue Mulligan and Laurie Wolf run the half; Tina Francario, Debbie Farmer, who runs a personal best time every time out, and Priscilla Wilson run the mile; and Linda Welzel, Moni Scott co-captain Anne Bradshaw and Eileen Everett shore up the two-mile.

Rankowitz blanks Bridgeport, 4-0

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

For a player who wasn't even listed on the pre-season roster, Peter Rankowitz pitched like a man who should be all-New England.

Joining a pitching-rich UMass baseball team, Mr. Rankowitz decided to duplicate the feats of the Doug Welencs and the Chris Collinses. But instead, Rankowitz did in his first start what it took the above duo a couple of starts apiece to accomplish.

With a great deal of smoke and an occasional off-speed pitch thrown in, Rankowitz baffled Bridgeport on only three hits and earned a 4-0 win yesterday at Earl Lorden Field. The shutout was UMass' third of the season.

And what makes it all the more remarkable is that the game was Rankowitz's: a) first start since 1976, b) first complete effort since 1975 (and only his second ever at UMass), c) first UMass shutout, and d) first appearance since 1976.

That's a lot of firsts, and they serve to add an exclamation point to a brilliant outing. It was by far his best of a somewhat spacy baseball career with the Minutemen.

Check out these stats: 0-2, 6.12 ERA; 0-1, 14.40 ERA. Those were his numbers in 1975 and 1976. Where was 1977? Rankowitz did not play at all that year.

And again this season, Rankowitz was apparently a victim of the numbers and youth games when he did not make the spring trip south with the team. But he was still working out, and when the Minutemen returned home, he joined the squad.

"He was still on the eligibility list, even though he didn't go south with us," UMass coach Dick Bergquist said. "When we came back, he began working out with us."

Rankowitz was originally slated to make his first start a week ago Wednesday in the second game of a doubleheader against Southeastern Massachusetts University, but a rainout took care of that.

"He was eager to go," Bergquist said, "and he made the most of it."

Rankowitz was indeed the man of the hour before a small but vocal group of fans down at the old home field. But for awhile, it looked as if he was not going to last even an inning.

Bridgeport's Charlie Dunbar and Fred Diaz — the first two hitters of the game — each smashed solid singles. But Rankowitz settled down and induced Don Pouliot to ground into a double play, and then got Greg Piche (his opposite number on the mound) to foul out. After that bit of pressure, it was all number 22.

Rankowitz allowed only one more hit — a third inning single by Scott Thurston, who was thrown out by left fielder Neal Lojek as he tried to stretch it into a double. Rankowitz struck out seven and walked only two.

"I threw 90 per cent fastballs," Rankowitz said. "My curve wasn't really working that well, so I used it as just a change of pace."

But he was quick to give others credit for the victory.

"The guys did a good job in the field behind me," he said.

Of his temporary difficulties in the first, Rankowitz said, "I was trying to get loose. It was my first time on the mound in a year or two."

Rankowitz's 118-pitch masterpiece consisted of 83 fast balls, 27 curves, and eight change-ups thrown in for good measure.

Overshadowed by the pitching was the UMass offensive attack, which produced 10 hits and a three-run fifth inning.

Lojek began the rally with a base hit, and then stole second. Wisely, Charlie Ciccone hit to the right side to advance Lojek to third. Number nine hitter Mike Stockley drove a two-strike pitch just over the first baseman's glove for an RBI single.

An infield hit down third base way by Ed Skribiski was followed by a Doug Aylward grounder which advanced the runners to second and third. A clutch single by Mike McEvilly plated the runners.

Mark Litano, playing in his first varsity game after being promoted from the JV's, drove in the final run on an eighth inning fielder's choice. Litano was hitting .518 for the JV team.

Aylward and Leo Kalinwoski kept up their personal batting barrages as each had two hits. Aylward has now hit in 10 straight games and in his personal last 13. Of the 14 games he has started, Aylward has hit in a tidy 13.

Kalinowski, meanwhile, has been hotter than blazes as he has now belted 14 hits in his last 21 at bats and is batting close to .370. His personal hitting skein now stands at five games.

But Peter Rankowitz was the story of this affair, and Bergquist heaped even more panegyric on him.

"He may be our fourth starter now," he said.

"Hey, this was a great way to start or a nice way to end, one way or the other," Rankowitz said.

UMass, winners of its last three games and four out of its last five, visits Rhode Island tomorrow at 1 p.m. for a tres important Yankee Conference twinbill. The Minutemen are now a streaking 13-16.

Frisbees fly at UMass

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

This year's Eastern Ultimate Frisbee Championships will get underway at UMass today with a new round robin playoff system and four new teams providing evidence of Ultimate Frisbee's growth and expansion. Last year, 16 teams played in a single elimination tournament.

The 17 assembled Ultimate teams include intercollegiate and club squads representing the South, Atlantic Coast, New England and Mid-Eastern regions of the United States. Preliminary games will begin on the UMass playing fields at 1:00 this afternoon and will be staggered throughout the afternoon and early evening. Most of the teams will play three 20 minute games apiece; the standard game is 48 minutes long and split into two halves. While 16 teams is the standard number for the tournament, tournament officials said they did not want to ease one team out of the competition when they felt it necessary to add a team from the South to shore up that region's representation, thus, one group has five teams.

The Kentucky, Knights of Knee and Discos Valente teams join Florida as the new teams in the second Eastern championship tournament. They will compete with thirteen teams returning from previous tournament play. The inclusion of Florida and Kentucky indicates the growth of Ultimate in the South, and the other two new teams are club teams and provide evidence of the game's expansion from the intercollegiate and high school level.

Eight teams will emerge from the first round and play in two groups of four at UMass on Saturday beginning at 11:00. Again, each team will play three games in order to determine teams for the two semifinal games at 7:30 Saturday night on the UMass lighted intramural fields. The finals are scheduled for Amherst College on Sunday afternoon at 1:00.

Ultimate Frisbee is a game for teams in which seven person lines move the Frisbee, officially, a 165 gram World Class disc, by passing alone, while attempting to score goals.

Toronto's Jack Valiquette's scores a first period goal on Islander Glenn Resch in the Maple Leafs 5-2 victory over New York last night. The series is even at three. (UPI photo)

Helpful hurts

Injuries. Players live in constant fear of them. Managers develop bleeding ulcers over them. Team physicians get rich because of them.

Recently, however, a few Boston Red Sox have purged the spirit in which injuries are beheld.

Third baseman Butch Hobson has bone chips in his elbow which are so painful he can't straighten his arm. Hobson is batting a bit over .340, has hit six home runs and knocked in over 20. He is setting a pace which would shatter the current single-season homerun and RBI records. Moreover, in a game against Texas when Hobson fought the flu and his lunch, he hit a homer and made an outstanding fielding play.

Designated hitter Jim Rice has bad eyesight. He, too, is hitting over .300 and has delivered a slew of runs and homeruns. Centerfielder Fred Lynn is "still not 100 per cent" following last year's disabling ankle injury. He is batting well over .350.

The time has come to stop treating physical discomfort as if it were harmful. Injuries and diseases should be prescribed as cures for various sporting ills.

Luckily, my DDM degree (Doctor of Demented Medicine) arrived yesterday from the School of Hard Knocks, making it legal for me to remove the wings from houseflies, squeeze acne sores, and prescribe sports maladies, so here goes...

SUBJECT: REGGIE JACKSON, PRESCRIPTION: PYORRHEA. The secret to Reggie's success is his willingness to sacrifice himself for the good of his team. His new candy bar, named "Reggie, Reggie, Reggie," exemplifies this attitude. So that Jackson's waistline won't fatally expand, (thereby diminishing his worth to the Yankees) while he is shilling for his bar, this disease of the gums would cause Reggie's teeth to fall out, thereby making it impossible for him to O.D. on candy.

SUBJECT: BRUNO SAMMARTINO, PRESCRIPTION: PLANTERS WARTS. Everybody agrees that Bruno is a devastating grappler, but he could be even more fearsome if, when stomping on an oppenent, he could infect his foe with these stubborn virulent blemishes.

SUBJECT: PETE ROSE, PRESCRIPTION: CRAMPS. No matter how much you may dislike the man for what he did to the Red Sox in the 1975 World Series, he still must be regarded as one of the two best pure hitters remaining active in the majors. Rose's crouched stance is what makes him so tough to pitch to, and terminal cramps would ensure that Pete loses nothing with age.

SUBJECT: GEORGE SCOTT, PRESCRIPTION: TAPEWORM. The Boomer's never-ending bout with obesity is legendary. It has been theorized that Scott has eaten as many "taters" in one sitting as he averages a season at bat. After implantation of the parasite, George's homers would still need a tape measure, but his culinary excesses would be handled by a tapeworm.

SUBJECT: RAY KROC, PRESCRIPTION: FALLEN ARCHES. The San Diego Padres' owner may know what he's doing when it comes to hamburgers, but when it comes to baseball, he's a real hamburger. If Kroc's restaurants were to self-destruct, the Padres might get a new owner and become a winner.

SUBJECT: JIM PLUNKETT, PRESCRIPTION: MEASLES. Alas, Plunkett have never been afforded the protection of a strong offensive line. Through the impending pass rush, a case of measles might help him spot his secondary receivers.

SUBJECT: BERNARDO CARBO, PRESCRIPTION: NOSEBLEED. When you think of Carbo standing at home plate, you gotta be thinking of the word "clutch." But when Bernardo takes to the basepaths, the only words that come to mind are "pinch-runner." Carbo is the only man in baseball history to try to score from second on a sharply-hit infield grounder. He was thrown out by 30 feet.

A nosebleed entails the loss of a goodly amount of blood unless one tips back one's cranium so as to prevent gravity from running its course outside of the body. In this way, Carbo would, of necessity, become a "head's-up" base runner.

SUBJECT: HOWARD COSELL, PRESCRIPTION: LOCKJAW. The best fate that could befall Horrendous Howard is a surgically implanted rusty nail and the abolition of the tetanus shot.

SUBJECT: AGENTS, PRESCRIPTION: DYSLEXIA. With contracts soaring, the average fan has become farther removed from sports, and the average fan's wallet has become farther removed from the average fan. Dyslexia will cause an agent to see a 000,000,1$ (one dollar) contract as a $1,000,000 (you know) pact, which, at ten per cent, he will implore his client to sign.

SUBJECT: DON ZIMMER, PRESCRIPTION: MUMPS. This might not help Zimmer to become a better manager, but who'd notice the affliction.

Profs to withhold grades

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Final student grades due at the end of the semester will be withheld from the administration in an effort to spur administrative action in current contract negotiations, a disgruntled faculty union voted Friday.

Withholding the grades could conceivably complicate housing and course scheduling for the upcoming fall semester. Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said the action taken by the Massachusetts Society of Professors could have a "serious effect on students" and that he was surprised by the faculty's action. Bromery also serves as UMass senior vice-president in charge of faculty labor relations.

"We want to do this with the full coordination of the students," said MSP President James E. Cathey. "It should not be punitive for students."

Graduating seniors, however, will receive their final grades, according to the vote.

In other action Friday, the MSP voted to picket and possibly boycott commencement ceremonies scheduled for May 27, to picket the Whitmore administration building daily beginning Wednesday, and to send representatives to a University trustee meeting also scheduled for Wednesday, at UMass-Worcester. The meeting was originally scheduled for the Amherst campus, but the location was changed some weeks ago.

The MSP is the Amherst unit at the faculty union. Together with the Faculty-Staff Association at UMass-Boston, the union represents approximately 2,000 faculty members.

The actions taken by the MSP stem from dissatisfaction with contract negotiations the two sides have been engaged in since last summer. The contract talks began following the formation of the union in February, 1977.

Bromery said he was surprised by the faculty action because he met with union representatives Thursday and the faculty action Friday did not "fit" that meeting.

Contract negotiations were broken off last Monday when administration bargainers left a negotiating session after faculty bargainers refused to accept a proposal on personnel policies.

Bromery said the administration team would resume the talks as soon as the union indicated it was ready.

"It's their initiative to go back, and they haven't taken it," he said. "I have trouble figuring out all these votes (to picket and withhold grades) when it's the union's initiative to go back to the bargaining table."

Dean of Students William F. Field also said withholding grades should complicate housing and course scheduling, but that he thinks the grades will eventually be turned in for processing.

"We can only process people for housing, registration, and that sort if they are enrolled students," Field said. "I'm certain if a lot of grades were missing, we could change assignment procedures."

Final grades are needed to determine which students will be considered enrolled for the next semester. Students most affected will be those on academic probation or those with low cumulative grade-point averages.

"I think in the final analysis, grades will be turned in," Field said. "I think the faculty is more responsible than that."

Field said it may be difficult for students to understand and-or support the faculty action, particularly students who need grades in order to determine financial aid eligibility or students needing grades to gain admission to graduate school.

"There is no way those students can understand sufficiently to overcome what's happening to them," he said.

If necessary, Field said, the University will individually process students.

"It'll give the administration something to do," he joked.

Withholding grades and similar action was attempted at Berkshire Community College in Pittsfield. No information could be obtained this weekend on the success of the effort there.

Preliminary results from a "faculty action survey" distributed last Tuesday by the MSP to all faculty members show a majority of faculty would support withholding grades.

'Give them A's' say UM faculty

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

One action angry faculty union members discussed Friday surely would have pleased most all students.

They wanted to give every student all A's.

Such a move would complicate scheduling matters and have a drastic effect on transfer admissions. Normal grade distributions — where a small part of the student population gets very high averages, another small part gets very low averages, and the largest part gets somewhere in between — assure that some students inevitably will not return to UMass at the end of each semester.

Some students are placed on academic probation, and others are dismissed for failing to get off probation.

Were all students to receive A's, many students who would have left the University would no longer be required to do so.

The increase in students returning to school will leave less space for transfers, perhaps drastically curtailing transfer admissions.

Likewise, increased numbers of returning students could complicate housing and course scheduling matters.

The faculty also discussed other methods of protesting, through action on student grades.

One faculty member suggested OSCAR, UMass' infamous computer, would literally go berserk if faculty members were to give each student every grade possible.

Thus, a student enrolled in, say, UMass' most popular course — rhetoric — would receive not only an A, but an AB, a B, a BC, a C, a CD, a D, and, oh yes, an F.

Another faculty member suggested grades should be turned in to the administration — but on white birch tree bark.

"After all," he said, "there's no rule on how the grades need to be turned in."

Women continue to demand pages

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

Approximately 40 students occupied the Collegian newsroom last night for the second time in two weeks demanding that women's pages be included in the paper.

The students occupied the newsroom while negotiations were in progress between women's page advocates and Collegian representatives. The protesters said they objected to the manner in which the negotiations were being held.

Negotiations continued until the pre-determined closing time of 6 p.m., after which the women negotiators were notified by the women protesters that they were no longer the protesters valid representatives.

Collegian negotiators offered to give the women's department guaranteed space daily, dispersed within the pages, but the women's community mandated the women's negotiators to accept nothing less than guaranteed pages.

The protesters originally demanded on April 13 (the time of the first occupation), four ad-free pages weekly. The women later changed their demands to what they said was a compromise of five pages weekly with no more than 25 percent ads.

Collegian Women's Editor Julie E. Melrose said she would stay "until our demands are met". She said it was a group decision that the protesters would stay until the second set of demands were met.

Dean of Students William F. Field said UMass police "will take responsibility for the building and watch unless they see damage or destruction". He said if the police saw an offense in progress, they would then intervene.

Field said the protesters would not be asked to leave at the official Campus Center closing time of 2 a.m. by either the campus security force or the administration.

Collegian production remained in the newsroom, although production was moved off-campus during the first occupation to ensure there would be no interference with production.

The women's pages issue surfaced at a board of editor's meeting April 12 which preceeded the first occupation of the newsroom. It was after three votes, and the passage of a motion by the Undergraduate Student Senate to freeze Collegian funds and take away the newspaper's equipment, that five of seven editors present from the 10-member board agreed to the women's demands of four ad-free pages weekly.

In a staff meeting eight days later the board's decision was overruled by a 98 to 28 vote of the staff. The negotiating teams were subsequently established.

A number of students are shown here milling about the Collegian offices during last night's occupation. This was the second time in two weeks that students occupied the paper's offices, demanding that women's pages be included in the Collegian.

Goodell hall, once the University library, will be renovated next year on the fifth and sixth floors to house student services offices. The work will cost $2.5 million, which will come from the state Capitol Outlay Budget. (Staff photo by Geoff Cohler.)

Summer employment presents difficulties

Editor's Note: This is the first of a two part series on views of summer employment.

By PATRICIA KEEFE
Collegian Staff

Many UMass students, while expressing confidence in their ability to land a summer job, attribute their difficulties to employers wanting year-round experience help.

Few have considered the UMass Placement Services as a possible avenue for summer job help. Some, like Roberta D'Ambrosio, a 20-year-old communications major, said they feel that "with the bureaucracy at UMass, it would take forever; I would rather look for myself."

The UMass Placement Service, located in Hampshire House, is a University-run service dealing with job interviews, banks, career counseling, workshops and resumes.

Many feel the Placement Service is for seniors and permanent job hunting only. Elizabeth Shea, a junior in natural resources studies, said, "The Placement Service has an image of permanent jobs; it's something you find out about as seniors."

Scott Romero, a freshman home economics major, said, "Maybe Placement Services could help you if you aren't picky, but it would be a pain in the ass. I'd rather rely on connections to get me a job."

A common complaint seemed to be a lack of publicity on the part of the Placement Services. Those interviewed didn't think the publication of Career News was enough. Lynda Fogarty, a 20-year-old junior in the department of natural resources studies, said, "I never hear much about it." She agreed with Shea about the office's image on campus as being for seniors only.

D'Ambrosio sees the office as mostly there as a reference for those students who need it. She had several suggestions for increasing publicity. "They don't publicize enough," she said. "They should put out more brochures; right about this time would be an excellent time to do so. Maybe that it's too much work for their staff, if so, they should hire more people."

Out in the job market itself, several reasons were given for the unwillingness of employers to hire specifically college students.

One reason is a possible lack of credibility. Fogarty and D'Ambrosio said, "A lot of kids lie. They know employers don't want you just for the summer so they say, 'I'm going to be here' and then they quit." D'Ambrosio also said, "There are too many students, all with the same qualifications."

Romero agreed that employers want year-round help. "Employers want people year-round and high school kids fill that bill a lot easier," he said. "They are always there."

Fogarty gave the reason as being part of a vicious circle. Employers want you to have experience — they won't give you a job without it," he said. "However, you can't get experience unless you get a job."

Both Fogarty and Shea said job competition in their fields is very tight. Shea said, "The problem is getting your foot in the door." Both women have basically applied for federally funded jobs.

Those students interviewed preferred a job related to their major.

Goodell to house student services

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

Goodell Hall will be renovated for the first time since it housed the University Library, according to a staff assistant of the University Planning Office. The library was moved to be housed in the present building in the summer of 1972.

Edward E. Simpson said the University has spent about $60,000 on Goodell but the building has not been converted from its original structure as a library.

Construction is scheduled to begin next February and is to cost $2.5 million. The funding will come from a State Capital Outlay and construction will be contracted by the state bureau of Building Construction.

Plans call for the fifth and sixth floors of Goodell to be renovated to house offices for University student services. Associate Provost John A. Hunt said the Goodell renovation will simplify for students the process of getting information about student services.

Goodell will house offices for the bilingual collegiate center, University Without Walls, Office of internships, International programs, parts of Continuing Education, CASIAC, Everywomen's Center, Honors Office, the ID office and counseling services.

Hunt said this will reduce the number of places students will have to go for services. Hunt said students will need only to visit the health center, the Registrar and Bursur's Office in Whitmore and the renovated Goodell building.

The concept of Goodell as a student services building has been in the works for five years according to Hunt.

After the library was moved from Goodell space in the building was assigned on an 'as is' basis to whoever was willing to take it, according to Simpson. The first two levels of the building are used for storage, the third for audio visual and a landscape architecture studio. The remainder of the building has been used to house varous campus groups, services, and one academic department, the Womens Studies department.

According to Simpson, the women's studies department will be moved from the building because the tone of the renovated Goodell is to be student services, not academic departments.

The original program was to renovate the entire building, 130,000 square feet, for $5 million. The bottom two floors were to be converted into the text book annex and the existing annex was to be converted back into a warehouse.

The state Bureau of Building and Construction recommended that Goodell be renovated because the space was needed, but recommended the cost be $2 million. The University Planning Office decided to cut the text book annex out of their plans and to only renovate the upper two stories and part of a third to house student services.

The faculty senate library committee had discussed requesting that part of Goodell be renovated to include an undergraduate library. Library Director Richard Talbot said the existing library is mainly for graduates and to conduct research. However Talbot said he did not think the committee was going to formally propose an undergraduate library in Goodell at this time.

The undergraduate library idea has support from acting Provost Jeremiah M. Allen. "I'm more inclined to favor the library idea if it is feasible," he said.

The UMass Student Federal Credit Union recently received a thrift honor award for outstanding increases in total savings over the past year. ### UMies register to vote mostly as independents

Amherst Town Clerk's office last week registered 371 people to vote in the September primary during a three-day session on the Campus Center Concourse.

Seven persons at Amherst College and 84 at Hampshire College also registered during one-day sessions at those campuses last week.

Almost 300 of those who registered at UMass maintained an independent political party affiliation, while 69 registered as democrats and 11 as republicans.

Town Clerk Estelle Matusko Friday said those who registered at the UMass Campus Center are "probably all students." She added her office handled 30 address changers at the concourse table.

UM trustee may run against Sen. Brooke

UMass Trustee Ruth S. Morganthau will decide within the next few weeks whether she will run against Sen. Edward Brooke, R-Mass.

Morganthau's husband, Henry Morganthau III, last night said many democrats have urged Morganthau to run because they feel a need for a strong democrat. "She is definitely exploring possibilities and looking into running," said Mr. Morganthau. "She has been exploring possibilities to organize a campaign." Mrs. Morganthau could not be reached for comment.

Mrs. Morganthau is a member of the U.S. delegation to the United Nations and lives in Cambridge. She is a member of the University Presidential Search Committee.

UM students arrested on campus this weekend

A UMass student was arrested Saturday night in Washington tower and charged with attacking and robbing a janitor, a police spokesman said yesterday.

Gregg C. Doonan, a junior from 430 Cance dormitory was charged with "disorderly conduct, breaking glass in a building, assault and battery on a janitor, malicious destruction, and unarmed robbery," the spokesman said.

Also arrested were Reginald Mimms of 15 Raymond Way in Ashland, Steven A. Rooney of 222 Waltham St., Lexington, John L. Taccalozzi of 12 Barrett St., Lexington on charges of disorderly persons.

Seventy-five cars were also towed and ticketed by UMass police, the spokesman said.

Nineteen people were also taken into protective custody. Someone who is taken into protective custody is not arrested. That person is only detained overnight by the police.

DeLima ordered to pay bills

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

Undergraduate Student Senate Speaker Brian J. DeLima was placed on jeopardy and ordered to pay restitution on Friday by the Student Judiciary for his use of senate phones to make over $300 worth of long distance calls between October 1976 and February 1978.

The Judiciary found DeLima guilty on two charges of fraud and misrepresentation Thursday night after a four hour trial.

DeLima's defense advocate Jon Hensleigh said after the sentencing that he and DeLima would "sit down and discuss" this week the possibility of appealing the Judiciary's findings.

DeLima was ordered placed on jeopardy from now until the end of the fall 1978 semester.

Jeopardy as defined in the Code of Student Conduct is a "suspended-suspension ... during this period a student found guilty of any violation of regulations may expect the suspension to be in effect and be separated from the University."

The hour long "sanction hearing" gave both the prosecution and defense a chance to make recommendations for action the Judiciary should take against DeLima.

Student Attorney General Jeffrey A. Lutsky, who prosecuted the case, recommended both jeopardy and a payment of calls for DeLima as well as another action which the court did not take.

Lutsky asked that the Judiciary advise the senate of the actions it had taken against DeLima, and recommend to the senate that it make its own investigation into the matter and decide whether DeLima should be removed as speaker.

The Judiciary has no power to remove DeLima as senate speaker, only the senate has the power to remove an officer.

Hensleigh made no specific recommendation, except to advise against a "harsh sentence" and say that DeLima should pay for the calls.

"If Brian DeLima is given a harsh sentence ... " Hensleigh said, his voice rising with emotion, "it will make a martyr out of him. A guilty verdict was needed." But, he said, "what we're looking at is a very screwed-up situation. You can't single out one individual."

DeLima in his own defense said, "My only mistake was not walking into that RSO office, getting the bills and taking care of it (the payment) myself. That was my poor judgement."

After deliberating in private with fellow judges Robin Zeigel and Steven Forman for 30 minutes, presiding Judge Donna Cohen read off the Judiciary's decision while DeLima stood quietly, staring straight ahead.

Outside the Student Attorney General's Office, where the hearing took place, DeLima repeated as he had throughout the trial that he hadn't done anything wrong.

"I don't think I violated the code ... I shouldn't have been found guilty in the first place," he said.

DeLima said he saw the need for a specific policy on senate phone use, but he said he was upset that he was chosen for the "test case."

"I personally feel that it's unfortunate that I had to be singled out, but I guess it had to be done."

During the trial, Lutsky said investigation had shown that other senate officials had made personal, long-distance calls on senate phones but "none came even close to the magnitude" of DeLima's use.

Since DeLima has said that "some" of the 73 calls worth $313 Lutsky charged him with making were not his, the Judiciary ordered that a committee be formed to "investigate and determine the exact amount of money owed the senate."

The committee, to be composed of DeLima, Lutsky, senate treasurer Priscilla West and a financial officer of Recognized Student Organizations, has until next Monday to determine exactly what DeLima owes. After that is done, the Judiciary said, DeLima must pay the bill.

Along with the two sanctions against DeLima, the Judiciary also made two recommendations to the senate.

First, the senate should establish an ethics committee to "set up standards for its members and to circumvent future conflicts."

Second, the Judiciary recommended that legislation containing the following items be passed concerning the use of senate phones:

— Senate officials can use phones at their discretion as long as the privilege isn't abused.

— Personal toll calls should be logged and paid at the next billing.

— No credit card calls should be charged to senate phones without "prior written consent from the senate or its designee." The Judiciary recommended that senate treasurer take that responsibility.

Some of DeLima's calls to Hawaii were made from outside the senate office, but charged to the phone there.

Co-ops to protest administrative policy

By BRAD GOVERNMAN
Collegian Staff

An administrative policy statement preventing University departments from purchasing goods from five student run co-ops has triggered opposition from the Co-op Coalition, an organization of co-op representatives.

The five co-ops affected by the policy are the bicycle, stereo and photo co-ops, Earthfoods and People's Market.

According to sources within the Coalition, a petition drive will begin tomorrow at all co-ops to protest the policy and grievances held against the Campus Center administration, headed by Director William Harris. A shutdown of all co-op services tomorrow has also been discussed among co-op ranks, according to the Coalition sources.

The policy statement, issued March 16, is now commonly referred to by Coalition members as the "Woodbury memo", a memorandum addressed from Acting Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury to Armand H. Demers, coordinator of Student Activities.

According to the memo, the policy action was taken to "insure that tax-paying commercial enterprises" outside the University "are not required to compete with co-ops at an unfair disadvantage and in the interest of maintaining good 'town-gown' relations."

"Town-gown" refers to the relations between the University and the Town of Amherst, particularly the chamber of commerce.

Coalition member Malcolm Quint responded to the administration's "town-gown" rationale in a public service statement read over WMUA, the UMass student-run radio station, last Tuesday.

"In reality the administration is afraid of the competition from student co-ops within the Campus Center complex," the statement read.

In a meeting with Woodbury and Demers last Wednesday, Coalition members questioned the intent of the policy, as to why only the five co-ops wre specified and why the policy didn't hold for the University Store as well.

According to James Starr of the University Legal Services Office, "to be consistent, the policy would have to hold for (departments) buying books at the book store."

In an unofficial clarification of the policy statement released by Demers to the Collegian last night, the administration maintained their "town-gown" intentions.

According to the clarification the policy was "prompted by concerns...regarding pressures brought to bear by vendors or others who might complain about tax advantages and subsidies offered co-ops and about financial impact those co-ops might be having on their own or on other tax paying business."

Jake Bishop, director of procurement, told the Collegian co-ops "could run themselves out of business" by continuing to do business with tax-supported department monies on an accounts receivable basis."

Trustees and students disagree on requests

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

Two UMass Board of Trustee officials said they have granted Students United for Public Education their request to give a presentation to the board despite reports by the students that their requests have not been met.

Chairman of the Board Joseph P. Healey and chairman of the trustee's Long Range Planning Committee, Paul G. Marks, both last night said the board had agreed at their April meeting to let the students give the board a half hour presentation at this month's meeting. This presentation is to be similar to the one given to the planning committee earlier this year. The organization lobbying against Secretary of Education Paul L. Parks' plans for reorganizing public higher education in Massachusetts.

In an open letter to the board, which was printed in last Thursday's Collegian, the group said, "The granting of a half hour to SUPE is not what we requested." The letter stated that the students have requested an open meeting and "that any and all interested students and groups on campus should be able to address the board at their May 3 meeting."

"We explained at the Long Range Planning Committee meeting that they would only have a half hour to make their presentation. Frankly I'm puzzled," Marks said last night, responding to the letter.

"I thought they were interested in talking to the board, not making a public

Sun Day celebrates era of solar energy

By CINDY REGET
Collegian Staff

"When the sun rises on May 3, it will be more than the dawn of a new day," wrote Peter Harnik, co-coordinator of Sun Day. "It will be the dawn of a solar era."

Sun Day will be celebrated Wednesday on campus with many solar-oriented activities. A sun rise service will be held at the Orchard Hill Observatory, and many exhibits dealing with alternative energy sources will be set up on the library lawn. Issac Assimov and local politicians are scheduled to speak at the event, and activities to commemorate Sun Day are planned at the other five colleges.

Sun Day was organized by Denis Hayes, member of the Worldwatch Institute. The Institute is an alternative energy research center in Washington, D.C. The main objective of Sun Day is to inform the public of alternative renewable energy sources available, such as wind, wood and the sun.

On the national level, Sun Day will feature events such as wind displays on the Great Plains, bio-mass displays in New Jersey (garbage to methane), Alaska (wood chips to oil) and Iowa (corn husks to methanol). Solar air conditioning displays will be held in California. Groups in New England, Appalachia and the Pacific Northwest will discuss community hydro-electric dams. Sun Day will celebrate "positive attainable solutions" to the problem of diminishing energy supplies.

The solar exhibits to be held on the library lawn will be sponsored by solar manufacturers. Dixon Energy Systems, Goodtimes Stove Co., Toward Tomorrow Fair, and other interested groups. The other groups include the Amherst Bicycle Repair Collective, The Yellow Sun Food Co-op, Alternative Energy Coalition, Mass Pirg, and the Coalition for Environmental Quality.

Jonathan Z. Souewine, candidate for district attorney for Hampshire and Franklin Counties is scheduled to speak in the afternoon. The topic of his speech will be "Energy and Student Action."

Other events scheduled are a series of new games which de-emphasize competition.

Later in the evening Issac Asimov will speak on solar energy on the Metawampe Lawn.

Hampshire College will hold a panel discussion on politics of solar energy. Mass PIRG will sponsor a citizens workshop on solar action Thursday. Downtown Amherst merchants will feature displays on children's activities in their stores all week. On Saturday, a Solar Celebration is planned on the Amherst Town Commons.

Southwest election results

Jane Byington and Ed Childs were elected Southwest Assembly co-presidents in elections Thursday night. John Reuben and Tim Condon were elected co-vice-presidents, Maryann DeNatale and Mike Frongillo are the co-treasurers, and Ann Scanlon is communications coordinator.

According to Southwest Assembly Elections Committee Chair Peter Torkildsen, the voter turnout was 27 percent, which "is fairly good for any SGA election, and very good for any area government election." He said the referendum question regarding putting lights up surrounding the horseshoe basketball courts was "won overwhelmingtly, taking at least 96 percent of the vote."

NEAG elections scheduled tonight

By CAROL MORRIER and STEVEN WILKINSON
Collegian Staff

Northeast Area Government elections will be held tonight from 7-5 in dormitory lobbies.

At last night's area government meeting representatives voted to reimburse Paul Goldman $180 for past vice-presidential services.

In other Northeast news, Quad Day will be Saturday May 13 from noon to 7. Featured bands are Albatross, Stormin' Norman and Suzie, Cash, and Loose Caboose. Tables will be set up around the quad for vending purposes. Anyone interested in setting up a table are asked to contact NEAG President Diane Lauricella. Intermission will feature frisbee and dance demonstrations.

Claim sheets for reimbursement of room damages due to University neglect are available from head of residences and are due today, said Lauricella.

The Northeast Semi Formal will be Friday, May 12. Tickets are $4.50 for a buffet dinner and dancing in the Campus Center to the sounds of Bongo Moon.

Afghanistan government announces new leader

NEW DELHI, India [AP] — Afghanistan's new military government gave the first hint of its political leaning yesterday by announcing the selection of Nur Mohammed Taraki, a reported leftist, as prime minister in the wake of last week's bloody coup.

New reports said at least 500 persons were killed in the uprising.

Kabul Radio in the Afghan capital announced Taraki's appointment in a broadcast monitored here and in London. In another broadcast monitored in Islamabad, Pakistan, the radio said the Soviet Union on Sunday became the first nation to recognize the new government.

In Moscow, the Soviet government gave no immediate confirmation of that report.

Kabul Radio called Taraki a "nationalist and revolutionary personality" but gave no party affiliation.

The British Broadcasting Corp. in London identified Taraki as the leader of the People's Faction Party, a purported pro-Communist group that operated underground under the previous Afghan government. He reportedly was one of several persons arrested in left-wing demonstrations that preceded the coup, which began Thursday.

The United News of India said here that Taraki, in his late 50s, had been a leader of Afghanistan's formerly outlawed Socialist Party.

The rebels, who referred to themselves Sunday as the Democratic Republic Revolutionary Council, killed President Mohammed Daoud, 69, and his brother-adviser Naeem, 68, Friday after the brothers were said to have resisted "madly." The president held the office of prime minister concurrently.

Kabul Radio reported Sunday that the military Revolutionary Council resolved unanimously at its first meeting to rename the country as of April 30, 1978, "the Democratic Republican State of Afghanistan."

Although resistance to the new government was reported dying down, bloodletting continued Sunday in the form of summary executions, primarily of police and Interior Ministry officials, according to Western embassies here.

The country's air force commander and political affairs minister were among those reported killed after they refused to surrender.

The government had said 200 persons were killed in the uprising, but witnessed arriving in Pakistan put the death toll at about 500 soldiers and civilians on both sides. The Pakistani-Afghan border was reopened Sunday.

Cabinet minister fired; Rhodesia in dispute

SALISBURY, Rhodesia [AP] — A powerful faction in Rhodesia's biracial administration yesterday demanded the reinstatement of black cabinet minister Byron Hove, but wavered on whether to quit the interim government in a dispute over his firing.

"The party is reviewing the whole question of its continued participation in the transitional government," the United African National Council said in a statement.

The statement came after a four-hour meeting between party leaders and their head — Bishop Abel Muzorewa, an influential moderate and one of three blacks on Rhodesia's ruling executive council.

Hove, dismissed as co-minister of justice Friday for criticizing the racial makeup of Rhodesia's police and judiciary, told reporters in London that the two-month-old government would be in danger without Muzorewa. He is thought to have the widest support of any council member among Rhodesia's blacks.

"He is the only honest man in this affair, and he is dealing with rogues," said Hove, a 38-year-old attorney who left Rhodesia on Saturday to resume his practice in Britain. "If the split is permanent, it could mean the collapse of the interim government."

Before the UANC meeting here, about 1,500 blacks held a silent demonstration near party headquarters protesting provisions of the agreement signed March 3 between Muzorewa, the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, Chief Jeremiah Chirau and white Prime Minister Ian Smith. The four thus became the ruling executive council.

The agreement would lead to black majority rule by the end of the year but also provide future safeguards for Rhodesia's 263,000 whites. There are 6.4 million blacks.

Muzorewa, who appointed Hove, called the council's action to remove the black minister "disastrous" and said Saturday that he would discuss with his UANC whether to quit the newly formed government.

Party spokesman Ernest Bulle, co-minister of finance, called for an immediate emergency meeting of the executive council to reinstate Hove. It was believed that UANC would wait and see what the council does before making any final decision on withdrawal.

demonstration," Healey told the Collegian last night in a telephone interview.

"The board is happy to have them," said Healey. "They are a very responsible, constructive group; they will still be speaking."

Spokespersons from the group could not be reached last night for comment.

In their open letter, the students complained that the board meeting had been changed from the Amherst campus to the Worcester campus which will deny students easy access to the meeting.

"It's been scheduled for Worcester for some time," said Healey. He said he could give no specific reason why the meeting will be held in Worcester.

The negotiating teams were meeting for their third time when the women's pages supporters announced that the women negotiators were no longer the women's pages supporters official representatives.

The women's pages negotiators had met Saturday with the women's page advocates to determine what their bottom line would be. The women at that time changed their terms to the five 75 per cent ad-free pages weekly. The terms also included a clause to allow women's news of national importance to appear in the first three pages of the Collegian, designated as news pages.

The Collegian negotiators proposed granting 30 guaranteed inches daily to be dispersed throughout the paper. Both sides agreed that the women's editor would have complete editorial control over stories and headlines originating in her department and in any other women's related news.

It was then that both sides realized an impass had occurred, and the negotiators broke at their six o'clock deadline. They returned to their constituencies to see if a compromise could be determined.

"We are still quite willing to negotiate, but it's up to them now," Editor-in-Chief William A. Sundstrom said.

The protesters brought food and sleeping bags with them, as they settled in the Collegian newsroom. They danced, played records, sang, and did homework while Collegian staffers continued to produce the newspaper.

At one point, Executive Editor Michael P. Doran locked a phone which was surrounded by women protesters. The women claimed Doran pushed them, and later they were discussing possible legal action against Doran.

Noble accentuates accountability

By PATRICIA KEEFE
Collegian Staff

Rep. Elaine Noble, D-Boston, Friday night said she will base her candidacy for Edward Brooke's U.S. Senate seat on the issue of his accountability to Massachusetts voters over the past 12 years.

Noble, speaking as part of Mt. Holyoke College's Women's Weekend, addressed a crowd of about 100 on women in politics.

"As a junior senator, the very job description means you deal with mayors in-state. Brooke doesn't do this; instead he immerses himself in Washington politics," said Noble.

Noble is "amazed that you could be a junior senator and never be in some major cities in 11 years." Another question Noble has is how Brooke became a millionaire and served the people at the same time. She added Brooke is vulnerable in terms of how people view him. "Lack of credability is a death knell in politics," she said.

Her idea of the role of a junior senator is to "focus on working with the people who live in the cities and towns. She said she would do this through "regional boards and office hours. I think I do this well." Noble said she would create a mechanism to keep her self accountable to her constituents.

Describing politics as the "last male bastion of power," Noble related how the election of women to the state senate "caused more controversy over a 'powder-room' than the Equal Rights Amendment."

In 1974 the year she was elected, Noble helped to set up a women's caucus in the senate. "While it was never our intention to become a sounding board for other women in government, we have and take the position on proudly."

To deal with the problem of "gentlemen trying to bait ut," the women's caucus created their own women's code of ethics. Regardless of the issue, caucus members will not attack each other on the floor. "We don't want a cat-fight," said Noble. The members of the caucus cover a wide scope of issues.

Noble thinks "it is easier for women in politics than in other areas." She said there has been a shift in public opinion about women in office. "Five years ago it was thought women should be in lower levels of government. Because of Watergate and MBM, there has been a radical shift in thought, women should be in all levels." She added, "Women tend to go into office after men have screwed it up."

"Politics is not glamorous and doesn't require much intelligence," she said, "just look at the people in office now."

Noble said women have to work twice as hard and learn twice as much as men to stay in office.

Noble urged her listeners to "think seriously about serving in government." She described the essence of democracy as "the only process that brings such a diverse cross-section of people together." She said it was bad when people of the same backgrounds, thinking and groups were in government. As an example, she cited the Nixon years with his supreme cast as being close to a dictatorship. "There is no hope for real political change 'til these guys go off to the big court in the sky," she said.

It is the reality-testing and accountability of political life that Noble finds "refreshing and appropriate." She said, "If you need tremendous reinforcement all the time, forget politics." "A 30 second high" is how Noble describes politics. "It's the most exciting thing I've ever known, there's nothing like it when you can improve the quality of life for people."

Rep. Elaine Noble, D-Boston

Suit filed on construction of New Hampshire mall

Pyramid Company, which earlier this month received the go-ahead from the town of Hadley to build its $5 million Hampshire Mall along Rte. 9, has been confronted with a legal suit that could cause it to halt construction.

Excavation on the land has already begun.

Charles Schnier, a Mountain Farms Mall trustee, filed a suit in Northampton Thursday and asked the court for a temporary injunction to bar construction of the mall until the suit is heard.

Superior Court Judge Benjamin Apkin deferred action on the request and ordered a hearing on the case for Thursday in Suffolk Superior Court in Boston.

The suit, submitted by attorneys Robert A. Corash of Northampton and Joel Z. Eigerman of Boston, has its roots in a deed restriction placed on the land several years ago when Schnier bought the land from Allard Farms Inc.

The restriction forbids retail development of the surrounding land owned by Allard until April 1979. Pyramid is building on some of that land.

The suit names Allard's Farm Inc., the Pyramid Company's Conpar Realty Inc. and partners in the Pyramid Companies, Robert Congrel and Leonard Levine.

It claims Pyramid has induced several tenants of Mountain Farms not to renew their leases with Mountain Farms and has solicited them for the Hampshire Mall. The suit says the actions by Pyramid have resulted in "substantial" economic loss for Mountain Farms.

Schnier's suit asks that the transaction between Pyramid and Allard's Farm Inc. be nullified, that he be awarded unspecified monetary damages including court costs and attorney's fees, and that building on the Pyramid land — on the south side of Rte. 9 next to South Maple Street — be stopped until the suit is heard.

Negotiations to lift the restriction on retail construction on Pyramid's land were being conducted between the two companies, the suit claims, but they were never concluded.

Groundbreaking ceremonies for the Hampshire Mall were held April 20, although preliminary excavation had already begun.

Pyramid officials had met with various Hadley governing boards three times before it was cleared to begin construction April 11, Hadley Selectmen Julian Fil said last week.

First N.E. vet school set to open at Tufts

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

After 20 months of intensive, detailed planning the Tufts University Board of Trustees unanimously voted this past weekend to establish the first New England Regional School of Veterinary Medicine to open in fall 1979 admitting 35 students in its first class.

Approval of the $31 million project initiates construction of facilities, fund raising, and application procedures for both faculty and students. Twenty-five million dollars was budgeted for construction, with $14.5 million allocated to large animal clinical facilities at Grafton State Hospital.

'In the outset only New England students will be accepted.'

The Grafton facility was donated by the state, but will be funded and constructed entirely by Tufts. The remaining $6 million is reserved for faculty endowments.

Tufts received a $10 million federal grant for planning and initial construction last spring.

Students' first two years will be spent in classroom work at Tufts Medical Center in Boston. Third year study involves work in small animal clinical at Angel Memorial Hospital in Boston and in large animal clinical at the Grafton facilities.

Students' final year will be dedicated to specialization. Possibilities to work at Woods Hole for those interested in aquatic animals has been suggested.

In the future classes will consist of 100 students under a contract system with the New England states. Dr. Thomas Murnane, director of planning of the Tufts Vet School, said, "In the outset only New England students will be accepted, but others won't be ruled out in the future."

The New England states will be required to contract with Tufts for a number of student seats. The state legislators must appropriate between $8,200 or $9,000 for each sponsored student. A year's cost is speculated to run $13,500 per student.

At present Tufts expects to allocate seats in proportion to population. Under this system Massachusetts would receive 48 percent.

Once 22 vet schools exist in the United States with priority given to in-state students. Establishment of the New England Vet School opens many gateways and opportunities for UMass and other students of the region.

Brooke attacks Carter solar policy

WESTBORO [AP] — Sen. Edward W. Brooke of Massachusetts accused the Carter administration of breaking campaign promises to develop solar energy.

Speaking at a weekend solar technology exhibition sponsored by the Massachusetts Electric Co., the Republican legislator claimed President Carter has underfunded solar energy research budgets.

Brooke called Carter's performance on solar energy "a disappointment," saying, "The President's campaign promises and energy message led us to hope that there would be a real push to develop solar power.

"Instead," he said, "the proposed Carter budget contained a 15 per cent cut below last year's solar appropriations."

Brooke said solar energy is important to New England because of the region's heavy dependence on imported oil for heating needs.

Mass statesmen meet finance rules

WASHINGTON [AP] — Most Massachusetts congressmen have gone beyond the requirements of a new financial disclosure rule.

House members have until today to file statements on their outside income, major liabilities and real estate transactions for the last quarter of 1977.

Most of the state's delegation have already filed, some releasing far more information than necessary.

Democrats Gerry E. Studds of Cohasset and Paul E. Tsongas of Lowell gave the House clerk detailed accounts of their net worth. Tsongas even released a copy of his income tax return.

Tsongas, Joseph D. Early, D-Worcester, Robert F. Drinan, D-Newton and Edward Markey, D-Malden reported no income other than their salaries. Base salary for a congressman is $57,500 annually.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill's financial disclosure statement, released at a news conference Friday, showed his net worth to be $181,000.

Thompson calls for allegiance to laws

CONCORD, N.H. [UPI] — Gov. Meldrim Thomson has urged citizens to reaffirm allegiance to the laws of the land today, on the first anniversary of a mass occupation of the Seabrook nuclear power plant and two days after a dance commemorating it.

Thomson, in a Loyalty Day declaration for May 1, urged citizens to "publicly reaffirm allegiance to our flag, country, and the laws under which we are governed.

"Loyalty to civil obedience is being constantly eroded and assaulted by those who subserve to the tenets of unlawful obedience," said Thomson, who urged cities to participate in patriotic programs sponsored by the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The declaration came after two courts thwarted Thomson's effort to stop the Clamshell Alliance from holding a dance in the Portsmouth National Guard armory celebrating the May 1, 1977, occupation of the Seabrook plant at which 1,414 persons were arrested.

Crime committee still has openings

BOSTON [AP] — State officials are having a hard time filling a few of the slots on what is to be a prestigious blue ribbon commission to investigate state and county building projects.

The mini-crime commission must be appointed by May 12 under the terms of the law signed April 12 by the governor. It would have to file its first report by July 17 and is expected to remain in existence through Dec. 31, 1979.

The commission is charged with investigating the controversy surrounding the work of McKee-Berger-Mansueto, a New York consulting firm that supervised construction of the University of Massachusetts' Boston campus, and any other state and county construction projects during the past 10 years.

RI prison guards return from walkout

CRANSTON, R.I. [AP] — Guards at the state prison returned to work yesterday after a one-day walk-out, but knee-deep garbage and human waste still covered the floor of the maximum security section.

The administration arranged for New England Maintenance Co., an independent firm, to clean up the prison today, maximum security captain Stafford S. Quick said.

The 200 prisoners in maximum security refused to clean up unless their demands for longer visiting exercise periods were granted. The administration refused to extend privileges until the prisoners cleaned the mess they made.

About 160 guards from all sections of the prison refused to work Saturday in protest over the stinking garbage and overflowing toilets.

After 12 hours of negotiations the guards agreed to return to their posts Saturday night, relieving the men who had been on since midnight Friday.

PORTSMOUTH, N.H. — Members of the anti-nuclear organization Clamshell Alliance join hands and dance in a circle at the Portsmouth National Guard Armory yesterday. It was in this same building that many of the group were imprisoned following their arrest for taking part in last year's occupation of the Seabrook nuclear plant. (UPI)

Russia warned on African strategy

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Secretary of State Cyrus Vance said yesterday he has made it abundantly clear to the Soviet Union that the United States is concerned about the increasing intervention of outside forces in Africa.

Vance, interviewed on CBS' "Face the Nation," also said he was confident the Congress will ratify a new Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty with the Soviet Union once it has been negotiated. But he put no timetable on the negotiators.

Of the SALT talks, Vance said he does not want to discuss specifics as long as the discussions are going on.

"We're going to have to talk in general terms," he said. "We want an agreement which is a sound agreement...one which will maintain or enhance our security and that of our allies as well."

And Vance said a summit between President Carter and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev is "possible," but he refused to speculate on where or when such a meeting could be held.

Nixon thinks tapes began his demise

NEW YORK [AP] — It comes as no surprise, but Richard M. Nixon thinks his presidency was doomed from the day the public learned his tape recorders eavesdropped on every conversation in his office.

"I now believe," he writes, "that from the time of the disclosure of the existence of the tapes and my decision not to destroy them' my presidency had little chance of surviving to the end of its term."

The quotation, from Nixon's forthcoming memoirs, was in the Washington Star on yesterday. The Star is one of the newspapers buying a seven-part series of excerpts being syndicated by a subsidiary of the New York Times.

Nuke rally closes with overnight vigil

GOLDEN, Colo. [AP] — A weekend rally that drew some 5,000 protestors to the Rocky Flats unclear weapons plant drew to a close with an overnight vigil on a little-used railroad track leading to the plant.

For many who stood for four hours in the wind and the rain to decry the use of nuclear power, the weekend held memories of other demonstrations, rallies and marches. But for those who were around for the turmoil of the 1960s, it was a picnic in comparison.

Saturday's demonstration was the largest ever held at the plant, the nation's only producer of the plutonium components for nuclear bombs.

As Jefferson County sheriff's officers on horseback watched from a nearby hill, some 150 demonstrators, including Daniel Ellsberg, who made the Pentagon Papers public, carried sleeping bags and backpacks to the track.

There were no arrests, and plant security officials said the protesters would be allowed to stay as long as they wish.

Family charges Moro 'death' plan

ROME [UPI] — The family of kidnapped ex-premier Aldo Moro yesterday accused the leaders of the ruling Christian-Democratic Party of "ratifying" his death sentence and dismissing him as mad.

In a bitter statement confirming the rift between the family and the party Moro heads, the family said the Christian Democratic leadership "should know that by their attitude of immobility and refusal of every initiative from several quarters they are ratifying the death sentence on Aldo Moro.

"After so many days of anguished waiting, we make a pressing appeal to the Christian Democrats to have the courage to assume their own responsibilities for the freeing of their president," the statement said.

Feds to probe scaffold collapse

WILLOW ISLAND, W. Va. [UPI] — Federal experts are focusing on the theory that a combination of factors — possibly weak concrete and equipment failure — caused the scaffolding collapse last week that killed 51 workmen, officials said yesterday.

A source close to the investigation said the concrete poured at the cooling tower level where the scaffolding broke free had crumbled to dust.

"That's all there was left was dust," said the source.

David Rhone, regional administrator of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, who is directing the investigation, said officials are "concerned about the strength of the concrete."

"We have been unable to recover sufficient samples on the ground from the level" where the accident occurred, he said, adding that more samplings were being attempted.

Coliseum's space frame roof may not have been inspected

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — The City Council committee investigating the collapse of the Hartford Civic Center's coliseum roof has been unable to find evidence that the final inspection of the space frame was ever made.

The Hartford Courant reported yesterday city investigators have been unable to determine if Philip H. Dalrymple, the city's inspection engineer who cleared the way for payment to builders of the roof, actually made a final inspection.

The 1,400-ton steel webbed space frame caved in under tons of ice and rain-drenched snow shortly before dawn Jan. 18.

The collapse of the computer-designed roof occurred only a few hours after nearly 5,000 cheering basketball fans left the sports arena. There were no injuries.

The newspaper said Dalrymple told the city in April 1973 that the completed space frame was inspected and approved by its designer.

Dalrymple reportedly made that finding six weeks after the roof's designer had said no final inspection was necessary.

Dalrymple was assistant project manager for the William L. Crow Construction Co., the firm hired by the city to protect its interest.

The inspecting engineer has also told investigators that direct inspections of the roof were not Crow's responsibility.

Investigators have been trying to determine who might have been responsible for inspecting the roof.

Lev Zetlin Associates, the New York City-based engineering firm hired to investigation the roof collapse, reported structural design flaws were so apparent they should have been easily detected by inspectors.

Charles H. Thornton, president of Lev Zetlin, has produced photographs showing bowed beams when the roof was being raised.

Gulick-Henderson Laboratories of Whitehead, N.Y., the now-defunct firm hired by the city to inspect the space frame during its building and erection, said there no problems with it two months after it was lifted into place.

The Courant has also reported that John Burgess, a former mathematics teacher who did not hold an engineering license, conducted — Gulick Menderson's inspections.

Five months after Burgess' inspections, Bethlehem Steel asked for a final inspection so it could submit a bill for payment. Bethlehem built the space frame and erected it in the summer of 1972.

Women's pages controversy

To the Editor:

Because I am a woman, I suppose I am expected to endorse the proposal for four women's pages a week in The Collegian. However, I have very mixed emotions.

First, I feel that to add women's pages would be to set a precedent requiring pages for every socio-economic group on campus.

Second, I am not convinced that a majority of the female population on campus supports the women's pages. The socialist feminist segment of campus is indeed significant, but is it representative of the more politically moderate women? Is it fair for the entire population to fund these pages?

These women's pages would not achieve their goal, which I presume is to educate. They would serve merely to re-educate the already educated. The population the women are trying to reach would merely turn past these pages [as is unfortunately the case with Nummo News judging by the quantity of unopened copies left on DC tables].

Finally, women are demanding for more coverage of women's news. My experience with the Collegian is that they are always hungry for material. I suggest that these women mobilize their energy into producing women's coverage.

It is my hope that people take into consideration the valid opposition to the women's pages.

Cassandra Eckhof

To the Editor:

I am displeased with the way the Collegian staff handled the women's pages issue. My first semester at UMass was blessed with designated women's pages. Why they were discontinued I have no idea. I can only assume that the newly elected members of the staff had decided to incorporate the news with other parts of the paper. Which they do seldomly and in somewhat remote parts of various sections ie, it does seem as if these articles are just filling up space.

I always read the news on women's issues and interests when I can find them in the Collegian. The four pages would not be something I'd overlook. You don't even have to call them "Women's Pages", please just section them off so that I may find them and give me some assurance that each week I will find them. Sectioning them would give convenience to the reader, which a good paper layout is supposed to do.

Sonja Lashenske

To the Editor:

I do not ask the advice of a non-mechanic when I want my car fixed. I usually disregard film critics who believe that Martin and Lewis were high art. And I certainly would not trust the judgements of a fundamentalist preacher in a discussion of philosophy.

It simply doesn't make sense to heed the advice [or demands] of those unqualified to utter an opinion. Sadly, however, the Collegian is being assaulted by a hoard of vociferous picketers, who not only make it unpleasant to walk through the campus center, but have demonstrated an understanding of journalism equivalent to that of a truck driver.

I would like to address some of the issues raised by these people in their letters and columns. As a person who began working for commercial newspapers before most of these petitioners were old enough to attend the junior prom, perhaps I can add a new perspective.

(1) "Women are not a special interest group."

True enough. But feminists are. I always suspect those who say that the population has been mis-educated and that they, by coincidence, have access to the truth. I am curious [but not that curious] what role the proposed women's pages would enforce.

(2) "The Collegian has a responsibility to represent all groups on campus. This is what freedom of the press is all about."

The job of a newspaper is to inform readers objectively about events that occur in their community and in the nation. This is a difficult task. And while there have been cases in which this duty has not been met, the answer was to be found in greater objectivity, not less. This is the only way to fairly represent all factions. However, in their quest for "an alternative to conventional objective reporting" [as the original petition demanded], these women seek to present their unique perspective of the world. Not only would this fail to meet the newspaper's duty to the community, I seriously doubt that it would serve all women on campus, given the diversity of their beliefs.

(3) "The only way to achieve equality is through segregation."

Brilliant. While this is not an original thought, it certainly is a novel one. In fact, it answers the question, "What does the women's petition and Lester Maddox have in common?" Had the Supreme Court agreed with this standard in 1954, blacks would still be able to enjoy their own schools, their own rest rooms, and their own cafeteria counters. Come to think of it, women have traditionally had their own separate pages, on which you could find engagement announcements, new casserole recipes, and Dear Abby. Fortunately, many newspapers are moving away from this format, and the Collegian thankfully, never had it. Now does not seem like a particularly opportune time to make a huge leap backwards.

It is not my position that no advocacy should be published. In a newspaper, the proper place is in letters and columns on the editorial page. If a group wants separate space, it is their responsibility to start their own special interest publication. The world is full of such periodicals — from the Yipster Times to the Plain Truth. These organs make no bones about their bias, and those who choose to read them have that right. But it is not the place of a student newspaper to provide such space if it is to retain any degree of journalistic integrity. [Or in the case of the Collegian what integrity it has.]

It is my hope that the Collegian maintains its surprising show of fortitude in denying this demand, but I am not optimistic. It appears the only hope lies in the possibility that all of the petitioners are as dedicated as one woman who approached me in the coffee shop and said, "I'm boycotting the Collegian, but can I read Doonesbury in your paper?"

Bob Carn

To the Editor:

The "bureaucratic bug" seems to be at epidemic proportions on the UMass campus. Whitmore, long the "typhoid Mary" for the bug long ago infected the Student Government Association and others.

Most recently the Collegian has fallen victim to the persistent bug. The Collegian, under duress and in a feverish state, granted space for four women's pages. Later, they rejected the proposal explaining: "the decision was made in haste and under pressure." They are trying to hide behind their rhetric to delay and discourage any resolution of the issue.

The issue of the women's pages brings to light an insistent problem with the Collegian. For a paper that claims to speak for the students there is a tremendous lack of representation in many areas. One need only turn to the last page of any issue to see the disproportionate coverage given to a couple specific sports.

It is time the Collegian worked for some semblance of professionalism in their representation of the university. If they don't, it will not take a women's boycott to encourage students to leave the daily issue in the circulation bins.

Steven Westra

To the Editor:

Are the disputed women's pages in the Collegian to be for women or about women? That they will be by women I have no doubt.

News for women can be anywhere in a paper. For women — being intelligent and curious — are interested in all news. If the pages are to be about women, then that information also can be placed anywhere. Women news is people news of value to everyone.

For example, is Betty Ford's problem front page news or women's news?

As I perceive it, the major difficulty is that hard news is dominated by men. The president, the majority in the Cabinet and Congress as well as state legislators are men. However, there are now enough prominent women in government, business and education to provide news diversity. With discretion and sensitivity, the wire stories could be selected that highlight these women.

If the disputed pages are to be a forum for women's issues, again these issues don't belong exclusively on the women's pages. Isn't the women's issue of rape a male concern? Abortion involves men since they were participants. The ERA directly involves men since they dominate the legislatures voting on the measure.

Separate but equal is unacceptable to blacks and should be unacceptable to women. Women play an active role in the Amherst area press. At the Amherst Record, the editor, political reporter feature writer, and all town stringers are women. There are three women at the Daily Hampshire Gazette's Amherst office. The Valley Advocate has a woman managing editor.

The major press change that should occur is some women should stop reporting and start columnizing. The op-ed pages of all major papers carry columns written by men — William Safire, George Will, James Kirkpatrick, Anthony Lewis, M. Stanton Evans, Tom Wicker, etc.

Women are just as capable of analysis and commentary but haven't penetrated that male media stronghold. But if Eric Sevareid can retire so can James Reston. Women are newsmakers, newswriters, newsreaders, newsthinkers and deserve to be on every page of the paper.

Phyllis Ledirer

Listen up!

Don't get us wrong. We love letters. But, in order to guard against us being loved to death, certain guidelines should be followed:

1. Get the letters in well before the 4:00 deadline and you'll have a better chance of getting them printed the next day.
2. Long letters are usually not read in their entirety, are usually printed late because space is precious, and just look terrible on the page. We don't want to start cutting letters for fairness reasons, but we will have to in order to get them printed if they are too long. Try to keep letters down to one page double-spaced and typewritten.
3. Include your address and phone number so we know you are real. Don't worry, though, we won't print all that stuff; only your name.
4. Keep those cards and letters coming in.

Women's pages: The truth

This editorial by the Collegian is a supreme example of misrepresentation of the issues. Women's news has been deleted and edited beyond the control of the women's Editor. The harassment of the women's editor and community supporting the movement is an example of the broader issue of sexism. The Collegian proports there is no necessity for separation, because they feel they adequately integrate multi-racial and multi-cultural news.

This editorial will refute the "facts" presented in the Collegian's editorial. This is not a recent controversy. It has received its impetus during International Women's Week and has been gaining momentum since then. Rather than reacting to a threat from the Undergraduate Student Senate, the Board of Editors conceded to demands because they knew their decision would be overturned at a later staff meeting. This is an example of their "good faith."

Throughout this editorial, the Collegian insists we were still demanding four ad-free pages. In fact, on Saturday, the women's community voted in favor of a compromised demand that included one page per day with no more than 25 percent ads, thereby assuming financial responsibility for the page and integrating women's news more than the previous four ad-free pages would have done.

Before the occupation of the Collegian office, the negotiating teams met three times. During the first meeting, Collegian negotiators came unprepared to deal with the issues involved. During the weekend negotiation, they were, at no time, willing to meet with the proposal of complete editorial control. Their compromises were all variations of the existing policy concerning editorial control. According to their proposal, the women's editor would still be under jurisdiction of the same editorial control which now refuses to recognize women's news as valid. There are existing departments which have full editorial control; therefore, we feel this demand is not unprecedented.

Concerning financial "difficulties", advertisers who currently refuse to advertise with the Collegian, have expressed interest in doing so, provided their ads would be on the women's pages. Essentially, the Collegian's worry about financial control comes down to their worry of editorial control. With the column inches "integrated" (dispersed over several pages) in the Collegian, it would make it virtually impossible for the women's editor to have editorial control over placement and advertising.

The term "segregation" has been used against us in our struggle for representation in the Collegian. The fact remains that women's news has been continually "segregated" by its not even being considered for publication (i.e. the federal regulation on estrogen that was discarded after two days when considered "dated").

Ideally, since women's news is everyone's news it shouldn't need separate pages. It should be integrated into the Collegian like all news. But this has been tried.

The women's editor and assistant editor have tried to get into print important articles of concern to women. Here's what happened:

—Women's news was given last priority by those who put the paper together. It was read last and put into leftover space or discarded.

—Changes and cuts which significantly altered the content of stories were made arbitrarily, without consulting the women's dept. staff.

—An interview with radical feminist Andrea Dworkin was "bumped" because the Collegian said it needed space for an article on the Whitmore takeover. When that issue of the Collegian appeared, much of what would have been the Andrea Dworkin space was taken up by a story concerning a woman journalist speaking at Smith who denounced feminist advocacy journalism.

Early in March, the women's editor presented the managing editor with a list of conditions (designed to prevent the above-mentioned problems from reoccurring) under which the women's dept. would continue to work cooperatively with the news dept. rather than seeking its own pages. The conditions were not accepted and the women's editor was told to submit a proposal for women's pages. This proposal and a subsequent revision were both voted down.

Financial reform

The Student Court declared Brian DeLima guilty of misuse of the Student Senate phones last Thursday night, taking the first step in what should be a long process of self policing and the creation of an ethics code.

Students who are not involved in the politics of the fourth floor of the Student Union Building, and that means almost all of us, have no idea what is going on with the money and resources that the SATF tax affords this small group of people. Over one million dollars is at the disposal of the Student Senate, or more accurately, of whatever small group of people control the budgeting procedure and the treasurer's books.

As was said at the trial of DeLima Thursday night, his misuse of phones was not an isolated incident. By many people's estimation, the phones are used for personal calls by many fourth floor regulars. And the misuse of money and resources probably includes such violations as misuse of senate vehicles and the giving of summer jobs to cronies rather than those that are most qualified.

These are abuses that are by no means unique in a situation where so much opportunity for abuse exists. The problem in the senate, which has been slowly getting worse over the past few years, is that a group of unethical people seems to have taken control over what was once a workable process, turning it into a medium for personal advancement.

In order to solve these problems the Collegian feels that an audit of the whole Senate-RSO conglomerate should be done, and that the results of such an audit be made public. This should be followed by institution of regular Treasurer's reports, which would be sent to all area governments and whatever other student representative groups that are formed.

In the future, the senate should also review all of its monetary policies, and decide which invite abuse and which are safeguarded, and then act to tighten up the loose ends.

Women's pages

The events of the past weeks have been symptomatic of a misunderstanding about the issue of women's news in the Collegian, and we would like to clarify our position. In the interest of fairness the Collegian has made space available to the women demanding four pages of women's news so that they may present their side of the issue.

The recent controversy began two weeks ago at a Collegian Board meeting attended by a number of women demanding four ad-free pages of women's news per week. Initially the editors voted against the women's demands for four ad-free pages. However, following a threat from the student senate to freeze funds and take away equipment needed for publication, the editors decided to agree to the initial demands.

The next week the Collegian staff, which is 48 percent women, voted 98 to 28 to overturn the board's decision, and instructed them to reach a reasonable compromise.

The following Monday, the women demanding four pages took some Collegians from their distribution points in the Campus Center and the Student Union Building, first sitting on them and then ripping them up and standing on them. The women have picketed the Collegian's distribution points and circulated a petition advocating the women's demands.

Last Wednesday, negotiations were set up with five members of both groups. Last night these negotiations broke down when the women demanding four pages invalidated their five representatives thus causing negotiations to cease.

The Collegian proposal specifically offered a guaranteed minimum of 30 column inches of women's news a day, to be under the editorial control of the women's editor. One page of the Collegian is broken down into four columns 16 inches in length. The proposal also stated that any wire or news service copy would be considered outside of the minimum guarantee of 30 inches, thus leaving this space for staff-generated news about women. The proposal also stated that if substantially more space was needed to cover an issue which the women's editor deemed important, space would be made available, even if it meant taking a financial loss on that issue of the paper. Most importantly, the proposal placed the women's department and the news department on an equal basis in determining the placement of all news stories in the paper. Disputes over placement would first be mediated by the managing editor, and then, if necessary, by the editor-in-chief. Both the women's department and the news department would have control over the content of the stories, headlines, pictures and graphics in their respective departments.

The Collegian feels any settlement must be flexible enough to allow for the financial limitations of running a paper at a break-even level.

The demands for women's pages is further complicated by the fact that ads can only appear on certain pages. The relocation of these ads to accommodate the clear pages demanded would result in severe special restraints on the news and sports pages.

Philosophically, the Collegian is opposed to further segregation of the news, and feels that guaranteeing a certain number of column inches a day is a step toward the goal of having completely integrated, multi-cultural presentation of the news. We have entered into these negotiations in good faith that we are sincere in our intention to upgrade the comprehensiveness of women's coverage.

The Collegian regrets the breakdown of negotiations, and hopes that the talks can continue some time in the near future.

Wildlife needs support

To the Editor:

Non-game Endangered and Threatened species have a chance of survival in Massachusetts.

A new bill, H 4287, would give control of non-game wildlife to a new wildlife and wild plant board. The board would provide for the welfare of non-game wildlife and threatened or endangered species of wildlife and wild plants. The bill would also allow for the purchase of conservation land where hunting and trapping would be prohibited.

The problem is that H 4287 has competition. Another bill, S 1496, threatens to take control of non-game animals away from an unbiased wildlife and wild plant board; S 1496 would give complete control over non-game animals to the heavily biased Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Wildlife. The Division caters to the needs of hunters and trappers, not to animals themselves.

S 1496 does not provide for lands which would conserve wildlife, such as sanctuaries. But the bill could easily make money available for purchasing land where hunters and trappers could hunt predators of non-game animals — all in the name of conserving non-game species.

H 4287 NEEDS SUPPORT! Please write Sen. John Olver and Sen. George Rogers, State House, Boston, MA 02133. Ask them to vote NO on S 1496, to substitute H 4287 in its place, and to share your letter with Sen. James Kelly.

'Holocaust' highlights apathy

To the Editor:

Among many things, the recent TV mini-series "Holocaust", highlighted the importance of not being apathetic. As idealistic college students, we would all like to believe "this will never happen to us."

However, student apathy forced the SGA to go to the electoral college to select their co-presidents. After finally achieving quorum, they selected two candidates, one who received fewer votes than the "no-preference" category, and one who never campaigned for the job.

And as if this is not enough, the SATF was recently raised by eight dollars. We find a strong contradiction where on the one hand, the SGA fights when Whitmore imposes fee increases upon students, but at the same time they, the alleged government of the students, turn around and raise student fees.

It is not bad enough that we have student leaders not elected by the majority of students, or that they raise fees so that they can have more money to play games with, but what really seems ironic is that nobody cares!

Taken for a ride?

To the Editor:

In reply to Kwaku Gyata's letter on April 19th, I must ask him why it is necessary to complain about irresponsible journalism just to set the stage for his complaints. The irresponsible journalism approach seems to be used over and again against the Collegian, by any over sensitive individual who feels slighted by what he reads. Come on Kwaku the article written by Traugott was not what I consider frightening, in fact I considered it enlightening.

You better believe that the unenlightened students with their "non-conceptions" of black American music have every right to closely examine how their money is being spent. Traugott's complaint was more that, $40,000 was being wasted on unknown talent, than the actual spending of $40,000. The students would rather see music they want and spend $40,000 than to see a concert they don't want and spend $30,000 or what ever the savings will be by ticket sales. I must also add that the high ticket price certainly won't encourage non-students [students friends etc.] to attend and probably won't make much money either.

The main problem that Mr. Gyata tries to gloss over by trying to sell us Europe's and Japan's musical tastes, is how much are these guys being paid?? If Traugott's figures are correct I'd say we are being taken on an "educational" ride. Gyata alludes that Traugott's figures are incorrect but does nothing to tell us what the musicians are really being paid.

I must conclude that Mr. Gyata certainly isn't helping the UMass populace [myself included] by reducing one of the real concerns of a UMass student [the Spring Concert] to an ambiguous socio-political problem. He does little to clarify matters and goes as far as laying the blame on the American media and recording agencies, for our justifiable concern about getting sold the "Brooklyn Bridge" instead of a Spring Concert.

Good cause; questionable method

To the Editor:

As I was walking along the Campus Center Concourse the other day, I became utterly enraged with what I saw. Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity was sponsoring a fund raiser to fight Muscular Dystrophy. Yet, the manner in which it was conducted disgusted me.

About eight women's pictures were displayed with a charity jar in front of each one. People are supposed to contribute to this charity by choosing which woman shall be crowned "Queen of Schlizarama." The woman with the most money after the contest wins this title — how childish.

I am not expressing disapproval of the charity, I am expressing disapproval of the method. When I said this to the fraternity sponsors, they replied that last year they raised $2000 for a "good" cause.

My reply is this. I agree that Muscular Dystrophy is a good cause, but the way that the money is being collected is contributing to the continuing oppression of women in society. This issue is also a good cause, but this fund raiser is reinforcing the established stereotypes placed upon women which we are trying to break. The fraternity used the guise of a "good" cause to justify their oppressive actions.

If Muscular Dystrophy is such a good charity, then it merits thoughtful fund raising techniques or ideas which appeal to the entire public and offend no one. This way more people would be attracted to the cause, consequently, more people would contribute. Perhaps then the proceeds could exceed the $2000 mark and be even more helpful to fight this disease.

Student demonstrator to speak

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to introduce to the UMass community some information concerning a political asylum case that is presently pending before the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Hector Marroquin is a 24-year-old student leader, trade union activist, and a leader of the Young Socialist Alliance. Born in Mexico, Marroquin fled that country as a political refugee in 1974 and has lived in the United States ever since.

The Mexican authorities have charged Marroquin with murder, assault, and subversion — charges which he contends are totally false. Marroquin explains that the Mexican government's campaign against him stems from his participation in peaceful student demonstrations for democratic rights and better conditions at the University of Nuevo Leon in Monterrey during the early 1970's.

Because he fears for his safety and life if he is deported to Mexico, Marroquin has requested political asylum in the United States. If the asylum request is denied, the U.S. government will launch deportation proceedings against him.

Marroquin is currently conducting a national speaking tour to bring his case to the American people and build support for his right to political asylum in the United States. As part of that tour he will be speaking here at the University of Mass on Monday, May 1st, at 8:00 p.m. in the Campus Center room 917. Come hear Marroquin tell his story.

Understanding imperatives

To the Editor:

I'm moved to write this letter as a reply to the "Rape Without Tears" editorial that appeared in Tuesday's issue, and also as a reply to countless other articles which bandied about terms of racism and sexism. It appears that bitterness, whether justified or not, fused with some mistaken notions as to who and what runs this country to produce a thoroughly distorted presentation of the issues of sexism and rape.

Racism, sexism, and many other "isms" are thrown about loosely on this campus. In some cases accusers are attempting to gloss over their own self-interest, but more importantly the overuse of the terms belies a misunderstanding as to the source, context, and remedy of the injustices. The source is the society whose political, social and economic imperatives engender and thrive on exploitation. The context is the existence of many groups, i.e. women, blacks, workers, who suffering gross injustices, fight for their survival and their dignity offered by structurally limited resources. The remedy is a collective effort of these groups against the inhuman imperatives of our society. This collective effort also requires a successful effort for each to understand the self-interpretation of the other, namely how that person sees himself and his actions within society. Let me demonstrate.

White working class males support institutions and arrangements which keep women doing the apparently limited work in the home. For this, many label them sexist. But please take into account the following: These workers are defining themselves within a society which uses material wealth and status as measures of one's success, and success as yielding of dignity. The same society systematically denies for them the attainment of this success. Thus, workers came to view, what to them is a voluntary, self-sacrifice at work, for his family and this sacrifice as his claim to dignity. Attack on the family structure threatens his only refuge, and invites attack. This poses a dilemma. What is the solution?

I offer you what I see as the beginnings of the solution. We must proceed from the understanding that the systematic imperatives of our political, social, and economic arrangements place oppressed groups, women, workers, blacks, among them, at odds with each other for education, work, and human dignity. An understanding of this, and hope for a successful battle against it, necessitate a collective effort. This will come into being only when we truly understand and attempt to deal with self-interpretations we are, in part, forced into forming in society, and when our goal is not the uplifting of ourselves within present value schemes, but the realligning of these value schemes with the purpose of allowing each to develop to his or her full potential in work and relationships. In other words constant attack by feminists on all males, along with liberal reforms as an end, not a means to institutionalize human dignity, merely fragments those who should be united and obscures the real issues; the systematic limitation of alternatives in education, work, and life.

In closing I believe most males, like myself, aren't sitting back in comfortable armchairs determining policy, and rejoicing with each successful violent sexual conquest of women. Dworan has every right to be bitter about rape. I hope I've outlined some more constructive outlets for this bitterness.

You know what to wear

You have an unerring instinct about what's appropriate for what occasion. And you're confident that your clothes will look and feel fresh, even during your period. Because you rely on Tampax tampons.

They're uniquely designed to expand in all three directions—length, breadth and width—which lessens the chance of leakage or bypass. And since they're worn internally, you're not concerned about bulges. Bulk. Or chafing.

No wonder Tampax tampons are the overwhelming choice of women who know what to wear. Like you.

The internal protection more women trust

DOONESBURY by Garry Trudeau

WELL, OF COURSE THE OLD MAN APPROVED THE DEAL, HOOK! WHY WOULDN'T HE?
I DUNNO. I THOUGHT WILLIAMS WAS TIRED OF SHELLING OUT THE BIG BUCKS FOR VETERANS, DUKE.
NONSENSE! HE KNOWS LENNY'S A SPECIAL CASE. IN FACT, HE'S ALREADY AUTHORIZED THE CHECK!
HE HAS?
THAT'S RIGHT. NOW, LISTEN, I WANT THAT BOY ON THE NEXT FLIGHT EAST!
IF YOU SAY SO. WHAT ABOUT THE HANDLING CHARGES?
TAKE IT OUT OF MY COMMISSION.
DUKE, ARE YOU SURE WILLIAMS KNOWS ABOUT YOU?

THE WANDERER by Mark Rollins

"MY POWER WAS NOT AT ITS FULLEST, SO I HID MYSELF IN A STONE VAULT"
"THERE TO INCUBATE MY POWER FOR 100 YEARS"
I DWELLED IN DARKNESS FOR 100 YEARS, CURSING THE CELT. I KNEW I MUST GET MY REVENGE UPON HIM, AS WELL AS SEEING THROUGH MY PLAN TO END WARS.
AT THE INSTANT OF MY AWAKENING I KNEW OF THE BELL THE CELT HAD CONSTRUCTED; I HAD IT BROUGHT HERE.
"THEN ONE NIGHT IT CAME TO ME IN A DREAM: THE WAY TO BRING PEACE AND GET MY REVENGE."
IF I WAS THE RULER OF THE WORLD ALL THAT I WISHED WOULD BE DONE. BUT THERE IS ONE OBSTACLE IN MY WAY.

Your Birthday

MONDAY, MAY 1

Born today, you are a jovial, good-natured person whom others find irresistible. Your sense of humor saves many situations from becoming too serious and dull, although you know when to show your solemn side. You do not laugh at others' hardships, but take them very seriously, and do your best to help out.

You are not an extravagant person, but you are not miserly. You have no qualms about spending what is necessary to make life enjoyable. You do refuse to fritter away hard-earned money on nonsense. You will gladly pay for fun, but not for fun that does not last.

You have deep, strong emotions, and it is not unusual for your feelings to go from great love to equally violent hate if circumstances warrant it.

Friday's Puzzle Solved:

Cornell takes Frisbee title

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

Cornell University held off a Glassboro College scoring attempt with 15 seconds to play in yesterday's Eastern Ultimate Frisbee Championship and won the tournament by defeating Glassboro 16-15.

While both of the teams in the final game usually field offensive minded players who throw accurately and quickly, the strong winds sent many throws away and kept the scoring low. The wind and the cold also kept many spectators from showing up for the afternoon game at Amherst College.

The semifinal games between Bucknell and Cornell and between Glassboro and the Knights of Nee were held at UMass on Saturday night and attracted about 300 people. Only 200 went to the final game and many of them were players from other teams in the tournament, in which 17 teams competed all weekend in Amherst for the right to meet the Western Ultimate Champion, the Santa Barbara Condors, for the National Ultimate Frisbee Championship.

Ultimate Frisbee is a team Frisbee game that utilizes passing and continuous movement. Each team places seven men on the field lined up on goal lines set 60 yards apart. The field is 40 yards wide and has 30 yard end zones.

After one team throws off to the other, the receiving team moves the Frisbee up the field by passing, hoping to end a series of completed passes with a player catching the Frisbee in the opponents' end zone. When a player is in possession of the Frisbee, he cannot move and must wait for one of his teammates to break free from the defense and gain position up the field so that the thrower may throw the disc. Possession of the disc turns over whenever a pass is not completed. There are two 24 minute halves and no referee or umpire; players call fouls on an honesty system.

Glassboro had gone into the final as a popular favorite after having displayed awesome precision passing in its semifinal game with the Knights of Nee, a club team from New Jersey. The Knights squad is composed of many former Rutgers University players and some players who had previously competed for Glassboro. The New Jersey team was one of the pre-tournament favorites and they lived up to their billing until they went against Glassboro.

In the semi-finals, while Glassboro was defeating the Knights of Nee, Bucknell and Cornell were playing a very close game on an adjacent field. The Bucknell team is a powerful squad and was a pre-tourney favorite last year before injuries to a few key players halted their title march. Healthy and more experienced, they went farther this year but met a Cornell squad that is the best in the school's history. With many returning players from previous tournament teams and the addition of Peter Bloeme of New York City, a former Men's Overall World Champion for individual events, Cornell had gone through its season undefeated.

Sox fall to Rangers in fourth straight loss

ARLINGTON (UPI) — Pinchhitter John Lowenstein's one-out single in the bottom of the ninth inning capped a two-run rally and gave the Texas Rangers their sixth straight victory, 2-1, over the Boston Red Sox yesterday.

Bert Campaneris led off the ninth with a single off starter Bill Lee and was sacrificed to second by Al Oliver. Bill Campbell, 1-3, replaced Lee and was greeted by a run-scoring double by Richie Zisk. Bobby Thompson ran for Zisk and, after Toby Harrah was intentionally walked, Thompson scored on Lowenstein's hit to right.

Ferguson Jenkins, 2-1, went all the way for Texas, yielding just four hits as Boston dropped its fourth consecutive game, three to Texas in the weekend series.

Boston scored its only run after a fourth-inning throwing error by Jenkins. Jenkins threw wide of first while trying to pick off Rick Burleson, who had walked with one out. The ball rolled to right field and Burleson went to third. Jim Rice then lofted a sacrifice fly to right to score Burleson.

White squad wins scrimmage

In what new UMass head football coach Bob Pickett termed a "typical spring scrimmage," the White squad defeated the Red squad 10-0 in the annual Red-White intrasquad scrimmage game on Saturday.

Sophomore Jim "Moon" Mullins booted a first half field goal, and freshman quarterback Dave Michaud scored a third quarter touchdown on a keeper play to provide the only scoring of the day.

"It was tough on the offense," said Pickett, "We've only had a few practices and the timing isn't down yet." Pickett added that there were quite a few early season injuries, mostly just bumps and bruises, but that he was "quite happy with how everyone came along."

Brown hurls one-hitter as JV batsmen win

By WALT CHERNIAK
Collegian Staff

Righthander Mark Brown pitched a one-hitter and struck out 14 batters, as the J.V. baseball team shut out Springfield 9-0 to gain a split of their doubleheader Saturday.

Springfield scored all three of their runs in the third inning of the first game and handed UMass hurler Chuck Thompson his first loss of the season, 3-0.

Despite yielding only a seventh-inning single in the nightcap, Brown, according to coach Jim Bedard, "was constantly in trouble," as he walked nine batters.

UMass took a quick lead in the second inning, as Jim Aulenback led off with a single. An error and a walk loaded the bases, and then Frank Letizia laid down a suicide squeeze bunt on a 3-1 count for the first run. Jason Thomas singled home two more runs, and then shortstop Glenn Dooling, much improved at the plate recently, singled home Thomas to give the Minutemen a 4-0 bulge.

UMass tallied three more times in the fourth, as the Springfield hurler had control problems, walking three and allowing two runs on a passed ball and a wild pitch, before Tom Grimes doubled home the run that made it UMass 7 Springfield 0.

Aulenback tripled in the seventh, and then scored when Phil Small laid down a perfect bunt single and the pitcher threw wildly to first. The final UMass run came when Pat Raimo scored on the front end of a double steal with Frank Letizia.

Raimo scored three runs in the game, while Aulenback went 2-for-3 and Jason Thomas drove home two runs to key the Minutemen attack in the nightcap.

Chuck Thompson surrendered only eight hits, three of them of the infield variety, and struck out eight batters as he went the entire seven innings of the opener, but dropped his guard enough in the third for Springfield to score their only three runs.

UMass could only collect four hits in game one, two of them by Tom Grimes, who was 2-for-2 on the game, and also drew five walks, but Springfield's pitching "kept us off balance," said Bedard, and held the UMies scoreless. Glenn Dooling and Chris Koperniak collected the other two base hits for the J.V.s.

The Minutemen's record now stands at 10-5-1, as they battled AIC to a 7-7 tie in an "unofficial" game on Thursday. Aulenback again led the attack with a double, triple and three RBIs. Today, the JVs face off against North Adams in a 1:30 p.m. doubleheader. Lefties Mark Waslick and Scott Hildreth are scheduled to do the pitching chores.

Sophomore Cindi Martin defeated UVM's good distance runner Judy St. Hilaire in the 880 by running a 2:18.4. Co-captain Bonnie Bukowski, finally getting in a good week of training, ran third.

Freshperson Linda Welzel ran a personal best time of 11:26.9 to cop second in the two mile. Senior Sue Swartz, who is making a comeback after a break from running, took third in 12:09.8.

Debbie Farmer, who has been running consistently for the first time, turned in another good time of 5:15.5 to grab second in the mile. Priscilla Wilson was third.

In the weight events, Kelly Butler took a third in the shot put and discus. Mary Ann Stravinskas took second in the discus, and Dianne Crawford and Eileen Everett combined with Snow to sweep the javelin.

Cathy Harrington tied for second in the high jump with Sue Ares, then came back to snare a third in the high hurdles.

Freshperson Linda Stillman ran second in the 100 yard to Cominoli.

Both relay teams were winners, with the 4x110 squad running unopposed.

A winning goal in the final minutes seemed within UMass' grasp, but the impressive goal tending of UNH goalie Suzanne Rousseau, last year voted New England's best collegiate goalie, kept UNH in the game.

UNH Coach Jean Rilling said, "UMass hustled well. They deserved to tie, if not win."

Both teams look to further competition in next weeks New England tournament.

UMass later returned to the field to defeat URI, 5-2, although UMass players did not compete with the finesse seen in early morning action.

Alicyn Toney, seeing her first action of the day, pulled through in with two goals. Julie Hall also scored, and with two additional URI goals, the score stood at 3-2.

Sloppy plays and passing marred action, but a tired UMass team pulled things together in second half. Defense with some fine pick-ups by Joan Bulman, held back any further scoring attempts by URI.

Hartley and Hackett increased UMass score with one goal apiece.

SUNY revenges netmen

By ADAM ALTMAN
Collegian Staff

When told that last year's UMass men's tennis team slaughtered the State University of New York (SUNY) 9-0, Coach Steve Williams remarked, "they should get their revenge today."

Such was the case as a much improved Albany team slipped by an undermanned Minuteman squad 7-2 Saturday, in a match which was closer than the final score indicates.

Despite the loss, Williams called it "the best team effort all year".

With the top three UMass players unable to make the trip to Albany due to their involvement in the N.E. Tennis Championships being held at Amherst College, Williams played three of his less experienced netmen, two sophomores, Adam Altman and Dan Gallegher, and a talented freshman, Jon Kline.

Mark (Disco) Huetteman abandoned his normal fourth singles spot in the lineup to play in the first slot against SUNY's Paul Feldman.

Huetteman boogied and hustled throughout the match but in the end it was Feldman who played the music to the tune of a 6-2, 6-2 victory.

Huetteman played the match in just his warm-up pants as he forgot to take both his shorts and his jockstrap along on the trip. It is not known whether this factor or the fact that he played several careless points led many of the female spectators to comment that he played, "a loose match".

"I really had no support while stretching for those wide volleys at net", commented a grinning Huetteman after the match.

Adam Altman's hard hitting game accounted for UMass' only singles win as he crushed Ted Kutzin 6-1, 6-3.

After breezing through the first set he found himself deadlocked at 3-3 in the second, but a series of lucky shots enabled him to break Kutzin's serve in the eighth game of the set and he served out the match.

"I'd rather be lucky than good," Altman told this reporter when I pressed him for an after the match comment.

Coach Williams refered to Altman as "a highly competitive individual with good winning instincts."

Altman later joined forces with Jon Kline and recovered from a sloppy first set to overcome Kutzin and David Supple 5-7, 6-2, 6-1.

Perhaps the best match of the day was between UMass second singles player Dave (Spider) Nowak and SUNY's Larry (the human backboard) Linett.

Nowak played brilliantly in the first set to take a 5-4 lead with two set points, but Linett tightened his two-handed grip and pulled the set out 7-5. At one game all in the second set Nowak lost 3 consecutive games four points to three. (No-add scoring was used throughout the matches). The backboard then slogged out the set 6-1, ending it on a brilliant forehand passing shot down the line.

Coach Williams said that "Nowak played his best match all year".

Nowak commented "I ran well but I just couldn't win the important points.

Gorillas skin Wildcats

By LENNY CAFFREY
and RUSS SMITH
Collegian Staff

Garber's Gorillas travelled to the sticks of Durham, New Hampshire, and the home of the UNH Wildcats, and snuck away with an 8-7 victory.

Though they were behind only once in the game (UNH led 1-0), UMass never could put away the scrappy Wildcats, and helped UNH stay in the game, by allowing a third period lead of 6-3 slip away, and eventually get tied 6-6. In fact, with the score knotted at seven, the triumvirate of Eddie Murray, Harry Conforti and Pit Martin got together on a play, to nudge UMass ahead 8-7 midway throughout the final quarter of play.

The play: Murray was about fifteen feet in front of the UNH goal. After faking a UNH defenseman, he cut by him, and passed off to his left to Conforti. Conforti walked in a couple steps, and apparently had an open shot on goal. He instead passed off to Martin who was parked by himself to the left of Linus Sheehan, the Wildcats' netminder. Martin shot it cooly into the strings, for what would turn out to be the game winner.

UNH did not die. They fought, scratched, hustled and hit to keep the pressure on the UMass defense in an attempt to equalize the contest. Though they came close a couple times in the closing minutes — and had a man-up situation with :34 remaining in regulation time — as delusions of overtime went through the minds of the Wildcats' fans. But it never came.

"I feel it's always good to win," said goalie Don Goldstein. "The team is capable of a more complete, artistic victory, but I think we recovered from a somewhat sub-par performance in Wednesday's (Hofstra) game to play better."

While maybe in the minds of the UMass squad they believe they are a better team than UNH (which they are) this thinking does not necessarily hand you the game on a silver platter. UNH believed it could possibly play on the same level as UMass and Saturday they almost stole the show.

UNH opened the scoring nine seconds after the opening faceoff, exploiting somewhat a flaw in the UMass handbook-unsettled situations. While the crowd of exactly 400 barely had time to find a good grass spot on which to sit, Mike Van Vleck raced from center field, straight to the UMass zone, and quickly flipped the first shot of the day into the netting.

UMass came back to score three straight goals (Murray unassisted, Skip Vosburgh from Brooks Sweet, and Mike Lettera from Sweet).

UNH evened it in the second period, and the game stayed close the rest of the way — almost.

At the half, UMass led 5-3 but UNH came back to knot it in the third at 6-6. UMass naturally went ahead — only to have it tied at seven (UMass led 7-6 after three — on a Martin goal).

Gorilla Goals: Ed Murray 2, Pit Martin 2, Lee Vosburgh, Mike Lettera, Brooks Sweet, Brian Kaley. Assists: Brooks Sweet 3, Norm Smith, Fran Yung, Henry Conforti.

Thompson wins 50th as mitwomen take two

By BETH COLLINS
Collegian Staff

Amidst all the beer drinking, partying, and medley of other sports on campus this weekend, the UMass womens' softball team came up with two wins in three home games. The Minutewomen defeated UConn 6-2 and split with URI Saturday for a 9-6 loss and retaliated with a 9-1 victory in the nightcap.

Friday afternoon set a perfect stage for Coach Diane Thompsons' 50th win in four seasons of collegiate coaching.

The UMass nine looked the sharpest they have all season as they came up with key defensive plays in crucial situations.

In their first at bat, UConn managed to load the bases with just one out. A grounder shot right back to pitcher, Sue Peters, gave UMass their 4th double play of the season. Peters threw to catcher Cheryl Meliones for the force, who then fired to first and Jen Parker completed the play.

Meliones started things rolling for UMass with a sharp double to left. Jen Parker followed with an RBI single to put UMass on the scoreboard.

Carol Bruce led off the third with a walk, stole second on a beautiful delayed steal, and advanced to third on a wild pitch. Another Parker ground ball found UMass up 2-0 after three.

UConn retaliated with two runs in the fourth inning on back to back singles and two UMass errors.

The Minutewomen didn't let the errors get the best of them, as has been customary. Instead they rattled the UConn pitcher enough to load up the bases on walks. A Meliones grounder to short scored two, Parker added another RBI to her total and a deep fly ball by Rhonda McManus scored Parker.

Center fielder Carol Bruce was the defensive star of the game as she threw a UConn runner out at home to end a bases loaded inning.

URI arrived on Saturday armed with freshman pitcher Carol Morris. This was all Rhode Island needed as the sharpshooter held UMass to three hits while striking out five.

UMass had their pitching troubles in this contest. Starter Gail Carter was knocked out after 1 one third innings, giving up 5 runs on 4 hits. Kathy O'Connell stepped up to the mound and faced three batters, giving up another run.

Sue Peters, who threw a complete game on Friday, was hailed from left field to go the last 5 one third innings.

The third inning gave UMass an ideal chance to score some runs as they had the bases loaded with no outs. The Minutewomen couldn't capitalize however and were not given another opportunity.

Tricia O'Connor was the story of game two. The senior ace came right back and pitched a two hitter. O'Connor, who now has a 4-1 record, also struck out four Rhode Island batters.

Sue Peters had three hits and two stolen bases, Kathy Horrigan came up with three more hits including one home run and five RBI's. Pat Oski added two hits and a double.

UMass is now 12-5 on the season and is awaiting their acceptance to the Regional Tournament. The news should be released sometime today.

IN THE HOT BOX..... Sue Peters leads the team with a .483 avg. and 18 RBI's.... Kathy Horrigan follows with a .392 clip and 15 runs scored.... Kathy O'Connell will be out of the pitching lineup with a pulled muscle in her right arm.... Congrats to D.T. on her 50th.

Batmen and URI split

By MEL WEBSTER
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. — The UMass Minutemen came back from a heartbreaking 3-2 loss in the first game with a 5-4 win in the second Saturday to salvage a split of a doubleheader with the University of Rhode Island at windblown Bill Beck Field.

Once again it was a case of the Minutemen defeating themselves instead of being beaten. They committed four errors in the first game including three in one inning which led to two URI runs. Pitcher Doug Welenc was the victim of the first game miscues as he absorbed his third defeat against five victories.

URI ace David Jansen managed to keep the MInutemen off the scoreboard the first five innings as they left eight runners stranded. The Rams added an insurance run in the fifth inning on three straight singles and this turned out to be the winning run.

The Minutemen came back in the top of the sixth with two runs and would have tied the game except for the strong wind blowing in. Dale Stone started the rally with a single and after Leo Kainowski popped out Mark Sullivan reached on an infield single. George Kelly then lined a double to right which landed halfway up the wall and scored two runs. Jansen then induced pinchhitter Mark Littano to line to right and struck out Doug Aylward.

In the UMass seventh, Mike McEvilly smashed a drive to left that appeared to be heading out, but the wind kept it in play and preserved the Ram's victory.

Welenc allowed six hits while striking out five and walking one. The Minutemen turned over a strange double play in the third inning when Welenc mishandled a pop bunt and then picked up the ball, fired to Stone at first, who then flipped to Ed Skribiski at second.

The Minutemen came out storming in the second game and pushed across five runs in the top of the second. Charlie "Movement" Cicone had an RBI double and Aylward had a two-run single to highlight the inning. URI starter Richard Mundy was removed after Aylward's single and was replaced by lefty Lou Tirella who was a victim of a two-run error by shortstop Steve Galuska.

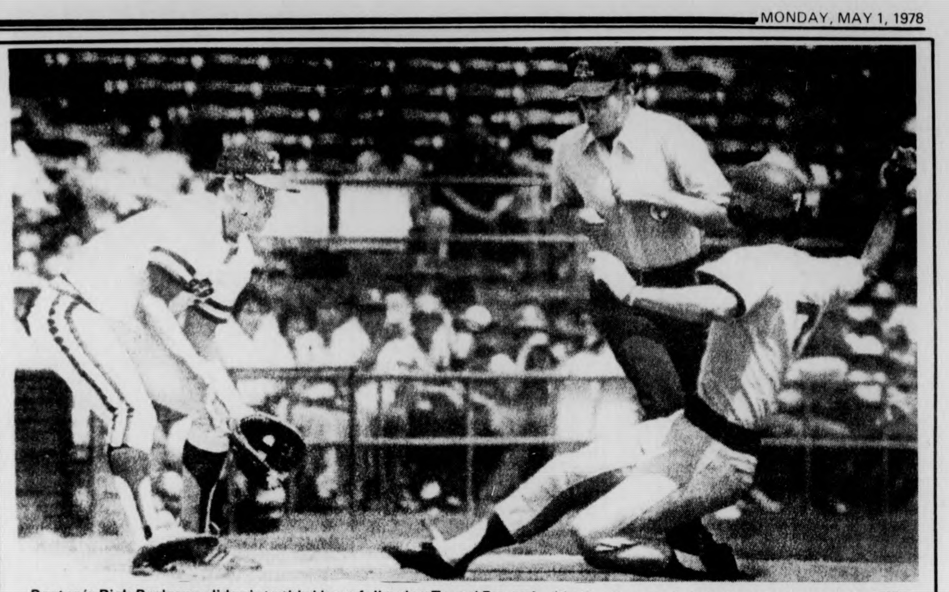
The Rams retaliated with two of their own in the bottom of the second as starter Tom Nigro was touched for back to back triples. The second run came across on a fielder's choice.

Nigro settled down in the third, but in the fourth URI sent eight men to the plate scoring two more runs. There were three hits in the inning, but an error by Stone and a call by the umpire that Ciccone was off the plate on an attempted force at home resulted in the runs.

Tirella held the Minutemen to two hits the rest of the way and used only three pitches in the fifth. Nigro also pitched well allowing only one hit in the final three innings.

Nigro whiffed two and walked one raising his record to 4-4. He allowed just six hits.

FOUL TIPS — The three records for the Minutemen are 14-17 overall, 12-9 up North and 3-3 in the Yankee Conference....The Minutemen stole three bases and have now been successful in their last nine attempts.... The Minutemen had only five hits in each game.... Aylward and Kalinowski each had hitting streaks snapped in the first game.... The Minutemen committed six errors.



Boston's Rick Burleson slides into third base following Texas' Fergy Jenkins' attempted pickoff of Burleson at first. The throw went into right field and the Rooster was credited with stealing second. See story on page 18. (UPI photo)

Gazelles romp, remain undefeated

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's lacrosse team remained undefeated in action against the Universities of New Hampshire and Rhode Island Saturday at NOPE, as it in an early morning game tied an undefeated UNH team 4-4, and in the afternoon defeated URI 5-2.

The UMass-UNH match up ended quietly as a whistle's blow ending the game cut down a strong UMass offensive drive.

Coach Frank Garahan, who seemed to echo the thought of all players and the over 300 spectators present, said "Well...I never expected a tie."

Both teams, although remaining undefeated, were hungry for the win. There is no present provision for a tie-breaker in women's locrosse.

The tie was especially frustrating for the UMass women, who have lost to UNH in their past two encounters.

First half action was tight, although UMass opened looking a bit nervous with several incomplete passes. UNH took the lead just two minutes into the game with a goal by Kathy Sanborn.

UMass scored several minutes later with a seemingly impossible over-the-shoulder score by Debbie Hartley with her back to the net.

UNH scored again with a goal by Debbie Horoules, but UMass, following goal for goal, scored immediately with a Carrie Nickerson drive into firing range and a score. The game stood at 2-2, all tied up, with excellent passing and ball control seen on both sides.

First half ended with another UNH goal by Sanborn to give the Wildcats a 3-2 lead.

UMass scoring was held to a minumum by UNH offensive players adding to the defense zone and clogging play in front of the net, according to Coach Garahan.

Second half action opened with yet another UNH goal by Carol Barry, and a grim outlook for the Minutewomen, who found themselves in a do or die situation.

UMass rallied strong, however, and second half saw the offense pull forward for the tie, with two goals, one by Jean Hackett, and one by Hartley, with anothr backwards shot which caught the UNH goalie off guard. With seven minutes remaining, action was intense and score tied, 4-4.

'Baseball Budgets'

Like the speed of a Dennis Eckersly fastball, reports of the imminent demise of baseball's farm system are greatly exaggerated.

Although there are scattered indications that major league clubs are cutting expenditures on player development (i.e. the minor leagues) there are more surprising examples of teams strengthening or at least maintaining their systems. Thus, it does not appear very likely that the advent of expensive free agents and generally higher salaries will shove the farm system (the idea that Branch Rickey started in the 1920's) to the brink of extinction as many people fear.

The minors flourished in the years immediately after World War II, because many young ex-G.I.'s had no college education and looked towards professional baseball as an easy way to make a buck. The minors reached their peak in 1949 when 448 teams played in 59 leagues on six levels — AAA, AA, A, B, C, and D. But shortly after that, however, the minor leagues began to feel the effects of television, which enabled people in minor league cities to see major league baseball as another form of entertainment — and to top it all off, watching television was free.

In 1963, the minors were reorganized and the bottom three classifications B, C, and D were eliminated. At that point in time, 130 teams played in 18 leagues. Presently, most major league ballclubs have added a second "A" team and-or a rookie team for a total of four or five minor league affiliates, which amounted to 159 teams playing in 19 leagues in 1978.

When professional football and basketball players recall their days in the farm systems of the N.F.L. and the N.B.A., they think of the sheltered years at their respective colleges, the parties, the cut classes, and their stature as big men on campus.

When professional baseball players recall their days in the farm systems of the major leagues, they sometimes think of the good times (you would too if you were making 400,000 greenbacks a year) but more often than not they remember the horror stories of their baseball upbringings. There were a lot of beat-up hotels, eight-hour bus rides to play in front of 150 screaming fans, numerous meals at various greasy spoons across the country, and wearing kinky underwear that was used by several previous players before it found its home at the posterior of some unfortunate rookie.

But Tal Smith, president and general manager of the Houston Astros of the National League would like to introduce to baseball an alternative method of player development to the present major league structure. He calls it the complex development plan. The plan would eliminate every level of minor league baseball except the AAA clubs, and the rest of the organizations players below that level joining at one complex, the Astros' spring training site in Cocoa, Blorida, for example, to work on the fundamentals of winning baseball and the finer aspects of hitting and pitching in a classroom-type atmosphere.

A study that Smith made of the 1976 season revealed that 49.7 per cent of all minor league hitters went to bat less than 200 times. Of the pitchers that year, 79.9 per cent worked less than 125 innings. In other words, there seems to be a lot of players sitting around in the minor leagues not getting enough work to make them more accomplished players.

"I'd rather get a kid to bat 750 or 1,000 times under simulated conditions than have him sit around for a large portion of the season," Smith remarked. "It doesn't have to be a nine-inning game in front of fans. In this way, you can get answers to talent as rapidly as possible. You eliminate time wasted on travel and bad weather and you play in better conditions than many of the minor league places."

Other baseball executives have other ideas. George Steinbrenner of the Yankees, for example, would like to eliminate the AA level of the minors and contribute some of the savings of each club to college baseball programs, thus increasing the number of baseball prospects emerging from the nation's several hundred college baseball programs.

My personal opinion is that both Smith's and Steinbrenner's proposals are being treated as radical changes by the largely conservative caucus of professional baseball owners. Thus, even though the ideas might have merit to them, (both are less costly than the present system and you wouldn't be cutting back on the number of players) the owners probably won't try the new proposals because they don't want to rock the boat, or renovate the nest of the goose that laid the golden eggs.

In addition, more teams will have to realize that they have to keep supporting their farm systems as their first priority, and once in awhile fill a gap with a free agent, because baseball's minor leagues are the framework for modern-day baseball, not a few free agents that cost a lot and sometimes sputter out.

Horgan sets mark in victory for trackwomen

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

Julie Horgan's school record in the long jump highlighted the UMass women's track team's easy win over the University of Vermont on Friday, 77-49.

Horgan jumped 16' 8 3-4" to take second in the event and eclipse her own record of 16' 6". She was beaten by UVM's Janet Lynch, who also won the high jump and was second in the hurdles.

"I was a little disappointed," said UMass coach Charlotte Lettis. "The times weren't that good, but that was understandable considering the cold and high winds."

Vermont was hindered by bringing only twelve athletes to the meet.

UMass won nine of fifteen events, with Nancy Cominoli a double winner (100 meter hurdles and 100 yard dash).

Karen Snow came within a foot of breaking her own javelin standard with a 124'5½" heave, still good for first. She had been throwing over 140' all week, and said she was confident of breaking her record in either the upcomigg Eastern's or the New England meet.

Diana Sealy ran with the wind and turned in a good 25.9 clocking in the 220, along with her usual anchor legs on the 4x110 and 4x440 relays.

UMass dominated the middle distances, grabbing three first places. Ginger Bulman ran her best time of the spring (71.8) to win the 440 intermediate hurdles.

Karolyn Shea, still chasing the sub-60 seconds quarter mile mark, ran a 60.9 to win that race, with Laurie Wolff second in 62.3 after being sick all week.

"Against thewind, that quarter would've been under 60 seconds easily," said Lettis.

Umass Student Found Seriously Injured

Nummo News

Jill Dickinson, a graduate student in the art department was found badly injured Wednesday evening, April 19, in front of the Greenhouses adjacent to Clark Hall between 7:15 and 7:20 p.m. by two students living in Butterfield dormitory.

Ellen Frank, one of the students reported that she found Jill "in the middle of the grass, soaking wet". Her clothes were torn, she was bleeding, and appeared badly injured. A second student, David Donabedian ran to the infirmary to report the injured student.

When he arrived at the infirmary, he told several of the health service staff of the injured student and asked them to call police. He was directed to another person who said that she would call the police. He ran back to the scene just in time to see the police arrive. Ms. Frank later was told by a campus police official that a phone call was received at the station at 7:22 p.m.

The two students, several other students passing by, and police assisted in putting her in the cruiser and she was brought over to the infirmary where she was examined by Dr. Kendrew.

Ms. Dickinson was transferred to Wesson Memorial Hospital in Springfield where she still is hospitalized for multiple injuries. The police believe that the injuries received are probably the result of a hit and run auto accident. Up to this point the exact cause of the injuries has not been determined.

With tremendous exhilaration from the realms of the poets as well as the audience, Friday night April 28, became an historic event in the history of poetry on the campus of Amherst College. Sister Sonia Sanchez and the venerable Gwendolyn Brooks pierced the crowd with such wisdom, that will not be forgotten for a long time to come.

The event commenced with the lioness Sonia Sanchez, who in the eyes of many, is a poetess of the arts. Her knowledge, wisdom and understanding traversed the boundaries of all listeners concerning the oppression and imperialism being implemented by culturally confused demogogues.

As she stood on the podium, this articulate orator began to sing and dance the tunes not of the caged bird but of the bird that has proportioned itself from the gravitational pulls of ignorance, greed and lust.

This African queen stood dressed in a modest light-brown covering which seemed to duplicate her natural skin tone. With brown beads and fashioning an intrically styled corn-roll, Mrs. Sanchez cried to the world with raindrops from heaven and lighted knowledge from the sun. Like the moon reflects the light of the sun, Mrs. Sanchez reflected the light of wisdom which could only be challenged by God the creator.

There were such poems commemorating El-Hajj Malik El-Shabazz (Malcolm X), and there were also poems manifesting the vicious inaccuracies of racism, poverty, oppression and imperialism.

Introducing a beautifully rare poetess of great stature, Mrs. Gwendolyn Brooks electrified the youth in the audience with brilliant and witty poetry which painted smiles on the lips and tears in the eyes. Exposing the unnatural behaviour of oppression, Mrs. Brooks masterfully tamed the shrewed with the piercing sword of old-aged wisdom. This Afro-American woman standing on at least 50 years, brought to the ears of the youth a half of century worth of poetry and meaningful syntax dealing with the two types of english, the english of the rich and the english of the poor.

Wearing a black dress and carrying a dark-brown complexion, Mrs. Brooks brought to the city of Amherst, a pocketful of courage, determination and sincerity that captured the audience like the rays of the sun captures the darkness.

In concluding her composition on the acquisition of clear thought, Mrs. Brooks left an impression in the minds of many with a powerful and eloquent approach of progressively written poetry.

Mrs. Sonia Sanchez and Mrs. Gwendolyn Brooks were afterwards invited to a reception gathering at the Gerald Penny Memorial center located inside the Octagon building at Amherst College.

PANAMA COOL TO US TREATY OKAY

By C. BROWN and G. PRIESTLEY

Despite the efforts of Panamanian leader Brig. Gen. Omar Torrijos to organize greeting parties for the Panama Canal treaties just passed by the U.S. Senate, the pacts sparked a mixed reaction in Panama.

The failure of the Torrijos regime to muster widespread support for the treatiis reflects not only progressive Panamanian opposition to the treaties, but mounting pressure on the reformist government from extreme rightist bourgeois opposition forces as well as liberal opponents.

The two pacts, calling for nominal transfer of the Panama Canal and the Canal Zone to Panamanian jurisdiction, passed the U.S. Senate by a 68-32 vote April 18. Anticipating the vote, the Panamanian government dismissed its employes that day, with instructions to return later that evening for a "street celebration" it was organizing to show the international press that the treaties had popular backing.

Hours later, when the 68th vote for ratification was finally cast, Torrijos went on the air to proclaim that the ratification represented "the greatest and most awaited triumph in the country's history." This jubilant exultation, however, contrasted dramatically with sizable demonstrations denouncing the treaties' neocolonial aims.

Demonstrations against the treaty, involving mostly students, were organized by several organizations of the independent left. One of the chief backers of the protests was Guaykucho-NIR, a student-based Marxist-Leninist organization with a growing working-class following in the terminal cities of Colon and Panama.

PROTESTERS DENOUNCE PACTS

The protesters denounced both the treaties as a whole and the right-wing DeConcini reservation, an addition to the Neutrality Treaty which specifically states the U.S. "right to intervene" militarily in the Zone should Panama take action to close to the waterway. The treaties also drew fire because they allow for the continued presence of U.S. troops and military bases in the Zone, continued control over the Canal's operations and growing collaboration of Panama's national guard with the U.S. military — all of which amount to an ongoing violation of Panamanian sovereignty.

Although Torrijos declared April 19 a national holiday, there were no mass celebrations. According to U.S. press reports, few people expressed elation. At best, some expressed relief that the ordeal of ratification was over, while many others, especially students and workers, voiced "smoldering dissatisfactions" with the pacts, correspondents observed.

Torrijos, keenly aware of this mood, attempted to assuage popular discontent at an April 19 press conference by boasting that if the treaties had not been ratified, he would have initiated a struggle for national liberation which might have closed the Canal.

Torrijos' "holiday" was ignored by the largely rightist opposition parties as well. In a joint statement issued April 19, the four major opposition groups renewed demands for a new plebiscite on the agreements. The treaties were supported in a plebiscite last fall by what most observers considered an almost too-neat two-thirds majority. The opposition, including the Panamenista Party, the Liberal Party, the Christian Democratic Party and the Movement of Independent Lawyers (MIL), warned that unless the treaties were resubmitted to a plebiscite they would disavow them should any of them ever come to power. By projecting these demands at a time of mounting popular discontent with the Torrijos government, they hoped to embarrass the regime and further erode its support.

Press Release About Grupo Moncada

Grupo Moncada first appeared together publicly on October 7, 1972 at the University of Havana. Group member Alberto Faya had been singing for some time the songs of the new young Cuban composers and singers, such as Pablo Milanés, Silvio Rodriguez and Noel Nicola. The musicians in Grupo Moncada discussed at length the new Latin American music and were making their first attempts to play quenas and other familiar Latin American instruments.

The group knew what it wanted from the beginning — to popularize the folk music of Latin America with special emphasis on Cuban music. The members of the group got to know one another better as they worked together to define certain musical concepts and became increasingly aware that music could be an instrument of revolutionary change. Searching for their own musical roots, they became part of the "New Latin American Song Movement", contributing to that movement, music which speaks of Cuba's history.

Their first major work, "Canción del Moncada", gave the musicians an idea for the group's name. Structured as a cantata, this song tells of the attack on Fort Moncada in July, 1953 by Fidel Castro and his followers. The work, composed only a few months after the group started working together, shows the intellectual and political responsibility with which the group approached it's creative task from the start.

Since then, the musicians have perfected their performing skills without giving up their determination that their music truly reflect Cuban cultural roots and history. This dedication is as important as the 41 instruments that Grupo Moncada plays and the wide range of its repertoire.

Grupo Moncada performs mainly in schools, universities, work centers and amateur festivals in Cuba, as well as appearing regularly on radio and television in Cuba and abroad. In 1974 and 1975, the group toured Peru and in 1976, Germany and Czechoslovakia. Before coming to the U.S., Grupo Moncada will be performing in Europe again. In addition, Grupo Moncada has participated in concerts and music festivals with well known Latin American singers and composers and representatives of revolutionary song movements in other continents.

They have recorded three albums of the group alone; seven with other members of the "Nueva Trova" movement in Cuba, a record with Chilean composer Angel Parra, and a number of 45's. They've also provided music for several Cuban films and won numerous awards in Cuba.

San Juan Workers End Strike

STRIKE
AS 78

by CAM DUNCAN
Special to the Guardian

San Juan, Puerto Rico

The Electrical Workers Union (UTIER) gave in to economic pressure and voted to ratify a 4-year contract ending the 113-day strike and lock out at the government-owned Water Resources Authority (WRA).

Accepting what union president Luis Lausell called "a moral victory and an economic defeat," the 6200 member UTIER agreed "under protest" to return to work with monthly wage increases of $50, $45, $50 and $55 for each year of the contract. The settlement includes a lump sum of $375 to cover retroactive wage increases from June 1977 when the previous contract expired, to the Dec. 27 start of the strike.

The agreement was far below the $112-a-month increase for each year that the union had demanded. At the time the strike started, the WRA was offering a 3-year contract calling for a $40-a-month raise the first year and $30 a month additionally for the second and third years.

ACCEPTED UNDER PROTEST

Lausell stated that in economic terms, what was gained by the strike would not offset the thousands of dollars in wages each union member lost during the three-and-a-half month stoppage.

"That is why the agreement was accepted under protest. But we have shown how antilabor the Romero administration is. We have also learned what our strengths and weaknesses are so we can prepare for them the next time around," Lausell said. The average base wage of UTIER members is $5.33 an hour, above the island's average manufacturing wage of $3 an hour, but well below the wages of U.S. electrical workers.

UTIER is one of the largest and most militant unions in Puerto Rico and is a leading representative of the progressive sector of the island's labor movement. Its president is a member of the central committee of the Puerto Rican Socialist Party (PSP). Precisely for this reason it was singled out by the colonial government as a prime target for dealing a blow to the workers' movement. The strike, the longest ever by public workers in Puerto Rico, was in many respects a battle for survival for the UTIER.

Throughout the strike, the government sought to undermine public support by attacking the union leadership. Gov. Romero Barcelo labeled it a "political" rather than an economic strike, bent on overthrowing his pro-statehood administration. As many as two WRA-sponsored radio bulletins every hour, accompanied by full-page ads in newspapers, leaflets and TV spots bombarded the public with talk of "the strike against the people," "foreign elements," "communist conspiracy" and the "heroic labor" of the WRA supervisors.

The government also tried to promote dissident factions within the union. Romero announced "hundreds" of phone calls to his office by UTIER members who wanted to return to work but were "intimidated" by the union leadership. Tiny pockets of resistance to the union leadership developed, which were played up by part of the media as major splits. But the great division failed to materialize.

In the face of continued government intransigence and growing economic pressures on the workers, UTIER decided that the strike was no longer an effective tactic and voted on March 19 to return to work without a contract. The WRA then declared an illegal lockout, claiming that there would be no work without a contract.

VOTE OF CONFIDENCE

The government has succeeded in its immediate objective of forcing the union to accept a minimal wage increases, which does not even compensate for a drop in real wages caused by the 10% inflation rate here. But the administration's long-term goal of dividing and subduing the union was not realized. Lausell's handling of the negotiations was unanimously endorsed at an islandwide UTIER assembly in March and the union gave him a vote of confidence during the contract ratification meeting last week.

"In this strike the UTIER was fighting for the entire labor movement," Lausell said, referring to the government's campaign to destroy the union and later weaken the union movement in general.

"We lost the first round in economic terms because we didn't have enough power at this time to win more from the boss, but we won in terms of the experience we gained to continue the struggle. The important thing now is to reorganize ourselves to keep them from destroying the UTIER and the rest of the labor movement."

U.S. support movement escalates

ON BRANDISSTR

by LYNORA WILLIAMS

It begins with a little here, a little there. And suddenly there's a mass movement.

That's exactly what's happening with Southern Africa support work in this country. As the resistance to apartheid grows within South Africa, demonstrators across the U.S. continue to kick at the U.S. corporate props supporting the racist regime.

In all, nearly 3000 people demonstrated in six cities last week demanding an end to corporate and university connections with South Africa.

Meanwhile, a recently published State Department document contains the U.S. government's own admission that South African blacks want U.S. corporations out of their country. The leaked State Department cable, published by Southern Africa magazine, contradicts repeated corporate claims that South African blacks welcome the comparatively liberal labor policies of U.S. companies.

"In the pre-Soweto period when most South African blacks could visualize only a gradual process of improvement, American capital could defend its presence," U.S. Ambassador to South Africa William Bowdler told his superiors. "Advent of black consciousness and dissatisfaction with the pace of events has brought a shift in attitudes," he cautioned.

Bowdler noted the increasing unpopularity of U.S. capital in South Africa adding: "American firms here will become increasingly controversial and rationale for continued presence will seem less and less persuasive to growing numbers of blacks."

Echoing the South African people's demand for an end to U.S. investment in apartheid, most of last week's support actions urged universities to drop their holdings in corporations that do business with Pretoria.

The largest demonstration was in Boston, where 1500 Harvard University students marched April 24. It was the largest antiapartheid action in Boston to date. The demonstration was called by the United Front, a coalition of Black, Chicano, Asian American and anti-imperialist campus organizations, and demanded the school's governing board agree to divestiture.

The governing board, which met to discuss the issue, refused to issue a statement even though they said they had reached a decision. Students vowed to remain at the site of the demonstration until the decision is announced. About 30 students maintained an all-night vigil.

Harvard has the largest endowment fund of any university in the U.S. A decision by the school to divest its South Africa ties would have a major impact on the divestiture movement. According to Harvard student Neva Seidman, "Harvard's endowment stands at $1.5 billion, some $300 to $500 million of which is invested in firms which do business in South Africa. If Harvard has a bank," she said, "it would be the 73rd largest in the U.S."

In Amherst, Mass., some 300 people denounced the Amherst College board of trustee's endorsement of the Sullivan principles, which represent a token upgrading of the labor policies of U.S. companies in South Africa (Guardian, April 19). The protestors marched from president John Ward's office to the administration offices, where they staged a 1-hour sit-in. The protest followed an April 15 meeting in which Ward was confronted with a barrage of student questions and was forced to walk out of the open meeting. Last week's action was sponsored by the South Africa Support Committee.

At Columbia University in New York City April 20, a similar demonstration erupted following a speech by ex-SDS leader, Mark Rudd at a meeting commemorating the Columbia protests of 1968. Nearly 400 students marched to the home of Columbia president William McGill to demand divestiture, then marched back to campus where they rallied for nearly two hours.

At another East Coast college, Brown University in Providence, R.I., 300 people rallied to demand divestiture. Some 40% of the school's financial investments, representing over $23 million, are in companies with links to the apartheid regime in South Africa. "The money from U.S. corporations does not go to improve our lives, it goes to buy guns to kill us," Barney Mokgatle told the protestors. Mokgatle is former secretary of the Soweto Student Representative Council. A similar protest including 200 participants took place at Williams College in Williamstown, Mass., April 22.

As stockholders of North Carolina National Bank (NCNB) gathered April 18 for their annual meeting in Raleigh's Civic Center, they heard the chants of 20 pickets outside, calling "NCNB, we're no fools, we know you support minority rule."

And in the small, industrial town of Greenfield, Mass., 70 people, over half of them unionists, heard African National Congress representative Chris Nteta at an April 13 forum. Nteta linked the struggles of U.S. workers to the oppression of black workers in South Africa, adding that a number of local companies had ties to South Africa. The action was sponsored by Greenfield Popular Union and United Electrical Radio & Machine Workers of American Local 274.

The following action in support of Southern African Liberation are planned for upcoming weeks:

Boston, Mass.: A demonstration calling for "U.S. out of South Africa" will be held on the Boston Common at 1 p.m. April 30 and is sponsored by a large coalition of groups.

New York City: the Zimbabwe African National Union (ZANU) Solidarity Committee and the Medical Committee for Human Rights will sponsor a May 5 meeting on "Health in the Zimbabwe Liberation Struggle." Dr. H. Ushewokunze, ZANU health secretary, will speak. The meeting will be held at 7:30 p.m. at New York University Law School, 40 Washington Sq. S., New York, N.Y. Donation, $2. Ushewokunze is also available for a national speaking tour. For more information: ZANU, 211 E. 43 St., Suite 902, New York, N.Y. 10017, tel. 212-697-7910.

New York City: Columbia students are planning an antiapartheid rally May 1 to coincide with a meeting of the school's board of trustees.

VORSTER ACCEPTS NAMIBIA PLAN

South Africa's John Vorster knows a good thing when he sees it.

And on April 25, the leader of the white racist regime accepted the Western plan for so-called independence of Namibia from South Africa. Put forward by the U.S., Britain, West Germany, France and Canada a year and a half ago, the plan has been modified in South Africa's favor in recent negotiations with Vorster.

In essence, the plan would allow South African control of Namibia during UN-sponsored elections. Further, the plan would leave Namibia's only deepwater port and economic lifeline, Walvis Bay, in South African hands indefinitely. Its status would then be negotiated by the elected Namibian government and South Africa.

A new concession was made to Vorster last week and the plan will now allow a newly elected government to ask that South African troops remain in Namibia permanently.

At Guardian presstime, Namibia's liberation organization, SWAPO, had no formal statement on Vorster's decision. But a spokesman at SWAPO's UN Mission pointed out that SWAPO has already rejected various key aspects of the plan.

"The question of Walvis Bay remains to be resolved satisfactorily," he said. "And the role of the UN in supervising the elections, particularly the powers of the UN special representative, remains unclear. The role of the South African forces (military and police) that will remain during the transition period is still not resolved."

Black liberation fighter is held prisoner by forces of the Ian Smith regime.

A leading member of the Zimbabwe African National Union (ZANU) and deputy treasurer of the liberation movement's internal wing, the People's Movement (PM), was shot to death April 13 by Rhodesian army troops.

ZANU member George Simbi was murdered outside his home near the small town of Ekeldoorn, a few miles from Salisbury, Rhodesia's capital. Simbi, according to the illegal white minority government, was killed for allegedly breaking a curfew. But his companion, who witnessed the unprovoked murder, said the soldiers killed him hours before dusk fell. The slaying of Simbi was apparently tied to a Smith regime plan to exterminate opponents of the internal settlement accord signed in March by Prime Minister Ian Smith and three black political figures.

Following the Simbi killing, the PM revealed it had obtained a government document listing anti-internal settlement elements to be eliminated. Simbi's name was on the list.

"Comrade Simbi," ZANU representative in North America, Tirivafi Kangai, told the Guardian, "was a staunch member of our movement. In spite of numerous threats of arrest, he gave food, money and shelter to our freedom fighters."

In 1962, Simbi was elected a ZANU district official and was detained twice after that. He attended a ZANU consultative conference in Lusaka, Zambia, in 1976 and was also an observer at the abortive Geneva talks later that year.

Expelled Medical Student Whose Family Gave School $20,000
Won His Diploma in Court

by Richard D. Lyons
by RICHARD D. LYONS
Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO — The increasing frequency with which favoritism has been alleged in the admissions policies of graduate professional schools brings to mind the most detailed case that was so far come to light, a case involving the Chicago Medical School.

Briefly, the complex case involved Pasquale DeMarco who, in 1969 pledged $40,000 to the school, where he had earlier been a student and where he hoped to return to complete his final semester. He paid $20,000 of the pledge, according to court records, but was expelled shortly before graduation and sued the school, in effect, for breach of contract.

Over the course of the long case, which ended two years ago with an appeals court order he be awarded his diploma, Mr. DeMarco's laywers subpoenaed from the school financial records showing that its officials had solicited huge amounts of money from the families and friends of applicants for admission.

Since then, other cases in which academic excellence may not have been the sole reason for admission to graduate professional schools have come to light.

Indeed, two trials in Philadelphia in which a pair of prominent politicians were convicted disclosed a long-term pattern of bribes running into the hundreds of thousands of dollars that had been paid by applicants to schools of medicine, law, dentistry, osteopathy and veterinary medicine.

There have also been charges in Boston and California that whom one knew and how much one was willing to pay influenced admissions policies in much the same way they did at the Chicago Medical School.

The court records in the Chicago case show that in 1970, 1971, 1972 and 1973 the school received almost $11 million in contributions in the names of 270 of the 349 students in the four freshman classes.

Parents Contributed Most

Most of the funds came from indulgent parents, according to the records, but in some cases money was donated by corporations and foundations, often those controlled by the parents of the students, and in others cases parents solicited from friends donations that were credited to the original parents' pledge.

Testimony in the case suggested that acceptance into the freshman class often hinged on contributions to the school. One letter from a parent stated:

"I will contribute to the Chicago Medical School $25,000, to be paid $5,000, annually if (my son) is admitted in fall. Enclosed is $2,500, with the remaining $2,500 to be forwarded in September."

Further, testimony and documents introduced into the record suggest that some students in whose names donations had been made were favored over applicants with better academic records.

According to the court record, the president of the school, Dr. A. Nicholas Taylor, "admitted that it was possible the Chicago Medical School rejected applicants with higher undergraduate grade-point averages in favor of applicants who had contributions made in their behalves."

Some Deny Wrongdoing

Some of the parents who made substantial contributions emphatically denied any wrongdoing.

"It's prevalent everywhere," said Harry Schulman, a prominent Chicago lawyer. "I suspect you'll find much the same thing at Yale, Harvard and places like that."

According to the court records, a member of the Chicago Medical School's board of trustees solicited $50,000 from Mr. Schulman three months before his son, Joel, entered the school. The records indicated that as of 1974 more than $47,000 had been paid although Mr. Schulman denied having agreed to the solicitation.

"I have a fine son who is going to be a dedicated doctor," Mr. Schulman said, adding, "It's the whole person, not just scores on tests, that makes a good doctor."

Children Apparently Unaware

His son, Dr. Joel A. Schulman, a resident in ophthalmology at Good Samartian Hospital in Portland, Ore., said: "I'm not even aware that any contributions were made on my behalf."

The son of Irving Hornstein, the executive vice president of Schenley Industries, also said in response to an inquiry that he was unaware that contributions had been made to the school in his name.

Dr. William Hornstein, now a resident in neurology at the University of Minnesota Hospital in Minneapolis, said, "Grades alone do not make the best physician. I think I'm a credit to the medical profession." Attempts to discuss the issue with his father were unavailing. The parents of other students similarly refused comment on why they had made large contributions to the school shortly before their sons matriculated.

The American Medical Association and the Association of American Medical Colleges, which have a policy stating that "there will be freedom from political, financial or alumni influence in the selection of students," have taken no action against the school.

'Never Do It Again'

"We asked the school officials about it, and they told us they had done nothing wrong and would never do it again," said Dr. James Schofield, the spokesman for the two groups.

The Bureau of Health Manpower of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare is, however, seeking the return of $60,000 in loans and scholarships given students at the school who had pleaded financial need even though their parents had contributed $245,000 to the institution.

The students who benefited, all of whom have since graduated, have refused the Federal request to return the money, and Government lawyers in Washington said they doubted that any of the funds would be repaid.

San Francisco

American Indian Movement (AIM) leader Dennis Banks will be staying in California — at least until the next election for the state's governor.

Calif. Gov. Jerry Brown announced April 19 that he will not extradite Banks to South Dakota to face sentencing on a 1975 riot and assault conviction. The charges stem from a Custer, S.D., courthouse demonstration which ended in what Banks calls a "police riot."

The governor's move, which inspired howls of protest fromt he top law enforcement officals of both states involved, was characterized by Banks as a "courageous decision" that strikes a "strong blow against the racist attitudes of the attorney general's office in South Dakota.

In denying the extradition, Brown stated that the 45-year-old AIM national director faces "danger" in South Dakota and that the "interests of justice would not be served" by returning Banks to that state.

EFFORTS TO CONTINUE

South Dakota Attorney General William Janklow vowed to continue his efforts to bring Banks back for sentencing.

Unfortunately, that may come as soon as next year if Gov. Brown is unseated in the upcoming November elections. South Dakota may reinstitute extradition proceedings at any time and would find the governor's office much more amenable to its request should any of Brown's possible Republican opponents win.

Calif. Attorney General Evelle Younger, one of the several rising stars of reaction currently campaigning for the GOP gubernatorial nomination, said that Brown's decision was "irresponsible" and could make California "a sanctuary for convicted criminals."

Brown's decision climaxes a 2-year struggle by the Native American movement to block Banks' extradition. Numerous protest demonstrations were held throughout the state since January 1976, when Banks was arrested by the FBI in El Cerrito, Calif., after five months underground.

The decision not to extradite also points up an interesting facet of the contradiction which is Jerry Brown. While supporting, either tacitly or openly, many measures which attack the standard of living of working people as a whole, the governor has also backed certain progressive cases of "individual rights." Thus, based on a few widely publicized actions, Brown is able to project an image of "liberal humanitarianism." This has proven politically useful to the governor whenever he slashes social services and exhorts the state's people to have "lowered expectations."

Armed attacks against Pretoria increase

by SARA RODRIGUES
Special to the Guardian

Armed clashes in the eastern Transvaal between units of the African National Congress' (ANC) armed wing, Umkhonto We Sizwe, and racist security forces have inflicted a number of losses on South African troops.

Brig. Zeitman, chief of Pretoria's security police, was forced last week to admit this intensification of the liberation forces' armed actions amid a number of other signs that the movement is striking hard at the structures of repression and apartheid.

On the same day as Zeitman's admission, police revealed they found the body of Abel Mthembu, state witness in the Pretoria trial of 12 black South Africans accused of ANC activities. And Police, Justice and Prisons Minister Jimmy Kruger went on to complain, at a white South African lawyers' get-together, that the regime is finding it increasingly difficult to maintain its network of informers and spies. The people's vigilance is growing.

Also last week, racist press reports gave details of a growing number of bomb incidents in urban centers. Escalation of bomb attacks in the last three months, the press reports stated, reached an average of one incident every five days. Only a fraction of guerrilla sabotage attacks and bomb incidents ever get reported in the South African press at all, so even these figures are likely to be well below the true state of affairs.

Now Pretoria is launching a large-scale "military exercise" due to start May 8 from Kimberly, in the northern Cape. More than 5000 troops, including paratroopers, artillery units and air support — plus fighter plantes — are involved in a morale-boosting exercise designed to persuade flagging racist spirits of the military might at their backs. Some 100 vehicles have begun ferrying troops from Pretoria to Kimberly — right through South Africa's densely populated center — in preparation for the events. Leading military officers are rattling their sabres again in an effort to bolster morale and counteract daily information on the successful guerrilla struggles in Zimbabwe and Namibia.

Army Chief Lt. Gen. Viljoen, in a typically brazen statement, recently spoke of the "unleashing of the full might" of the military. "It was not fully used in Angola," he asserted in an attempt to excuse the South African army for its humiliating defeat at the hands of the revolutionary Angolans and their Cuban allies. As for the daily pitched battles in northern Namibia, where the liberation movement SWAPO continues to tie down South African occupation forces, the lieutenant general stated, "The SWAPO episode has up to now been nothing more than a training exercise for us."

But within days, Minister of Defense Botha gave another version closer to the truth: "The continuous struggle in the prevention and suppression of terrorism in the operational area," he said, is the reason for extending periods of service of commando members "to maintain force levels in the operational area."

Meanwhile, Parliament was approving Botha's bill to give his Defense Ministry total rights over land within 6 miles of South Africa's borders. Under the new bill the Defense Ministry will be able to clear this strip of land, depopulate it and militarize it at will without compensation to residents.

The measure is a sign of the regime's recognition of its inability to stop infiltration into the country by guerrilla units. These have become widespread enough now to have prompted Port Natal divisional police commissioner Brig. Rennie de Witt to state earlier this month that an attack in his area "has shown that these things can happen in our midst and are not confined to Soweto, the Witwatersrand and other parts of the country."

Among recent bomb incidents and guerrilla actions reported in the racist press were details of infiltration of a racist force's barracks at Lenz Military Base where explosives and grenades were stolen. A spokesman for Soweto security police, who swooped on the homes of Soweto youths and found explosives and grenades, said the explosives were all of the type used by the South African army.

In another report, two white farmers were killed in a shootout at Delareyville with four blacks. This was in March, when a bomb incident was also reported at Port Elizabeth in which a man was accidentally killed while carrying a bomb. In the first week in April, a report on a bomb explosion in Alexandra township was reported, as well as a gas-bomb explosion in Port Elizabeth.

One of the new features of the reports is the absence of arrests, which indicates a growing number of successful getaways.

The racist regime is facing resistance on a wide front — both at home and abroad in illegally occupied Namibia and racist-ruled Zimbabwe where South African forces have again joined the Smith regime army (see story above). The arms boycott voted last year in the UN Security Council against the racist regime is causing growing concern in Pretoria. Secondary contradictions within the imperialist camp, which have brought the U.S., Britain, France and other powers to agree to the arms boycott, have infuriated the racist regime to such an extent that it has embarked on revealing U.S. responsibility for its Angola adventure — presumably in a crude attempt to pressure the Carter administration.

WASHINGTON'S ANGOLA ROLE

In a surprise statement to Parliament last week, Defense Minister Botha complained that the arms boycott is based on "false premises." He criticized the UN for condemnation of South Africa's military buildup and "what is called aggression against neighboring states." Botha said he could "think of only one instance of military action by South Africa in a neighboring state, and that had been in Angola." (Pretoria does not regard Namibia as a "neighboring state.") But, said Botha, in Angola "South Africa had acted with the full knowledge and encouragement of the U.S."

On that occasion, he continued, "the Americans transported arms to bases maintained by South African forces inside Angola. I myself was there and saw them." This was the second time since the end of the Angolan war that the apartheid regime revealed U.S. support for its invasion of the independent African state.

But Botha did not mention the racist regime's continuing aggression against the People's Republic, which was again denounced April 19 by the Angolan Defense Ministry. The defense leaders stated that FAPLA — the Angolan People's Liberation Armed Forces — had crushed a new South African attempt to set up a puppet secessionist state in southeastern

IN THE NAME OF ALLAH
IMAM KHAMEINNI'S MESSAGE TO THE IRANIAN PEOPLE

Greetings to the progressive clergy who resist in solid unity against the stooges of foreign power; greetings to religious scholars from Iraq and all over Iran who cooperated in the struggle against oppression and looting of the country's resources; greetings to students in the universities and secular schools, those who paid tribute to the Islamic faith and to their beloved motherland by their intelligent uprising. Greetings and honor to the people of Iran who, in spite of all prosecutions, defended the justice; some of them died for their beliefs. God may bless the souls of all who were massacred in June 1963 and December 1978 during Mohharam (first month of the Moslem lunar calendar, which is considered a period of mourning for martyrs). The Morahharam refreshes our minds and builds our determination to revolt against Goliath at each age. Mohharam heritage teaches us to consider sacrifice in combatting the oppressor a top priority for each faithful Moslem. The June 1963 uprising trained our fighters and consolidated the determination of the masses of our people in fight against foreigners and their lacky, the Shah. Since that uprising life has been harder for foreigners and their local allies as universities and bazaars have become citadels of struggle for justice and faith. Recent uprisings are the waves of the June 1963 movement. And that is what makes the Shah restless as he sends his dagger-carrying goons to battle the masses.

After the Shah made his deal with Carter, his agents started provocations and then machine-gunned the people in the holy mosque of Qum. Reports indicate between 70 to 300 people have been killed. Their shameful activities are to the point that police have arrested the people who were going to hospitals in order to donate blood to the wounded. Shah wanted to prove the strength of his relations with his American bosses but the nation showed its hatred toward him in refusing him and asking for the end of his dynasty.

This uprising was a referendum of the masses calling for his abdication. Carter and other Imperialists should take note of this expression of my people. These ruthless killings and brutal reaction against the wishes of the people are nothing but an indication of the final stage of the Shah's regime. His infantile show of creating imaginary support for the regime by bringing his agents to the streets and forcing the helpless poor to join them is a weak answer to the recent mass strike by the people.

The Iranian people of such awareness, with high morals and bravery, can be assured of their victory, a victory with honor and pride, a victory with freedom and independence, a victory by uprooting the looters and foreigners, a victory which ends the oppression and ends the Pahlavi dynasty. A nation made of intelligent and united clergy, academicians, bazaries, students at home and abroad, workers and peasants, all struggling for Islamic justice is no doubt victorious. A nation whose best youth is ready for struggle, to the last drop of blood, against the regime is victorious. A nation in which the mothers and sisters of martyrs are proud of the death of their beloved ones is victorious. A nation whose students at home and abroad make the life for Shah and his bosses uneasy is victorious. A nation whose youth, despite all of the Shah's tricks, right around the White House showed their hatred toward the Shah is victorious. A nation following God and fighting for justice is victorious. You, the respectable and great nation, with all injuries and damages and losses, are victorious.

Shame to the regime who claims the great learned leaders in Islamic circles are supporters of such a corrupted and bloody government. The fake revolution claimed by the Shah is rejected by the people and its vanguard clergy. These fake reforms ordered by the imperialist powers are not accepted by the masses. The reforms which have uprooted the peasants, created markets for foreigners, and destroyed our agriculture are nothing but sabotage against the people. For a country which during the 50 year reign of the Pahlavi dynasty has seen no freedom, talking about the emancipation of women is a joke. This regime has no goal except destroying Islam and you see why they have changed the calendar from Islamic to the calendar of the oppressors and shambles of history. (Shah recently changed the country's calendar from a Moslem one to a manufactured kingship calendar.) If the regime pretends that it observes the religion it has no goal but fooling the people. But this reactionary regime of serfdom should know the time is too late for these maneuvers and such a plan cannot mislead the people anymore.

I humbly ask the nation, the clergy, the students, the merchants, the workers, the peasants and all classes and all levels of people inside and outside the country to unite. I ask you not to get involved in dividing quarrels. I ask you to struggle in unity for cutting the foreign yoke. I ask you to rely on God's help and Islamic traditions which sanction justice. I ask you to tell those who are talking about constitutional monarchy to realize that corrupted royality is in contradiction with Islam. As long as this dynasty is ruling there is going to be no freedom, no independence and no happiness for the people.

I ask the Almighty for the glory of Islam which stands for justice and real freedom and is the defendant of the poor. I leave the people of Iran and especially its youth to the Almighty.

Peace and happiness be upon you.

Stop the Krugerrand

The sale and purchase of the Krugerrand (South African Gold Coin) is open support for the racist minority government in Azania (South Africa). It is open support for the policy of apartheid.

The Kruggerand is "Blood Money"

As the people of Azainia (South Africa) step-up their struggle for liberation, and public opinion mounts, against the brutal policies and actions of the racist minority government, it is intensifying its police state tactics, like in the murder of Steven Biko in Sept., the continued use of the ID pass system developed by Polaroid, widespread jailings, etc. These actions are aimed at trying to stop the liberation movement under way there. A strong economy is a must for the minority government to maintain its rule and this is where the Krugerrand comes in. Profits from the sale of these coins go directly to support the economy and therefore support apartheid. The coin is being adverised as an "ounce of pure love" in reality it is nothing more than "blood money". That's why we say no to the Krugerrand.

What Is Apartheid

Apartheid is the political, economic and physical oppression and exploitation of Azania's non-white population.

—Blacks make up 84 per cent of the population while whites make up 16 per cent.

—Only whites have the right to vote.

—The average monthly household income for whites is $711 while it is $83 for Blacks

—The government spends on education per student per year $517 for whites, $46 for Blacks

—Black movement inside the country is restricted by use of the ID pass book system. Blacks are issued pass books that they must carry at all times which lists what areas they are allowed to go.

—Over the past year over 25 Blacks have died while under detention

Carter's Human Rights Stand Is A Joke

Jimmy Carter's "Human Rights Campaign" has been a blessing for the racist minority government of South Africa. It has meant that despite the words of some US officials the South African government can continue to count on the US as a major friend. The "arms embargo" voted by the UN against South Africa is an empty threat because they produce 70 per cent of their weapons now anyway, while the U.S. helped to prevent an economic embargo against South Africa, which would have had a real impact. As long as the U.S. allows its corporations (such as First Nat. Bank, Gillette, General Motors, IBM, Mobile Oil, and many more) to remain in South Africa and as long as things like Krugerrand sales continue, the racist minority government of South Africa will have money to resist the movement for liberation being fought by the Azanian people.

We demand that all businesses stop selling, buying and advertising the Kruggerrand immediately — we demand an end to their partnership in apartheid.

Take a stand against apartheid — stop the Kruggerrand!

All U.S. investments out of South Africa!

Victory to the Azanian people!

Positive Images for Whom?

Culture is defined as a high state of civilization. Civilization is the collective act of educating a person or people into the usages of organized society. To civilize is to teach the knowledge, wisdom, culture, and refinement of the human family of the planet earth or to bring about higher levels of consciousness.

If someone were to come from the other side of the earth with no prior knowledge that such a people as the African-American existed he would be sadly greeted with an introduction to these people through prime time television. He would be greeted by "kid dyn-o-mite" J.J. Walker, Archie Bunker in "black face" George Jefferson, an overweight-twinkie eating teenager called "Rerun" and Damon Wilson in "Baby I'm Back." These are examples of life typical in the African-American community. These are examples that say er every week that the African-American is devoid of any kind of history, culture, or civilization before they were discovered by NBC, CBS, or ABC.

Not one of these shows carries a positive image. Not one of these shows gives the viewer the impression that there is any sense of pride or dignity in the African-American community. The male characters are all weak characters and typify the image of Amos-n-Andy or Step-n-Fetchit. They are either effeminate or assigned the role of the hen-pecked husband trying to win the affection of their women but somehow never seem to make it.

The female characters are fat, domineering matrons who are constantly trying to maintain a family single-handed. They fit the Aunt Jamima stereotype with some Saphire of Amos-n-Andy fame mixed in. This is detrimental to the establishment of any kind of positive image in the mother because the mother is the first nurse, the first teacher, the first psychologist, and in most cases gives the child his or her initial contact with the new "womb" called the world. Depending on how the child perceives his or her mother many times depends on what the child's interpretations of the real world will be.

How about an Afro-American decision maker like the mother in Leave it to Beaver? How about an African-American father like Robert Young in "Father Knows Best", the type of father that takes on the responsibilities that are about making the family the nucleus that it needs to be in order for it to be that corner stone or building block for a strong nation. Robert Young did so well in his family duties that he went on to night school to become a doctor.

The failure in these shows is not superficial. The failure goes deeper than what is portrayed on the screen. The failure goes right to the need of the little African-American boy or girl who is in need of positive male and female images. The failure goes right to the psyche of the young Caucasian child who believes that this is how "they" act. This is the typical life style of the typical African-American.

Studies are presently going on as to the effects of violence on the minds of the children (and grown-ups). It would be interesting to note the effects of the so-called "black" shows on the minds of all children especially since the programs now existing in the public school systems are not doing anything to rectify the situation. The school system is left to do the job of parent, minister, etc., and many times is overloaded but the correcting of these myths and stereotypes could go along way in straightening out many of the misconceptions the world has about the African-American community.

God save the children because we have shown that we can't

Angola. The Pretoria plan was based on using Unita, the Angolan neocolonial force, as a front for its buffer state.

Operations by FAPLA from Feb. 28-April 1 this year in an area of the southeastern Kuango-Kubango province bordering on Namibia succeeded in disrupting supply lines to Unita forces based in the province and supplied by air and road from South African army bases in Namibia by Pretoria troops. More than 100 Unita members were killed in actions during the operation, which involved five FALPA battalions and some air support. Many prisoners were also taken. The defense communique stated: "An imperialist plan had been launched some time ago, with a support campaign in the international press, to create a so-called government of a ghost republic to be named the 'Black and African Republic of Angola,' which would have been recognized first by South Africa and by certain reactionary African countries.

"For this purpose," the Angolan statement continued, "South African military bases in Namibia were used for training and supplying groups of Unita puppets with the support of European, American and Latin American mercenaries. The theater of operations chosen to become the headquarters of this so-called government was the province of Kuando-Kubango. The puppet groups were being supplied from Namibia by South African ground and air transport units. Our Kuando-Kubango frontier was being systematically violated and the South African enemy forces had begun establishing real infiltration routes."

The Defense Ministry also noted, "Once again we have proven the constant armed intervention by South Africa against our country."

FIRST CUBAN MUSICAL TOUR IN THE U.S. IN 17 YEARS

Grupo Moncada

Grupo Moncada, one of Cuba's most popular and evocative musical groups, will appear on Thursday May 4 at 8 p.m. at the Student Union Ballroom, at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

The group's performance will provide the first real opportunity American audiences have had since the blockade to hear songs representative of the new Cuban song movement, the "Nueva Trova". The group will also perform traditional Cuban, Afro-Cuban and Latin music.

Grupo Moncada, eight musicians who began singing and playing together when most of them were students at Havana University, has toured extensively in Cuba and in the past three years has emerged as one of Cuba's foremost talents.

The concert at the University of Massachusetts is one stop of a six week tour sponsored nationally by the Center for Cuban Studies, a non-profit informational center located in New York City.

"An Evening of Pan-Afrikan Theatre, Dance, Music, and Folk Stories" will take place Tuesday, May 2, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium Admission is $2. Proceeds from the event will fund area residents to travel to Havana, Cuba in July as part of the U.S. delegation to the 11th World Festival of Youth and Students.

Director for the evening is Eno Washington, accomplished Pan-African dancer of 18 years, who has studied and performed nationally. He will be performing a number of dances including "Beautiful Black Women" and a street dance to James Brown's "Papa' Got a Brand New Bag".

Other performances will be Pamela Benn, percussionist, dancer, and vocalist; Jorge Medina, percussionist of Sunlight and Shade; Brandon Ross, bassist; Eon John, vocalist; and Eshu Elegba, painter and vocalist.

Also performing are Chris Henderson, percussionist of the well known Unity Ensemble, Ima Henderson, narrator of West African Folk Tales, mimest, and dancer, and Valerie Stevens, actress, vocalist, and poet.

Musical director for the evening is David Jackson, pianist, vocalist, and Acting Director of the Voices of New Africa House Choir. Music for the program includes compositions by Nat "Canonball" Adderly, John Coltrane, Edward Kennedy "Duke" Ellington, and Billie Holidy.

Eno Washington and Pamela Benn choreographed the dance num-based upon Afrikan, West Indian, and American dances.

The Amherst preparatory committee of the 11th World Youth Festival will be sending ten delegates to Havana. In order for delegates to be selected regardless of their financial resources, $4250 must be raised in travel costs alone. It is hoped that "An Evening of Pan-Afrikan Theatre, Dance, Music, and Folk Stories" will raise a substantial amount of the total travel costs.

Young people between the ages of 15 and 35 from more than 140 countries are expected to participate in the Youth festival, a sharing of histories, cultures, and struggles. These people will come from many different walks of life and hold many different beliefs.

There will also be a benefit disco for the Youth Festival at Mackimmie House in Southwest on Saturday, May 6, at 9 p.m. Donation will be $1.50 and the D.J. is "Mackimmie Joe" Andrews.

The public is urged to attend these two events.

FIVE COLLEGE BLACK STUDIES FACULTY SEMINAR SERIES

"Harlem: the Garvey Era" is the title of a symposium to be held Tuesday May 2 in SBA 120, UMass campus, at 7:30 p.m. To be discussed are the impact of West Indian and native-born black American migration on Harlem in the Teens and Twenties, the social and intellectual life of the period, as well as the Garvey movement — one of the largest black mass organizations to appear since the late 19th century. Participants include Professors William E. Perkins of Temple University, Ernest Allen of the Department of Afro-American Studies, UMass, and Mr. Lionel Yard, New York City educator and a former member of Garvey's Universal Negro Improvement Association, who will comment on the presentations. The symposium is sponsored by the Five College Black Studies Faculty Seminar Series and the UMass Afro-Am Society. Admission is free; a reception will follow.

IN THE ROCK GARDEN: FROM JAPAN TO JAMHERST

By Zoe Best

"IN THE ROCK GARDEN," a play by Roberto Uno, was presented at Emily Dickinson Theatre at Hampshire College March 30 - April 2. The playwright drew from the collective experiences of Asian women, choosing the metaphor of her father's rock garden, to state that when tradition and consciousness weld together, it produces perpetuation of strength and integrity in overcoming the designs of an oppressive society. The protagonist, June Okawa, played very expressively by Marie Masuda, was in combat with the forces of assimilation throughout the course of the play. June repels cultural suppression and national amnesia by centering within herself symbols of her Japanese heritage — a dance, the Tanka Bushi; a cotton bathrobe, a ukata, that was her father's; the shape of her father's eyes that she has inherited and memory of his dedication in keeping a rock garden. Before the first scene is concluded, the audience senses that a term like "minorities" obfuscates very distinct peoples with very distinct histories of oppression that they have suffered.

In the opening scene, June sits very close to her audience and speaks to the stares that have always been pointed at her "oriental eyes. She probes the attitudes that have hid inaudibly behind those stares for years, "You've seen me somewhere, right?" She proclaims what she reveals during the drama, that of "...clarifying who I am as opposed to who you think I am."

This first monologue is accented and enhanced by contrapuntal music. Teresa Jenoure, with her vocals and playing of the violin, conga and shekere, Peter Johnson and Koon Jo Wu on percussion and flutes accomplished transforming the sound from European instruments by using certain scales and rhythms to create an authentic music. Playing pizzicato on her violin, Teresa Jenoure achieved a shamisen style. The sensitivity of the musicians and the quality of the recorded music that was played during the two dance scenes added an aural aesthetic to spaces where speech subsided.

June's great uncle, Kenji Okawa, wants his young niece to dance a Japanese coal miners' dance, the Tanka Bushi. This flashback scene allows Marie Masuda to take on another characterization, that of a young girl. Initially, June refuses because she has already gotten the message from living in America, that if she does, she will look "silly." Walter Lew, as uncle, exercises magnificent patience. Drinking sake, he tells his niece of how he had arrived here in the Year of the Rabbit, in 1903, along with other coal miners who had fled certain starvation. While uncle recalled that it was a "good year for new beginnings," a few slides documented what June was hearing. He insisted that she dance with him stating:

> "You're ashamed? Ashamed to be Fukuoka ken? No, Junie-Chan, this is very bad. We are Fukuoka people. We remember Fukuoka land, Fukuoka times, now we sing songs, dance the dance of our people. We have this little bit of our ways. When I came to this country, I very ashamed of my Japanese clothes, Japanese talk. Want to be Modern man, American man desu. But you cannot forget everything ni-chan. We must remember our homeland and be proud... Tanka Bushi, coal miners dance — All people dance together because all work together...."

In the next scene, June is again college age and is waiting for a bus when a black student, Greg, arrives and sits next to her on the bench. In this "Hey Brother" scene, the director, Melinda Goodman worked out of the script's dialogue, accentuated contrasts and similarities of the two histories converging in this conversation. The audience was really pulled in here. The concept of racism was faceted, while that of strict cultural nationalism and its showy manifestations in a multi-racial society was called into question. Greg gives the audience reason to laugh often, but his and June's thoughts about their common experiences were not farcical. Greg introduces the first reference to how colleges tend to pressure students who are racially and head-wise not of the mainstream. Michael Cannon makes Greg live, punctuating his run-away lines with "shit" to pry loose the mask that is "Jamherst." And so, this play locates itself here in Amherst, Massachusetts. June sums up their interchange, "I don't like labels — when they separate people. He's Chinese, I'm Japanese, He's bourgie..."

Going back again in time, June reflects about her sister who looks into a 1960's mirror hoping to see a surfer girl with "hair of gold and eyes of blue." Christy Okawa uses make-up to cover up her identity. Later in two other scenes, one looking back at her mother and the other remembering her father, the Japanese-American history of being incarcerated in detention camps during World War II and the migrant work of her father and its effects on her family deepen even further the audience's understanding of why and how June Okawa has become this particular person.

"Moms" portrayed with so much feeling by Peggy Liu, and her younger self, "Moms in the 1940's" as acted by Soo Young Yeon, personify in one person the experience of 110,000 Japanese-Americans from 1941-1946. What had been accumulated over two generations by these people — property, small businesses, farms, personal possessions — was confiscated. Families were broken up and placed in different detention camps. Oldest sons from these families were sent to fight for the U.S. in Europe and the Phillipines. The Asian battalion, 442, was sent on "suicide" missions. This battalion received a very high ratio of medals because of their corresponding casualty rate which was extremely high. The U.S. government needed no justification in herding Japanese-Americans into concentration camps at a time when supposedly this nation was fighting Hitler's fascism. There was not one case of Japanese-American espionage during the war and no Germans or Italians were dispossessed or incarcerated. All this is conveyed without sentiment by one brief view of a U.S. soldier checking June's mother before her release from a camp after the war. She is allowed to leave with only what she can carry in one bag. This then is the direct explanation of Moms wanting to pack everything but the bathroom sink in June's trunk as she leaves for college.

The main motif of the play, the rock garden, becomes a living force within June by the time she attends college. It is memory of her father working very hard at stoop agricultural labor. Marie Masuda displayed her versatility as an actress again when she impersonated middle class gossipers, drawl and all, in their misperceptions of the Okawa family — speaking of them as if they were Navajos — dirty and lazy Indians. After work, June's father would spend time arranging whatever he could find from the terrain — this was dry land in Arizona — building a rock garden. So every time they moved, he would start on another. The playwright and Brandon Ross composed the musical and poetic imagery that represented June's heartfelt gratitude for her father's allegiance to his past heritage which had much to do with June and her ongoing future: My father cared for that garden like he did his children in America; a small plot of land in foreign soil. Beside the concrete driveway beneath the mailbox and next to the porch. A piece of Zen for the weary capable of focused vision an empty sky.

Another powerful moment occurred when a fleeting slide image, like a haiku, of a woman warrior was the backdrop to June's reflections. The strength that she derives from the significance of her father's rock garden and the spirit that she has built up within herself are given expression when she is confronted by a "dormbuddy" in the dorm bathroom. So as not to individualize the strength of Asian women only through June, Roberta Uno, chose to show the force of dignity through another Asian woman. Peggy Liu and Marie Masuda with their different styles, exert martial artistry in verbalization that rebuffs the intrusions by white male students who think they are on top of things including poetic flattery. Both Pen Pendleton and Nick Shorr come off as believable exposing how stereotyping others stereotype the stereotyper. Even though these scenes represent two separate incidents, these two all-American juniors, acculturated by a racist society, can do no better than follow their conditioning. They expose their twin mentality and go through similar motions and discourse, dictated by back-pack minds that collect "Oriental" knick-knack interests and fads — brown rice, chop sticks, meditation, teas, etc. Eventually the intentions of these men come out, to buy the garment that they incorrectly keep on referring to as a kimono, and to get the women up to their rooms.

June's final encounter in the play is with a professor. Earlier Greg had told June, when "you get serious... they mess with you... The professor didn't like my conclusions." The professor depicted recognizeably by Nick Shorr with polished condenscension, instructs June about the tenets of academic study which supposedly she did not adhere to in a research paper — correct analysis, sound research and "objectivity." When he recommends that she scrap her project in documenting the social, political and economic conditions that produced segregated and poor Chinatowns in the U.S., this is like commanding June to scrap her rock garden. June leaves the professor's office and tha audience knows from this final gesture that she will continue to acknowledge and live by her heritage.

Although the themes of "IN THE ROCK GARDEN" were very serious, there was ample opportunity to laugh and applaud. Director Melinda Goodman gathered the play's concepts and projected them with sensitive artistry. The dramatization by the Asian women, Marie Masuda, Soo Young Yeon and Peggy Liu demonstrated their skills in playing multiple roles and ages. Japanese, Korean and Chinese, together, they dispelled ideas about the passivity and china-doll frailty of themselves and of the women they played in the play. There was consistency from the poster designed by Richard Frankel to the set which depended on a quality of acting, including mime techniques, as opposed to a proliferation of props, to the depiction of a picnicer by Marilyn Kass, who did not have to exaggerate mannerisms conditioned by racism. Everyone who contributed to this play proves that youth may not necessarily be equated with inexperience and therefore with the inability to convey depth and focus.

"IN THE ROCK GARDEN" suggests and never overtells. The totality builds up from impressions and becomes visible with each successive brush stroke. Like the renga, a collective poem, circles of musical motifs, the dance poems choreographed by Patti O'Neal and Koon Jo Wu, and danced to with fluidity by Anne Dudley, Flee and Olivia Llano forwarding the traditional into a contemporary mode and the confluence of voices through June's, developed a wholeness. June's embrace of herself, enclosed the audience within her arms. This drama soaked our eyes with images, replacing cherry blossoms with a rock garden and set before us the movements of a beautifully resolute woman — June Okawa. The expressive calligraphy of the final dance along with the snapshot image of June, her sister and her mother standing erect with pride tells of the celebration of creating a consciousness out of a collective and historical experience so necessary for now, and inevitable for making any future of a just and unified society.

FACTS ABOUT THE KRUGERRAND

> "Native politics in a republic such as ours where so many kaffir tribes live among us and all around us offer very exceptional difficulties. The chief principle that must always be borne in mind is that savages must be kept within bounds..."
> —Paul Kruger
> [early Afrikaner leader]

The full-page advertisement in the September 27, 1977 issue of the Boston Herald American showed a South African Krugerrand held by a well-manicured hand. In bold letters, the ad proclaimed, "The Krugerrand, the world's best way to own pure gold."

The advertisement was part of a multi-million dollar promotional campaign which has turned the US into the number one Krugerrand market in the space of a year, a campaign which has successfully convinced a large number of US consumers that the Krugerrand is both attractive and a sound investment.

Yet each Krugerrand sold in the US serves directly to prop up the system of apartheid which, with its inherent racism and injustice, is the cornerstone of South African society.

WHAT IT IS

The Krugerrand is a coin about the size of a half-dollar containing one troy ounce of pure gold. While considered as legal tender in South Africa, the coin is intended mainly for foreign investors. Its value rises and falls with the international price of gold, that is, the price at which gold is bought and sold at international auctions in Zurich and London. In fall, 1977, this price was about $160 an ounce.

WHO PRODUCES IT

The gold for Krugerrands comes from South Africa's 48 gold mines. In 31 of the top mines, Americans own an average of 26 per cent of the shares outstanding. (Based on figures in The Star, Johannesburg, 3-5-77) The mines are controlled by seven major financial groups, which together account for 90 per cent of all mineral production in South Africa. The largest of these is Harry Oppenheimer's Anglo-American Corporation. All the gold mines are members of the South African Chamber of Mines, an industry organization which recruits African labor and refines all the gold the mines produce, before handing it over to the government. The government itself sells most of the gold overseas in the form of bullion. Krugerrands are handled differently. The Chamber of Mines gives the gold for Krugerrands to the government mint, which stamps them and returns them to the Chamber for sales overseas.

WHO DIGS IT

About 90 per cent of the workers in South Africa's gold mines are black, and about 9 per cent are white, with a small number of Coloureds and Asians. African mine employment in April, 1977 was 420,536. (Financial Mail 6-10-77)

In order to provide cheap labor for the mines, Africans were driven off their land, herded into "Native Reserves," forced into the labor market by taxes, and rigidly controlled by the imposition of pass laws, which regimented the labor flow. Most African miners are migrants, forced to live in huge company compounds.

Black miners' current average monthly salary is $124, compared with $563 for whites. (NY Times 7-29-77) This gap between black and white mining salaries is the largest in any industry in South Africa. Even if black miners were allowed to live with their families, their incomes are nowhere near enough to maintain a decent standard of living; in April 1977 an urban African family needed about $150 a month just for basic necessities, without any provision for items such as education and medical expenses. (Financial Mail 5-25-77)

In return for their low salaries, black miners work under highly dangerous conditions. Between 1972 and 1975, there were 2,993 accidental deaths in the mines and 110,169 serious injuries. (Financial Mail 10-29-77)

WHY KRUGERRAND SALES ARE IMPORTANT TO WHITE SOUTH AFRICA

Gold has been the primary basis of South Africa's development since its discovery in 1886. South Africa has 65 per cent of the world's known reserves and accounts for three-quarters of all Western production. Gold sales overseas provide much of the foreign exchange — the dollars, pounds, and marks — that white South Africa needs to buy machinery, chemicals, and raw materials for industrial expansion. Such sales also help to pay for arms and oil crucial for the regime's survival. In the past few years, gold sales have covered about one-third of the total import bill. In addition, the South African government receives substantial tax revenues on all gold produced and the internal economy benefits from gold industry spending.

Until recently, the demand and price for gold rose routinely. All major currencies were translated into gold, which meant countries kept adding to their stockpiles. Gold was also in steady demand for jewelry and industrial purposes. In the past few years, however, while jewelry and industrial demand has remained high, gold has lost much of its importance as an international medium of exchange.

Accompanying these changes have been sharp variations in world gold prices. Between 1974 and 1976, the price of gold rose to nearly $200 an ounce, then plunged to $110 an ounce, before gradually climbing back to current levels.

South Africa, concerned about the situation, began seeking ways to ensure a steady demand and good price for its chief export. One method it hit on was international sales of Krugerrands. South Africa reasoned that the more gold that could be sold in the form of Krugerrands directly to consumers, the less would have to be auctioned in London and Zurich — thus driving up the price. Krugerrand sales could also serve to develop a greater interest among individuals in owning gold, providing a dependable customer alternative to governments and industry.

In addition, it was recognized, the Krugerrand would help to enhance South Africa's world image. Krugerrand ads do not include photos of South African police attacking students in Soweto or information about the more than two million South Africans, mostly black, who are unemployed. Instead, they link the coins with love, security and beauty, by inference attributing these qualities to South Africa as well.

As Jerry Gast, a US public relations executive, explained in a memo to a South African gold marketing official, "It is not desirable to involve Intergold in the political, economic and social questions that trouble South Africa."

WHO SELLS IT

South Africa began to market Krugerrands in Europe in the early 1970s. These efforts were extended to the US in 1975, when it became legal for individuals to own gold.

Krugerrands are sold outside of South Africa by the Chamber of Mines through its marketing arm, International Gold Corp. Ltd. (Intergold). In the US, Intergold's three major wholesale distributors are J. Aron & Co., Republic National Bank, and Mocatta Metals, Inc., all based in New York. These three distribute the coin in 250-coin lots to a dozen large currency exchange brokers. Through them, local banks, stores and dealers purchase Krugerrands in smaller lots for sale to the public.

Doyle, Dane Bernbach Inc. of New York handles advertising for the Krugerrand, while Rubenstein, Wolfson & Co., also of New York, provides public relations services.

WHO BUYS IT

The US has become the top overseas market for Krugerrands. During the first few months of 1977, the US accounted for about 50 per cent of all such sales (The Star, Johannesburg 7-15-77). This compares with about 15 per cent in 1975. The other major market is West Germany.

In 1976, 2.9 million Krugerrands were sold, at a total price of $378.8 million. This amounted to 14 per cent of all the gold sold by South Africa. In 1975, some 4.8 million coins were sold, or about 21 per cent of total production. (SA government figures) So far in 1977, indications are that while US demand for Krugerrands is strong, overall 1977 world sales may not equal those of 1976. However, because gold prices have risen dramatically, 1977 income from Krugerrand sales could top earlier figures.

HOW THE KRUGERRAND IS MARKETED IN THE US

South Africa began its promotional activities in the US with a 15-week test campaign in late 1975, directed at the Los Angeles, Houston and Philadelphia markets. Intergold reported sales rose by as much as 95 per cent in the cities involved, which as a group accounted during that period for about half of all US sales. Encouraged by this success, Intergold went forward with a major campaign in the fall of 1976 which it described as "the most extensive coin marketing effort ever." Approximately $4 million was spent on advertising and public relations in 25 major cities.

The ads run in the first campaign, as well as in subsequent ones, have been in keeping with the dual intent of selling gold and selling South Africa. They show attractive, white, middle-class people, and they hit hard at the idea that there is no greater security than owning gold.

As described by Business Week, Intergold perceives the typical Krugerrand buyer as "a middle-class school teacher type of investor who was burned by the stock market and fears an uncertain future."

In one promotional coup during the fall 1976 campaign, the Houston Oilers football team was persuaded to present Krugerrands to individual players for outstanding performances.

The 1976 effort was followed by a seven-week, $2.5 million campaign during May-July 1977 in 20 markets, focusing on Krugerrands as graduation presents as well as investments.

Marketing plans for fall, 1977 originally called for a budget of $7 million — part to be spent on the Krugerrand, part on advertising intended to heighten interest generally in owning gold in any form, and part on ads encouraging the purchase of gold jewelry.

As the campaign got underway, it appeared that jewelry ads might have been dropped from the plan, and that due to financial constraints, spending might total only half the proposed budget.

Indications were that the Krugerrand budget, by itself, was probably between $3 million and $3.5 million. The campaign consisted of newspaper and television ads similar to those used in spring, 1977. Marketing efforts were extended to several additional cities.

Among the 1,200 coin dealers, banks and others selling the Krugerrand, there has been little concern about the relations between such sales and apartheid. Merrill, Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., the largest brokerage firm in the country, which sells Krugerrands in all its offices, has stated publicly that it acknowledges no connection between the two. "We sympathize with the concerns of the many individuals and groups who have expressed their abhorrence of apartheid," Merrill, Lynch has said. "But we feel abstaining from dealing in Krugerrands would accomplish nothing in the fight against apartheid."

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE TO STOP KRUGERRAND SALES IN THE US

Many groups opposed to apartheid have used demonstrations and other means to convince the public that by selling or owning Krugerrands, they are directly supporting apartheid. These actions, ranging from petitions to campus protests to picketing of local stores, have served not only to make the public aware of the facts behind the Krugerrand but have raised the level of concern generally about conditions in South Africa and the role the US plays there. In many cases, anti-Krugerrand activities have encouraged interest and participation by individuals and groups previously not involved in South African issues.

In Michigan, Krugerrand advertising prompted creation of an anti-Krugerrand ad by the United Methodist Church. This ad, paid for by Methodist church groups, ran in the Detroit Free Press in December, 1976.

Anti-Krugerrand demonstrations were organized in a number of cities around the country in March, 1977 to commemorate the anniversary of the 1960 Sharpeville massacre in South Africa.

A large-scale Krugerrand advertising campaign in Boston in fall, 1977, prompted a group of people in the media to organize an anti-Krugerrand protest at a meeting of the National Association of Broadcasters. A local anti-apartheid group organized a similar demonstration at one of three Boston television stations carrying Krugerrand advertisements.

In another, earlier effort to dissuade broadcasters from airing Krugerrand ads, the National Conference of Black Lawyers argued in a statement on the Krugerrand that such advertising "represents effective aid and comfort to a violently oppressive regime which maintains the most pernicious social system anywhere."

Among the notable successes of the anti-Krugerrand forces to date have been the passage of resolutions by City Councils in Denver, San Antonio, Dayton and Chicago urging citizens not to purchase the coin.

The Denver resolution, passed in November 1976, states "That the Council hereby expresses its opposition to and loathing of the racial policies of the so-called Republic of South Africa; and urges the people of Denver not to buy the coins known as Krugerrands, whose sales will help to reinforce the present government of South Africa in pursuing its repugnant and inhuman racial policies."

Elsewhere, major department stores in Brooklyn and Cleveland agreed to stop selling Krugerrands after picketing by anti-apartheid groups. In Chicago, black-owned Seaway National Bank readily agreed to stop selling Krugerrands after being informed of the tie between the Krugerrand and apartheid. In New York, local affiliates of all three major networks announced in fall, 1977 that they would no longer carry Krugerrand ads.

THE CASE FOR FURTHER ACTION

While anti-Krugerrand activities continue to raise awareness about South Africa's apartheid system, sales of the Krugerrand continue. By October, 1977, the price of gold had risen to a level sufficiently high to satisfy South Africa. It seems likely that Krugerrand sales helped to push up the price. Additional Krugerrand sales can be expected to further improve this situation. At the same time, the Krugerrand sales campaign continues to foster a positive image of South Africa in American minds.

So long as the Krugerrand is sold in the US, Americans will be contributing to a high gold price for the mining companies, valuable income and foreign exchange for the South African government, and apartheid for African workers. The question before Krugerrand buyers is whether they are willing to pay such a price in return for owning an ounce of pure gold.

Krugerrand advertisements contain the names of stores which carry Krugerrands in each area of the country. The ads also carry a toll-free number which can be called to obtain the names of Krugerrand outlets.

Ongoing information about anti-Krugerrand activities is available through the American Committee on Africa, 305 E. 46th St., NY, NY 10017.

THE END OF AN ERA

"THE TRIO WHO CHANGED THE COURSE OF UMASS BASKETBALL LOOK BACK ON THEIR FOUR YEARS"

When Mike Pyatt, Dereck Claiborne, and Alex Eldridge came to UMass four years ago, they were four years later to become major names in New England basketball. The three brought a new finesse to UMass basketball. Prior to 1974 the UMass player was generally from a while middle class background. His style of play reflected that background. Mike, Dereck and Alex brought with them a different kind of life style. They acted, played and related to things differently. They prepared for games differently. No more of the rah, rah huddles before a game. Each of these players has left a mark on the future of UMass basketball. Their influence can only be assessed after they are gone. Even though as a team they were not able to accomplish as much as they could have, they each made great individual accomplishments. For the first time in UMass basketball history two backcourt stars scored 1,000 points each. During their four years at UMass they have been looked upon as being a trio. However they each have maintained their individuality. Here the "trio" talk about their own personal accomplishments, future goals, UMass, Leaman and life in general.

MASSACHUSETTS

MIKE PYATT:

The most outspoken of the trio. Mike has no regrets about coming to UMass. He looks back on his four years at UMass as having been worthwhile. Like Dereck, Mike has heard from a few NBA teams but is taking a wait and see approach. "I am going to wait for the NBA draft but that's like a one shot thing so my hopes are not too high."

The high point of his four years was last year's Rutgers game when he threw in the winning point. "I felt pretty good for a few days after that." His major accomplishment was breaking Julius Erving's record. "I felt more relief getting it over with than breaking the record. I first thought about breaking the record after my sophomore year because I had a really good one." His only regret is that his parents were not there to see him do it. "I really wanted my parents to come up, but they couldn't since it was on a Thursday night. In all of his career his mother has seen him play only four times because she gets too excited. I really wanted her to be there."

According to Mike his four years at UMass have taught him to become a more disciplined player. "Jack Leaman is a very disciplined coach and all his players know how to run his offense and play defense."

Pyatt's best year overall was the spring of 1974 because it got warm early and everybody was hanging out. The low point of his career was during his freshman year. "When they recruited me they told me that I was going to be playing a lot. For the first couple of games I was on the J.V. team. I felt really upset about that because I felt I should have been on the varsity. That's the lowest I ever felt since I've been here." After those first two games on the J.V. team, he broke the varsity starting lineup."

Pyatt's role on the team was at times the leadership role because "Out of the three of us I felt the most outspoken on the team. I say what I feel all the time." As far as his role on the court he was looked at to score and get the loose rebounds.

WHAT HAPPENED TO THE TEAM IN '78?

"I can't figure it out myself. The season goes by so fast, that you don't have time to sit down and [illegible] about what's going on." The turning point according to Mike came after the Rutgers game. "The seniors (Alex, Dereck, Chuck) didn't take the leadership role we should have. We lost two games in a row and no one took the initiative to say "let's get ourselves together." The team also broke down in a few areas like rebounding and generally helping each other out."

ON JACK LEAMAN?

"My first few years I didn't understand his philosophy. Now I deal with him as he is. He's white, middle class, drives a Volkswagen and has a crewcut. That's the image he projects, and that's how he deals with people. "I can't knock the man, that's how he was brought up." Did Leaman try to change his game?

"Yes, he was trying to help me but I didn't see it then and I revolted against it."

Because he has had a chance to tour the country and see different life styles, Pyatt has felt no pressures as a black athlete at UMass. Coming to UMass was no cultural shock. "I could accept any kind of circumstance I'm in." He admits to having experienced racism once during his freshman year but not after that.

IS HE GLAD IT'S OVER?

"Yes I'm kind of glad. I feel that my time is over. I am definitely going to miss it, but I'm ready to do something else. I think we need to leave so that the other guys can show the talent that they have."

ON MASS:

"This school has a lot to offer, a lot of people don't realize that; academically and socially. All major colleges have a lot to offer but more so UMass because it's a more liberal school."

HOW HAS BASKETBALL AFFECTED HIS LIFE?

According to Pyatt, basketball has been good to him as far as doing things. "I get to travel. I've been halfway around the world. Being from Harlem and not coming from a well to do family you only get to read about places like Russia, Spain and England. Now I've gotten a chance to see these places."

DID PLAYING BALL TAKE AWAY FROM OTHER PARTS OF HIS COLLEGE LIFE:

"If I wasn't playing ball, I would have gotten into other things and my grades could have been better. Playing ball takes up a lot of time. If he could have played another sport he would have liked to play tennis.

Mike too is the first in his family of six to go to college. "It's going to be a big thing when I graduate even if I wasn't playing ball. It's going to make my parents proud."

WHY DID HE CHOOSE TO COME TO UMASS?

Mike was recruited by other schools but chose to come to UMass because "they told me that I could step right in. Al Skinner was leaving and I was supposed to step into his spot. Ray Wilson was the most influential person in his final decision however. "Ray Wilson was all right. My parents really like him. When I first met him, he came across as a straight A guy. I have a lot of respect for the man and his family."

ALEX:

The Jekyll and Hyde of the team. Alex is the most misunderstood of the trio. Alex is the man who added the excitement to the team for the past four years. He's the man who psyched up the crowd and came through with the clutch driving lay-ups. Unlike his image on the court, Alex is not the flashy outgoing person he is on the court. Off the court he is a completely different person. According to Alex, "It's the man's gift, I don't know what it is." He doesn't consciously make the change, it just happens. "It's not that I want to be flashy it's just how I play; it's the gift I have."

WHY DID HE CHOOSE TO COME TO UMASS:

"It was the friendliness of the people. Black, White, and Puerto Rican, they all seemed to have a smile on their faces plus the fact that Dereck and Mike were coming."

ON DERECK:

"Sometimes I think we should have separated so that Dereck would have gotten his due respect. The combination of Claiborne and Eldridge has become instinctive according to Alex. "It's always been like that in every sport we've played. We always caught on. It's more like a brotherly thing between us, we have been together since the second grade. According to Alex his role on the team was just to play and get everyone to work together. "Once I started playing it seems like everyone got in tune with me. I don't have to say anything, it seems like it just happens."

CONFLICT WITH LEAMAN:

"I don't think he ever related. It's a new era coming around and conservatism is on the way out. He wants you to talk to him but he never listens. At one point Alex considered quitting the team because "The man almost changed my style of playing. I wasn't enjoying myself. My game wasn't the same. Overall I feel that we taught Leaman a lot and he also taught us a lot. He learned how to deal with a lot of blacks. It was kind of hard from his standpoint.

According to Alex his first three years at UMass were his low points because he knew what he was capable of. "From my standpoint I achieved what I wanted this year. I wanted the assist record for the year and for a single game. My father's death set me straight. I am an only child. Now there is only me and my mother. My mother is a driving force behind me, "I love her to death."

WAS HE GLAD WHEN IT ALL ENDED?

"I felt bad, but not as bad as I should have. I was so happy that it was all over. I felt so much relief." He felt pressured as a black athlete at UMass. "They just consider us just athletes and I think there's more to me than that."

WORST YEAR AT UMASS:

"Last year when Ray Wilson left. He was the only person I could talk to."

PRESS COVERAGE

"The only complaints he had about the press was aimed against the Boston Globe. "Boston and New England have something against UMass, especially the Boston Press. It hurt so bad to lose the colonial classic. We all put up a great effort for that game to prove to the Boston press that we could play."

DOES HE THINK HE CAN MAKE IT IN THE NBA.

"I know I can play in the NBA. I'm small but I'm also quick."

WHAT HAPPENED TO THE TEAM IN 78:

"Nobody cared after a while. We lost one game and so on. Also the two week layoff hurt. We have a name for the 1978 season. "When Havoc struck." After this season I'm prepared for anything. I thought about life for three days after the Hartford Civic Center collapsed."

Since basketball took up so much time Alex did not have time for other things but if he had the time he would have liked to have been more involved with CCEBS as a counselor. "Someday I would like to get involved in counseling. I don't like to say much because I like to sit back and listen."

FEELINGS ABOUT LAST FEW GAMES:

"Being hurt the last five games really hurt me. I was in an awful mood. We had a rematch against Dusquene and I really wanted to play. I had a ball on senior night. I wish I could have grabbed everyone at the cage in one big hug. His interrelationship with the crowd was just something that happened he says. Something just happened to tick it off."

WHAT HE WOULD LIKE TO REMEMBER ABOUT UMASS:

"I'd rather remember the school and forget the ball, even though most people will always remember that. I'd like to remember the friendly people. Sometimes I like to disappear because I don't want to talk or be affiliated with basketball. I get tired of playing sometimes."

FUTURE PROJECTION OF THE TEAM:

"Next year they are going to have to work harder. I don't think it will be as much fun for them. We had a lot of fun in practice this year. We also had more freedom. At times Jack still goes back to his old tactics but we'll have to wait and see what happens. Whatever happens we are definitely the most exciting trio he has ever had. We had an exciting era." Many people I'm sure agree with him 100 percent.

DERECK CLAIBORNE:

"I never regretted coming to UMass" is how Dereck Claiborne captain of the 1977-78 UMass basketbal team looks back on his four years at UMass. "I never really thought about college while in HIgh School. When I found out that UMass was recruiting me, it was something to take advantage of."

According to Dereck, the high point of his four years at UMass was scoring his 1,000 point. "I never thought it would happen." His best year was the 76-77 season when he made 2nd team All New England. The most underrated member of the trio, Dereck has been the number two man in the backcourt combination of Claiborne and Eldridge. According to Dereck there is no jealousy because "I played behind him for eight years before that, it's no big deal. Sometimes though after having a big game and not getting his due recognition, it did bother him but he says, "It's been like that with me all of my life. Publicity doesn't mean that much to me."

For Dereck, his recognition came from his teammates when he was elected captain for the 77-78 season. Being the captain, it was his responsibility to get everyone together. He was the man that everyone looked to for leadership. "I never had any conflict with the coach, not denying that conflicts existed on the team. You find conflicts everywhere, there's no way to avoid it."

The fact that Alex scored his 1,000th point before him was just a coincidence. "It just came out that way." According to Dereck he knew how many points he needed

"A SALUTE TO THE BLACK WOMAN"

Shirley Scott (Photo by Miriam Carter)

The Third World Women's Center of the University of Massachusetts celebrated their annual Third World Women's Week by saluting the black woman.

The festivities began Friday night with a concert at the S.U.B. featuring Helen Humes, former blues singer with the Count Basie orchestra, Shirley Scott a well known organist and Miss Bessie Taylor a 94 year old black woman who was born in Amherst. These 3 black women were being saluted for their accomplishments as black women who have struggled and survived.

Helen Humes is a black woman in her late 60's who began her singing career in the 1930's with the Count Basie Band. She had the toughest job of all, filling Billie Holiday's shoes in the Basie Band. She left the Basie Band in the 1940's to do her own gigs. Helen Humes is a black woman, who without managers and agents made a big name for herself. She retired for 6 years and make her come back a few years later. Her voice despite the 6 year layoff has not lost any of its vitality and youth. She dazzled the 100 people who came out to the S.U.B. Friday night with old hits that sounded as if they had been recorded yesterday.

Another black woman taking part in the festivities was organist Shirley Scott and her trio of musicians. Miss Scott proved her mastery at the organ by putting on a fine performance. Miss Scott began her career 20 years ago. She began her career playing the piano and then advanced to the organ. She is also an excellent trumpet player.

The third black woman that was saluted was a 94 year old black woman who was born in Amherst. Miss Bessie Taylor is the oldest black woman in Amherst. She recently retired a few years ago from her lifelong profession as a nurse. The Third World Women's Center was proud in saluting all of these 3 black women who have shown the strength and abilities of black women.

before each game to reach the 1,000 point mark. "Playing basketball has taught him to relate to all people. Being a black athlete at UMass he has not felt any pressures. "UMass is not really a racist school, I could see if you were in Boston."

Dereck, who was heavily recruited by Hawaii as well as UMass says knowing all that he does about UMass he would still come here regardless. "Athletic wise, maybe I would go to another school, but educationally and socially no I don't think so." UMass is not a big time athletic school. The problem with young fellows coming out of high school is that they come out looking for the big name schools and don't think about the education which should come first."

Dereck who was the first of the trio to sign to come to UMass says that it was the people and the cage crowd who were instrumental in making UMass his first choice. Looking back on the 77-78 season he says "The main thing that hurt us was the flu epidemic. It was also Mark's first year year. We had guys who hadn't played together. When new guys have to learn a system, it's going to take awhile and it just took us too long. 1978 was the turning point, we just fell apart."

As far as the future goes, Dereck has been mentioned for the European league. He has, however, received letters from a few NBA teams. "I have just received letters from the Golden State Warriors, Philadelphia 76ers and the Los Angeles Lakers. I just want to see what happens in May when the draft come sout. I just want to be financially secure. I'll go anywhere."

If the NBA doesn't come through he'll look into Europe but he would prefer to have a job working with kids. Is he glad it's all over? "Hey yeah in a way I'm glad. Getting that piece of paper is a milestone. I'm the first one in my family to graduate from college."

Commenting on the future of UMass basketball Dereck says, "They really need to get some recruits. The new league is tough." Looking back on the cage crowd, "they really made a lot of difference. I think they make the game, they were a 10 point advantage for us."

Asked if he had learned anything from Leaman, Dereck says, "Definitely. From playing high school to college, is a big step just like from college to pro ball. I've learned a lot of fundamentals from the coach and players."

"A ONE OF A KIND FASHION SHOW"

VUKANI MAGUBANE

The Third World Women's Center put on a fashion show as a part of their Third World Women's Week. The show was true to its name, it was one of a kind.

The models did their thing while wearing some of the latest in today's fashion from such stores as the Bustop, in Amherst, the Weathervane at Mountain Farms Mall, Hit or Miss in Northampton, Male Image in Springfield, Lavene's in Springfield and Onstage at Mountain Farms Mall.

The show was divided into casual wear, evening wear and model's choice featuring the clothes that expressed the models different styles. The show was performed at the Newman Center, with food catered by Yvonne. The Third World Women's Center would like to thank Carol Aranjo, for coordinating the show and making it as professional as possible. Commentators for the show were: Sandra Cartwright and Al Efford. The models who did such a fine job were: Thenia Cooper, Karen Rockchester, Karen Nunn, Diane John, Donna Saunders, Karien Zachery, Dianne Mitchell, Carol Williams, Angela Gong, Tara Campbell, Jacqueline Robertson, Soraya Markham, Tanya Nunn, Kari Njiri, Robert Smith, Andrew Goodwin, Mario Barros and Daniels John.

Town meeting hashes over budget

By FRAN BASCHE
and SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Town Meeting last night danced a two-hour procedural jig during an obstruction attempt by some meeting members to force the $13,137,030 proposed operating budget back to the town government for more cuts.

Town Meeting is scheduled to continue Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. at the Amherst Regional Junior High School.

The three-hour meeting ran smoothly through the first 14 articles, most of which dealt with minor transfers of cash within town accounts.

All of the first 14 articles were approved by the 218 town meeting members at last night's meeting. Article 15 was the first article on the warrant dealing with the proposed operating budget.

The smoothness of the meeting ended at Article 15, which called for the amending of the Personnel By-law to include and classify new town positions. Then, all hell broke loose.

At that point, Town Meeting Member William Gersky made a motion to defer all action on Article 15 until after action had been taken on Article 5, the final article is Article 62. The town committees brought back a revised operating budget with no increase in the tax rate.

The present proposed operating budget calls for a 3.4 percent increase in the tax rate, according to John H. Peterson, Chairman of the Finance Committee.

The motion was a planned attempt, stemming from an open letter distributed by the Amherst Tax Payers Association, from some meeting members to tell the town they would not stand for an operating budget causing an increase in taxes.

The motion to defer Article 15 was approved 129-85 in a standing vote, and the article was moved, not to be considered again until much later.

The same actions followed on Article 16, the article requesting the town to adopt a comprehensive operating budget. Gersky again made a motion the article be deferred until after Article 56, and until the Town Manager, Finance Committee and the School Committee could bring back a budget calling for no increase in the tax rate.

The move seemed to take members of the Board of Selectmen and Finance Committee by surprise, and they argued against the motion receiving approval.

Selectman William C. Atkins and Roger C. Jaque supported the motion.

"You are asking," Atkins told the Town Meeting members, "that they bring a revised budget back to this meeting with no increase in the tax rate for fiscal year 1978. You are asking them to study this budget, and bring it back after dropping off $240,000 and $250,000.

Collegian office barricaded

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

About 35 supporters of separate women's pages barricaded the Collegian office early yesterday morning, making it inaccessible to Collegian staff members. Production of the Collegian was moved to a house off campus.

The barricade followed a peaceful occupation of the office Sunday evening by the protesters who voted to halt negotiations between women's pages advocates and Collegian representatives.

The protesters barricaded the main door to rooms 101-113, blocking access to other student activities offices. Staff members of Index, the Stockbridge yearbook, and Spectrum, were unable to enter their offices and the Sporting Goods Co-op was unable to open for business.

Collegian Editor-in-chief William A. Sundstrom.

University officials would not take direct action to open the office to Collegian staff. Ombudsman Robert Wellman succeeded in bringing negotiating teams together late yesterday afternoon to discuss the possibility of Collegian staffers attaining "limited access" to the offices. The protesters denied the request, stating they had nothing to gain by it.

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury would not take any further action until Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery arrives on campus today.

The group waited until every Collegian staff member had left the office early Monday morning before barricading the doors. University administrators had assured the Collegian that campus center security would be watching the protesters.

Immediately following the barricade, Collegian Women's Editor, Julie Melrose, said, "the doors will remain locked until the staff votes to accept our demands."

At 1:30 p.m. yesterday, the occupiers were served with a restraining order through a locked door by Clerk of UMass Student Courts, Barry Benson. Those picketing outside were also handed the restraining order.

Benson said the order informed the occupiers they were acting illegally by barring access to the office. "They have to open it up and comply to the laws of picketing according to the constitution," Benson said.

The Student Court action also added "that in the event this order is not complied with the Department of Public Safety, under the direction of Saul Chafin, director of security, will make any and all arrangements necessary for the enforcement of this order."

When the protesters refused to comply with the restraining order, negotiations were reopened by Ombudsman Wellman. The negotiations were between four women's pages advocates and four representatives from the Collegian. The women's supporters said they would settle for nothing less than one 75 percent ad-free page daily.

These terms, however, were not met. The negotiators then began discussion on limited access to the offices by Collegian staffers. The paper's negotiators wanted to obtain materials necessary for production.

After the negotiators brought back this proposal to the protesters, the group voted not to permit any access.

Editor-in-Chief William A. Sundstrom last night said UMass administrators will probably obtain a temporary restraining order in Hampshire County Superior Court. He said this would be an administrative action against the protesters.

"The restraining order would be to allow access to the office, not to remove the people from the office," Sundstrom said. "We want to remain as legal in our actions, as possible, we really are committed to non-violence," he said.

The negotiating teams reconvened last night with Director of Security Saul L. Chafin, as a mediator. Negotiations are expected to continue today.

Before and during the negotiations, the first floor of the Campus Center, where the Collegian offices are housed, was the scene of conflict between picketing women supporters and angry Collegian staff members. Representatives from area and regional media were also present.

'Anastasia': what might have been

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

Dowager Empress Maria Feodorovna, imperial grandmother to Anastasia Romonov, is dead. In that, there is no doubt.

Anastasia, daughter of Czar Nicholas of Russia, is said to be dead. In that, there is much to doubt.

Be they dead or alive, in Friday night's opening production of "Anastasia" at the Fine Arts Center, the two imperial highnesses were brought to life and public view once more by the University Ensemble Theater.

And taken as a whole, the play, directed by Don Boros, was at times a refreshing portrayal of Anastasia, the controversy which continues to revolve about her, and quite appropriately of an inner beauty and strength within a chillingly corrupt world.

Production begins with a short film portraying history as it has been recorded. Czar Romonov and his family together were executed during the Russian Revolution.

"Anastasia" is an exception to recorded history. This is the story of one woman's claim to the Romanov heritage — her claim to Anastasia's name and wealth. Only one other can justify her claim, the imperial grandmother.

Although the claim is a factual one, in reality the Dowager Empress grandmother died before being able to verify it. This play is of what might have been.

It is a powerful play with conflict of character and of self. It is not, however, without flaws.

"Resurrections are a severe test of faith ... ," says a slimy character, Prince Bounine, well-played by Kenneth L. Kornfield.

A patient audience cannot help but agree, as dry conversations and background lines at play's start prove to be a sure test of faith.

Prince Bounine, Chernov and Petrovin are three accomplices who take in Anastasia, not realizing her true identity, in an effort to play her as the true Romonov daughter and gain access to her great wealth.

The four make an adequate combination, but the acting and-or lack of it leaves something to be desired, and the audience in a stupor.

Dowager Empress Maria Feodorovna, played impressively by Gale Sondergaard, in the second act emerges from the dust backstage, all pompous, arrogance, and life, and sweeps things into action.

Overflowing with witty judgements and a condescending air of knowledge typifying her age and past position, she remarks to an overzealous friend, "To a woman of your age, sex should mean nothing but gender."

To the rest of the cast, the Empress' presence meant only improvement.

What follows is what is probably the play's most powerful scene — the meeting between the tough, lonely grandmother, and Anna, now grown up and much changed.

It is a tearfully moving scene to be remembered, and well worth seeing. Stacey Sparks, as Anna, draws tears from the Empress and from the audience.

Scene Three? Well, by then, if you're present, you're hooked. It proves not to be as emotionally climatic as scene two, but acting has stabilized at a good level for the unraveling of Anna and the resolution of her inner conflict.

Also not to be missed are the short scene two performances of two Russian peasants: a sleigh driver, Wasseievitch, played by Laurence J. Geddes, and a charwoman Annouchka, played by Catherine M. Orlando. Both are a joy to behold in their brief appearances on stage.

Thus, ultimately, "Anastasia" although starting slow, is witty, humorous and often beautifully touching.

With apologies to the rest of the cast, however, Gale Sondergaard, as the Dowager Empress and grandmother was the star of the evening.

Chances look better for vet school study

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

Both faculty and students think the establishment of a regional veterinary school at Tufts University will improve the chances for UMass students to be accepted to vet schools.

However, most also feel the competition will still be tight.

Last weekend, the Tufts Board of Trustees voted to establish the New England Veterinary School, the first school of veterinary medicine in the region. The school will open in the fall of 1979 with a class of 35 students.

The $31 million project will center its facilities around Tufts Medical Center in Boston, Angel Memorial Hospital for small animal clinical and Grafton State Hospital, donated by the state, for large animal facilities.

Dr. Glenn H. Snoeyenbos, UMass pre-vet advisor, said "I'm sure students are pleased with the decision."

"There are far too many qualified students, but I see no great relief in the competition," he said. "I don't expect an increase in students majoring in pre-vet."

Professor Anthony Borton of the department of animal science, said, "The Tufts decision is very exciting. It should improve students' chances, however the competition will remain.

"Requirements for admission have not been set. I imagine they will be on the same lines as Cornell and UPenn. Tufts will be overwhelmed with applicants for its first class.

"I am actively hoping that UMass will establish a mutual obligation with Tufts, in which we provide some clinical work at the Amherst campus. The most positive aspect of the decision is it will apply pressure on the legislature," Borton said.

Douglas McGarrah, legislative aide to State Senator John Olver, said, "Massachusetts will support the vet school, however the senator cannot speculate on the level of financial commitment at this time."

Dan Cook, a junior pre-vet major, said, "The school will definitely help, but I see no immediate improvement in chances. It does encourage those already in pre-vet, by many people will still be talked out of it."

Sophomore animal science major Cathy Powers said, "It will encourage people more, but the competition will still be tremendous. I wish the vet school was public instead of private. That way more seats would be open to state students. Give them some years, maybe they'll prove me wrong."

Richard Pankowski, a senior animal science major from New Jersey, said, "Although the decision won't affect me since I'm out-of-state, I don't think Tufts will make much difference the first few years, competition is very tight.

"The other vet schools, such as Cornell, UPenn, and Ohio," he said, will encourage UMass students to apply to Tufts instead. I expect the seats presently bought by the state for other schools will lapse."

Borton also speculated that seats at Cornell and UPenn will be phased out by the state.

Student raped Sunday; case under investigation

A UMass woman was raped late Sunday afternoon or early Sunday evening, a police spokesman said yesterday.

The case is still under investigation, and additional information could not be released the spokesman said.

The Collegian has learned that the woman was walking across from Whitmore in a parking lot by Southwest when she was pulled into an automobile by three men.

Health Services Nursing Director Diane Smith said no rape victim was brought to the infirmary Sunday.

UM prez candidate interviewed in Amherst

A candidate for university president was interviewed by UMass-Amherst students, administration, and faculty yesterday.

Marilyn Gittell, assistant vice president of Brooklyn University, visited the Amherst campus yesterday to be interviewed. She will be at the Worcester campus today and visited the Boston campus Sunday.

Gittell is one of the final candidates being considered for the office of university president. It is reported that she has a good chance of being offered the job because she has expressed interest in coming to the university. It is reported that some of the final candidates have not said they will come to the university if offered the job of university president.

Package stores report record weekend sales

Despite the heavy promotion of Schlitz beer at UMass this last weekend all seven Amherst-area package stores reported record beer sales and "better than usual business."

"It was the best day we've had since Halloween," said Mrs. Eugene Sokja, co-owner of Pete's package store. "We completely sold out of Miller, however, we had very few deliveries."

Four Seasons manager Caroline Dash said sales this weekend were much higher than this weekend last year. "We sold out of Schlitz bottles and Michelob cans," she said. "People were lined up to the back of the store."

A Spirit Haus employee said the store had about 300 more customers over its usual amount and lines were formed outside the store at 9 a.m.

Watroba's market brought in $1500 in beer sales, up 50 percent from normal Saturday sales, according to Peter Watroba, the owner's son. "We sold out of Miller and Bud," he said. "It's like this every Spring weekend."

"Business was fair," said Bill Russell, manager of Russel's Package store. "Well, I guess it was good," he said, "I'm never satisfied."

Numerous students reported that the package stores downtown were out of cold beer around 7 p.m. As to that, Russell refused to comment.

The manager of C&C package store refused to comment about sales at all and many of the other managers would not discuss figures because of "the extremely competitive nature of the liquor business in town."

Candidate search group holds closed session

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

The UMass Presidential Search Committee continues to hold candidate interviews behind closed-doors and the general counsel for the university says the committee is not violating the state's revised open meeting law.

A spokesman from the university said the board had not asked for any other rulings on how the law will effect the board's business. The full board will meet tomorrow at the UMass-Worcester campus.

The revision of the open meeting law was signed at the beginning of this year and provides that state school boards must hold meetings on personnel in public. Exceptions to this edict are discussions concerning honorary degrees and tenures. The law went into effect April 13.

The Presidential Search Committee has been looking for a president to replace Robert C. Wood who left the office last December. The committee has narrowed down their list of candidates to approximately eight people and are currently interviewing these candidates.

The search committee asked Searson for his opinion on the law's effect on the committee meetings.

The university spokesperson said the board has not asked for another opinion from the counsel because the law will not effect the Board at their meeting tomorrow.

"They won't be selecting a president Wednesday," the spokesman said.

The spokesman said the university did not know when the question of the law's effect on the board will be resolved. The spokesman said there were several attorneys on the board but would be aware of the legal ramifications of the law.

Search committee chairman, Stephen Breyer, said last month that the committee would not do anything illegal. Chairman of the board, Joseph P. Healey, said last week that the board has changed their by-laws to comply with the state's revision of the law.

A spokesman from the state's Attorney General's office said they have not made a formal ruling of how the revised law will effect board meetings.

UMass to worship sun in energy fest

By CINDY REGET
Collegian Staff

Wednesday is Sun Day, an international celebration of the Sun. Sun Day will be celebrated on campus with many solar oriented displays and activities.

The Amherst community and the five colleges will also join in the festivities dedicated to the sun.

The idea of Sun Day was created by Denis Hayes, a member of Worldwatch Institute, in an effort to inform the public of alternative renewable energy sources.

Worldwatch Institute is an organization of scientists and teachers dedicated to the researching alternative energy sources.

The Sun Day celebration on campus will begin at 5:30 a.m. in a sunrise ceremony on Orchard Hill.

From 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., special interest groups will sponsor information tables and exhibits on the library lawn.

Among the groups will be Future Farmers of America, Sheet Metal Workers Union, Coalition for Alternative Energy, Toward Tomorrow Fair, Dixon Energy Systems Inc. and Coalition for Environmental Quality.

The exhibits will include free bike check ups by the Amherst Bicycle Repair Collective, children's art displays and solar ovens and collectors.

Participants of Sun Day will be urged to participate in new games which de-emphasize competition. Earthfoods will plan to serve lunch outside. People will dine to the accompaniment of many local folk groups. Some featured groups are the Frumious Snatcherband and the Cliff White Trio.

Scheduled to speak at 1 p.m. on "Energy and Student Action" is Jonathan Z. Souweine, candidate for District Attorney in Franklin and Hampshire Counties.

Issac Asimov will be speaking at 8 p.m. on Solar Energy on the Metawampee Lawn in front of the Hatch.

During the day there will be demonstrations and instructions on canoeing by the Outing Club and solar oriented films are scheduled to be shown in Campus Center 101.

The Amherst community will also join in the celebration of the new solar era. Children's art is planned to be exhibited all week in local store windows.

Hampshire College plans to hold a panel discussion on Wednesday on the politics of solar energy. Thursday, Mass PIRG is scheduled to hold a workshop on "Citizen Participation in Solar Energy."

On Saturday, a solar celebration is planned to take place on the Amherst Town Commons. There will be lectures, exhibits of renewable energy sources, refreshments, and entertainment for all ages.

May Day marred by clashes

Vandals desecrated Karl Marx's grave in London and demonstrators battled police in several West European countries as workers around the world marched and rallied yesterday in observance of May Day, the international labor holiday.

In Moscow's Red Square, Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev basked in accolades while Spain marked its biggest May 1 ever and Britain its first officially recognized May Day holiday.

In Paris, leftist demonstrators at the Place de la Bastille, symbol of the French Revolution, stoned police before 1,500 of them broke away through nearby streets on a rampage of car-burning and window-smashing. Police fired tear gas, tore down makeshift barricades and arrested several young demonstrators. Six policemen and a dozen leftists were hurt.

In Milan, Italy, leftists at an outdoor rally hurled bricks at a bus filled with sympathizers of the ruling Christian Democratic Party, injuring three persons. Police dispersed the attackers.

At Pomplona in Spain's troubled north, police fired rubber bullets and smoke grenades to scatter young Basque separatists who stoned a Spanish flag. In Copenhagen, Denmark, a bomb blast at a Communist rally injured two young men,

Pyramid silent on suit; mall building continues

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Pyramid Company continues to build Hadley's Hampshire Mall as one company official yesterday refused to acknowledge a suit filed against Pyramid last week by Mountain Farms Mall trustee Charles Schnier.

The suit, filed in Northampton last Thursday, asks the court to nullify the $505,000 sale of 55.7 acres to Pyramid from Allard's Farms, Inc. Hampshire Mall is being built on that land.

Bruce Kenan, a partner in Pyramid's $5 million project — on the corner of Rte. 9 and South Maple Street — would not comment on the suit or the preliminary injunction to halt construction that Schnier will seek in Boston's Suffolk Superior Court this Thursday. He said only that they are continuing to build.

In the suit, Schnier asks the court to declare that the land owned by Pyramid cannot be used for retail stores before a deed restriction placed on that land ends in April 1979.

The restriction was placed on Allard's Farms, Inc. land surrounding Mountain Farms several years ago when Schnier bought land for Mountain Farms from Allard's.

The hearing scheduled for 9:30 a.m. Thursday will only consider Schier's request for a preliminary injunction, according to attorney Robert A. Corash of Northampton. Corash filed suit on behalf of Schnier along with Boston attorney Joel Z. Eigerman.

Corash said a preliminary injunction against construction would last until the case goes to court. Corash said that to his knowledge no date had been set for the case.

Named in Schnier's suit are Allard's Farms, Inc.; Conpar Realty, Inc., a Pyramid company; and Robert Congrel and Leonard Levine, partners in the Pyramid Companies of DeWitt, N.Y.

CAC eyes senate reorg

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

Two major proposals to alter student government and dormitory life were discussed last night by the Central Area Council.

A Student Government Association reorganization plan proposed by Adam Auster "is an attempt to make the Student Government Association more accountable to students in the areas and dormitories" said Council Co-president Cynthia Thomas.

The plan would change the senatorial system to a government with six at-large representatives for each residential area and four representatives from each dormitory.

"This is an attempt to overlap between area governments, and senate representatives," said Co-president Arthur Thomas.

The commuters and Greeks will have a proportioned number of representatives, but the formula has not been made yet.

The plan would greatly reduce the number of representatives presently in the senate.

Council Co-president Arty Thomas said, "This plan will increase the interaction between senate, house councils, and areas, and give areas more imput."

Sally Freeman's dormitory proposal was also discussed. The plan would change the present head-of-residence position to an elected or appointed assistant H.R. which will be filled by either a graduate student or two undergraduates. The house councils will be responsible for administrative duties.

Under the plan the residence assistants salaries and duties will be increased.

Representative Rich Fryer said "this proposal is bad in many ways. The undergraduates will have a hard time winning the peer respect of dormitory residents. Students need an authority figure and they won't have the same respect for a student."

Representative Jim Degnim said, "You cannot depend on students in house councils. Students are too apathetic."

Records slack on minority aid

BOSTON [AP] — A program to aid minority and disadvantaged students, which has spent $10 million in the past nine years is "obviously doing some good," but just how much good no one can tell, a legislative investigating committee says.

In a report issued yesterday, the Post Audit and Oversight Committee concluded that participating schools have failed to maintain adquate information for measuring the "efficiency and effectiveness of the program."

The studx, which took several months to complete suggested that the 29 participating schools set up uniform record-keeping procedures designed to measure the success of the program.

Since 1969, when the program was established, some $10 million has been appropriated to various state colleges and universities to provide financial assistance and support services to those considered disadvantaged.

In 1975-76 more than 7,036 students were enrolled in the program at a cost of $2.1 million.

The program provides a wide range of services, including tuition payments, counseling, tutors and field trips.

The committee found that a high percentage of those enroleed in the program are minority students — 64 per cent of those at the state college level, 63 per cent in state universities and 27 per cent in community colleges.

The committee criticized the program because "costs have not been properly segregated with the result that it is difficult to measure the state's contribution to the disadvantaged student on a per pupil basis as funded by this state program."

Co-op Day

Jerry Rogers

The Co-op Coalition has designated today Co-op Day in an effort to rally student support behind co-ops and other student run businesses. The coalition includes many organizations which students utilize on a day to day basis, such as Earthfoods, the People's Market, the Photo, Stereo and Sporting Goods Co-ops, and the Student Auto Workshop.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury recently issued a memorandum which prohibits university departments from making any purchases in co-ops. Some co-ops will not be affected at all by Woodbury's action, but others, though they will not go under stand to lose substantial revenue. The Stereo Co-op for example, estimates it will lose $3,000 per year. And the Photo Co-op and the People's Market stand to lose substantially too.

Woodbury claims the co-ops present unfair competition for area merchants. However, he does not include all the co-ops as falling under the jurisdiction of his memo and leaves out other student organizations from which services may be bought. Why is the Collegian, for instance, exempt from his memo, though it competes regularly with the Valley Advocate and Fresh Ink for advertising?

Another line the vice-chancellor would like to draw separates the Student Auto Workshop from the rest of the co-ops so university departments would still be able to utilize the student auto pool. Fortunately, it appears the SAW will stand with the co-ops, and claims it too must fall under the same regulations as other co-ops.

It is not even clear that the competition the memo seeks to prevent is a concern to area merchants. The university, however, may be concerned about the possibility of more severe competition in the future. Woodbury would like to prevent this possibility and thereby maintain the solid relationship between the university and area businesses.

The Co-op Coalition and the individual co-ops have to fight the aribitrary restrictions of the administration by having all the co-ops close today. The coalition would like all customers of co-ops to band together in Earthfoods around 11:30 today for discussions on the Woodbury memo and other related issues dealing with the survival of co-ops and their future freedom. Action may be taken by the group in five subject areas: the Woodbury memo; the issue of competition; the co-ops' right to exist; official recognition of the Board of Governors as the agency which should allocate space in the Campus Center-Student Union complex; and, whether co-ops should have to pay rent for their space in a building students already finance.

The co-ops provide many students and university staff members with valuable services and maintain low prices. Such service gives students freedom from unfair monopolies many area businesses might otherwise have. Woodbury's attempt to restrict the co-ops cannot be considered anything less than a direct attack on our own freedom and right to self-determination. Support your favorite co-op, please.

Collegian occupation

It is painfully obvious that the Collegian is operating under hardship conditions, and that this copy of the student newspaper is suffering from these hardships. Our office has been inaccessable to the staff since 3:30 a.m. Monday morning, when it was barricaded by a group of protesters demanding women's pages in the Collegian.

To address the issue at hand, the Collegian feels that we have negotiated in good faith, trying to work out a solution that was economically as well as philosophically acceptable to both sides. We also feel we have been reasonable about sit-ins and confrontations, and have done all that we can to avoid confrontations between protesters and university security officials and Collegian staff during this long and trying conflict. The barricades set up by the protesters, however, are evidence that our efforts towards a peaceful and reasonable compromise are not being met with reciprocity by the protesters, and we hope that they will allow the staff access to the office as soon as possible.

As we have stated in the past, the Collegian has no objections to protests and sit-ins that are conducted peacefully and lawfully. We do, however, object to any group violating the rights of this newspaper to print without obstruction, and to any group denying students access to a public building.

Despite any and all obstacles, the Collegian will continue to provide this university with a newspaper, and will follow any and all avenues of compromise with the protesters.

Letters

Towing a concern

To the Editor:

This is the first letter I have ever written to the Collegian. As a rule, I don't like letters to the editor because they often cause anger and alienation. The purpose of this letter though is to cause anger but not alienation. This is a call to action for anyone on campus who has a car, or has friends with cars. This letter is to communicate yet another way that "Whitmore" is attempting to put the screw on students, faculty and employees.

Several years ago, the Board of Trustees established the Parking Appeals Board to provide an impartial and informed review of ticketing and towing of vehicles on campus. The Appeals Board has the authority to void tickets and reimburse appellants for tow fees. This is done when there is proof of administrative error, police error, or extenuating circumstances. The Board is made up of three students and three employees.

Since February 24, the administration has been attempting to cut our budget in half. This would effectively cut justice in half. There are three things the administration wants to do:

First, they want to fire the present clerical assistant because the amount of money he makes is, in their eyes, too much. This is "Hogwash." The clerical assistant only gets paid for 20 hours per week, while he usually works more. If the time and wages get cut, then so does the effectiveness of the Board.

Secondly, Vice Chancellor James L. McBee [head budget cutter] wants to decrease the amount of money available for two fee reimbursements. If this budget cut goes through, then justice will not be blind, but will be determined by the dollar sign.

Thirdly, McBee wants to have the Board funded through the Parking Office. This makes little sense. The Board of Trustees said that no Appeals Board member can be affiliated with the Parking Office because of conflict of interest. It must logically follow that there is a possibility of a conflict of interest if the funding of the Board comes from the Parking Office.

If you ever have a car of motorcycle on campus you should be concerned. Next year if you get towed and the appeal is denied because of a lack of funds, don't blame anyone but Whitmore. The only way to keep the Parking Appeals Board and justice alive is to protest this budget cut. The best way is to call Vice Cancellor James L. McBee [head budget cutter] at 545-1581 and tell him "I want justice." Keep his phones ringing, or watch justice at UMass die.

Feminist actions 'oppressive'

To the Editor:

I believe that the central dogma, as it were, of feminism is equality, and its purpose is to enlighten and educate against oppression and the social myths which have contributed to the suffocation of women in our society. However, until today, my efforts to respond to what some have termed "The Women's Pages Controversy" have been frustrating and fruitless.

Something about the feminist insistence that they are acting on behalf of all University women as they made demands to the Collegian and boycotted distribution of the Collegian bothered me, although I certainly respected their right to demonstrate. It seems to me that their attitudes and tactics resemble most blatantly exactly what I thought we were fighting against. Aren't women fighting against being told what to do, say and feel, and feeling forced to compromise our individuality as a result?

I will not have any group of people, be they male or female, tell me how to think. I will not succumb to the feeling that if I do not support every feminist's beliefs that I am contributing to my own oppression. And I will not accept the compromise which is at the core of these women's demands — to accept segregation as a means of achieving adequate media representation.

While on the subject of oppression, I would like to comment on a letter which appeared in Monday's Collegian regarding Phi Sig's method of raising a possible 2000 for Muscular Dystrophy. If the women who consented to have their pictures involved in this commendable fund raiser derived satisfaction from the contest, get off their backs.

We are all individuals with individual needs and lifestyles, remember? However, I would like to suggest to the members of Phi Sig that next year they try to recruit few male contestants, in order to increase female incentive to contribute to the drive.

UMass track members crack records at Penn

By KEVIN MCCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

The nine competitors selected to represent UMass at the prestigious Penn Relays this past weekend in Philadelphia, returned to Amherst Saturday with two new entries into the school record books.

First year man Paul Derby spearheaded his way into the top ten, with a 206'7" javelin toss that broke the existing Minutemen freshman record. His performance earned 9th place in a field consisting of some of the best weightmen in the east.

Although the sprint medley team failed by a tick of the clock to advance to the finals, their preliminary effort at 3:27.1 was rewarded with inscription in the Minutemen record book. The quartet of Joe Martens (440), Mark Healy (220), Mickey Baugh (220) and Steve MacDougall (880), set the standard for future relay teams to follow.

IThe best individual performances by the relay men were witnessed in the mile and two mile relay races. Although both squads failed in their bid for track position in the finals, several athletes recorded times near or below their personal bests. In the 4x880 relay, Mickey Baugh contributed to the UMass cause with a 1:54.8 clocking in an event he usually watches from the sidelines. In the same race, teammate Bob Hunt completed the two laps in 1:56.8, easily his best effort of the outdoor season.

In the 4x440 relay, UMass track veterans Martens and Healy teamed with versatile Baugh, who was the lone Minutemen to compete in three events, and Fran O'Keefe, to register a time of 3:19.1, two seconds slower than their best effort at 3:17.

Freshman Don Dowden finished out of the scoring top five in the high jump, but continued his string of consistent first year performances with a leap of 6'8", two notches below his season best at 6'10".

The other Minuteman to weather the three day trek out of New England was steeplechaser Kevin McCusker. McCusker, in the wake of a flu that has hampered his training somewhat, finished with a time of 9:11, nine seconds away from his personal record at 9:02.

"We gave our primary scorers a chance to run against the best competition available," said coach Ken O'Brien. "At this point in the season we need competition beyond what a dual meet can provide. We accomplished our objectives as this meet sets us up pretty well for the championship calibre meets."

The first championship test of the Minutemen's strength is this Saturday at Burlington, Vermont.

S-ball team vs. SConn in Easterns

By MELISSA GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

The UMass softball team is bound for the Eastern Regionals. The Minutewomen begin their quest at 9:30 a.m. on Thursday, May 11 when they lock horns with Southern Connecticut at Stratford, Connecticut.

UMass will get a glimpse of its first round foe when they meet Southern today at 2:30 in the last home game of the year.

UMass coach Diane Thompson received the pleasant news last weekend after capturing her 50th victory as a college coach. "I feel it's an honor to be selected," Thompson said.

Forty teams applied, but only sixteen were chosen for the double elimination tournament. Eight squads play in Stratford, while the other half compete in Allentown, Pennsylvania. The winner of the Stratford tourney faces the victor of the Allentown competition in a best two out of three playoff. The surviving team heads for the Nationals.

If fourth ranked UMass advances, it may clash with familiar opponents. The maroon and white edged out second seed Springfield, 4-3, earlier in the season. Rutgers holds the top spot.

UMass, 12-5, defeated the University of Connecticut, 6-2, and split with the University of Rhode Island over the weekend.

But the playoffs are an entirely new season. In UMass' favor is the fact that it hasn't peaked yet. According to Thompson, Sue Peters is slated to start against Southern in the tourney.

Thompson said she is undecided on who to start on the mound today. The hurler will either be Peters or Trish O'Connor, who is coming off a good pitching performance on Saturday. Reliever Kathy O'Connell is not expected to see action tomorrow because of a pulled muscle in her pitching arm. Beth Collins, rebounding from two broken fingers, may see playing time at catcher.

The varsity was idle yesterday, but the jayvees were busy on the basepaths. The junior varisty swept a doubleheader against Berkshire Community College at home. The final inning made the difference in the opener as UMass won, 13-11.

The second contest was a rout with UMass emerging, 15-1

King and Enis, both freshmen, didn't place in the open event, but teamed with frosh Dan Kelly and Ed Iwanowicz to win the 480 yard shuttle hurdle relay. The same quartet also won the BC Relays shuttle hurdle title one week later. (Staff photo by Dave Rodman)

The Sports Cafe on WMUA and the retirement of Quitadamo

By STEVE ZACK
Collegian Staff

"Good evening, America and welcome to the Sports Cafe. The number to call is 545-2876," announces a gleeful A.J. Quitadamo every Tuesday evening at six on station WMUA.

The Sports Cafe is WMUA's answer to WBZ's "Calling All Sports" and "the show with the time bomb on it (The Sports Huddle)."

The show began two years ago but has been under the direction of Quitadamo, WMUA's soon to be retiring sports director, for the past year.

The largest portion of the audience comes from the Southwest area of campus and Beta Phi fraternity but Quitadamo is quick to mention that "we have gotten calls from as far as Hadley and from all sorts of people, tall, short, fat, and skinny."

Even though the station is diminutive in size, working at WMUA is not without its embarrassing moments ...

"I thought we were doing voice levels one night so I did my Redbeard (disc jockey at WCCC) impression and afterwards I found out that we were on the air."

Among the more successful guests to appear on the show have been former UM football coach Dick MacPherson, critic Jack Scott, baseball coach Dick Berquist, and members of the baseball and basketball teams.

However, the favorite target of callers has been UM basketball coach Jack Leaman. "The best controversy always surrounds Leaman and the team," Quitadamo commented.

Unfortunately, Quitadamo has been unable to secure Coach Leaman for a guest spot on the Cafe. "He (Leaman) is never available. I've tried three times to get him on the show, there's been a great demand for him by our listeners."

How does one go about getting a job with the WMUA sports department? Quitadamo explains. "People who wish to work for WMUA must first submit three resumes from any of the three national television networks and if the networks highly recommend the individual we reject him for being overqualified."

As mentioned earlier, Quitadamo will be retiring from WMUA at semester's end. "I am looking forward to my last weeks as host of the Sports Cafe with great anticipation."

Reflecting on his stay at the station, "Working at the station tends to be a frustrating experience at times. Very few of the people that work there are paid so you never know if you have an engineer or not which, I suppose, adds to the excitement of live radio, not knowing whether you're on the air or not."

As for Quitadamo's future? "Go into media? No, my experiences at WMUA have shown that the media business is not for me."

At the close of the interview, Quitadamo, knowing of the Collegian's plight with women's news mentioned that the sports department of WMUA is considering giving the women four free minutes of sports each week.

JV baseball team too late

By WALT CHERNIAK
Collegian Staff

It was just one of those days when it would have been better not to show up at all. In fact, due to pre-game confusion of different sorts, a number of the J.V. baseball players didn't show up until late, and they lost to North Adams State, 9-3 at the J.V. field yesterday.

Coach Jim Bedard's lineup, although makeshift, performed well, but the combination of cold, gusty winds and some pretty tough North Adams pitching was simply too much for the Minutemen, now 10-6-1 on the season.

Tom Grimes was pressed into duty as a starting pitcher, a situation in which he excelled last week, but he was simply ineffective, walking nine men and surrendering eight runs in the five innings he worked.

Scott Hildreth worked the final four innings for UMass, giving up a run in the ninth and allowing four bases on balls himself, running the game total to thirteen.

Meanwhile, the J.V. batters weren't having much luck at the plate, as they managed only five hits on the blustery afternoon. Chris Koperniak, who was catching his first game since Little League days and did an excellent job, drove in the first UMass run in the fourth when he doubled home Grimes, who had walked. The two-base hit was one of several fly balls which the wind played havoc with, as it sailed over the bewildered right fielder's head.

The Minutemen collected their other two runs in the seventh, as Koperniak singled, Paul Rampone and Mark Brown walked, and Ernie Goulet drilled a two-run single to left center.

North Adams came out of the chute first, and added another run in the fourth. Koperniak's double cut the lead to 4-1, but Grimes got into more trouble in the fifth, as North Adams hopped on him for four big insurance runs. Hildreth surrendered the final run in the top of the ninth.

Coach Bedard attributed the loss to the weather, which better befitted hockey than baseball, and subsequently, to Grimes' inability to get loose on the mound.

"His pitches weren't working for him," said Bedard of Grimes, who pitched an impressive complete game victory against Dartmouth last week in his first starting assignment as a collegian.

Hopefully, things will be back to normal when Mark Waslick goes to the hill this afternoon for the chilled J.V. batmen.

Linksters place fifth at Salem St. tourney

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass Men's golf team had its problems with the cold and the wind at Essex C.C., and finished in fifth place, 23 strokes behind the hosts Salem State, at the two day Salem St. Tournament played Sunday and Monday.

The Minutemen, who were coming off a 16 stroke victory over Sienna College on Friday, finished with 659 aggregate. Providence College, leaders after the first round of competition, finished second, four shots back of Salem St. at 640. URI placed third at 643, while Amherst College wound up fourth, one stroke ahead of the Minutemen at 658.

The scores were very high for the tournament, as strong winds, sometimes gusting up to 40 MPH, and bitter cold made Essex, a tough old course, even more challenging.

The low medalist for the tournament was Gary Sikes of Providence, who managed to put together a 75,76, 151 total. Paul Littlejohn of Salem State finished second at 77,75,152, while Matt Zito of Providence wound up third at 74,80,154.

The low scorer for the Minutemen was Victor Lahteine, who finished with a pair of 79's for a 158 total. Lahteine managed his first 79, despite having to use a one iron for a putter for the last 15 holes of his round.

Rounding out the UMass scoring, team captain Jim McDermott, who fired a two-under-par 70 in the match against Sienna, finished 80,79,159, Chuck Dempsey wound up 85,86,171, Mary Hunt went 84,87,171 and John Lien finished 85,87,172.

The match was a 36 hole contest, with the best four of five scores counting each day.

The task ahead for the Minutemen will be to regroup for the New Englands, the biggest tournament of the year for the Minutemen, which will be played Thursday and Friday at the always tough Yale C.C. in New Haven.

Faculty to picket Whitmore today

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Several hundred faculty members today at noon are expected to picket the Whitmore administration building and stage a march through campus to express dissatisfaction at progress in current contract negotiations.

Joining the faculty will be representatives from the Graduate Student Employees Union.

The dissatisfaction over contract talks stems in part from a breakdown in the talks which occurred April 24 when administration negotiators walked out of talks after faculty representatives refused to accept a proposal on personnel policies.

About 30 faculty members last night held a "picket party" in Herter Hall. They snacked on wine, and cheese and crackers while they made signs to carry today, discussed strategy, and called other faculty members to ask their support.

UMass Director of Security Saul L. Chafin yesterday refused comment on what security measures he was planning for today's demonstration.

The Massachusetts Society of Professors also voted last Friday to send representatives to a University trustees meeting at UMass-Worcester, in addition to picketing Whitmore.

"Some people have volunteered to go," said John Bracey, MSP vice-president for internal affairs last night, "but we don't know how many yet."

The MSP last February staged a demonstration at Memorial Hall during a trustee meeting to protest not receiving a 2½ percent pay raise granted by the state legislature to all state employees. The administration has said the raise must be negotiated as part of a final contract.

"Last time, we had about 150 people," Bracey said. "Judging from faculty response, we'll have at least that many this time. It'll be a nice day, too."

Graduate Student Employees Union co-Chairman Brad Klein said 10-15 representatives from his group would be marching in a show of support for campus unions.

"We surely support the MSP," Klein said. "We would support any job action they would take."

Following the break-in talks last Monday, administration negotiators said they would resume the talks when the faculty union said it was ready to do so. An official with the Massachusetts Teachers Association, a group the MSP is affiliated with, last night said the union said it was ready to resume the negotiations, but that offer was refused.

"We're not going to come crawling back on our knees," Jack Poladari said. "The ball's in their court now."

Ed-in-chief appeals to trustees

WORCESTER — the Massachusetts Daily Collegian editor-in-chief today is urging the University Board of Trustees at their meeting here to instruct campus administrators to provide Collegian staff access to their office which has been barricaded since Monday morning.

More than 50 protesters, mostly women, have occupied the Collegian office in the basement of the Campus Center and demanding the paper allocate pages for women's news.

Trustee Chairman Joseph P. Healey could not be reached last night to comment about the Collegian statement to be issued during the monthly board meeting at the medical school campus here. Another student group, Students United for Public Education, plan to bus students to the meeting for a half-hour presentation protesting state plans of reorganization of public higher education.

Negotiations between Collegian and women representatives resume for the seventh time today to seek an agreement that would end the occupation.

Women's Editor Julie Melrose, one of those occupying the office, said the women feel they are developing good rapport with the Collegian representatives and hope to keep the communications open.

She did not wish to comment about the Collegian statement to the trustees.

Collegian Editor-in-Chief William A. Sundstrom last night said he is appearing before the board to tell its members about the situation of the Collegian and to express dissatisfaction with the lack of action by campus administrators to help Collegian staff gain access to their office.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, chief administrator at the Amherst campus, last night said he believes he has "done the right thing" during the occupation of the Collegian office.

The people occupying the office are demanding the Collegian provide one page a day with no more than 25 percent advertisements. The women's staff would have total editorial control of the contents. Collegian negotiators have not agreed to granting pages, but rather guaranteed column inches.

The protesters occupied the office Sunday night while the paper was being composed and later barricaded the doors to prevent staff from entering the office Monday morning. All the Collegian production equipment and advertising copy was locked in the office with the protesters, forcing the Collegian staff to produce a smaller paper in off-campus locations.

Bromery told Collegian representatives at a meeting yesterday morning they should exhaust all possible channels of negotiations before requesting him to seek a county court injunction to gain access to the office.

Bromery said he wants to delay seeking an injunction because once a court is involved he would have no authority in how the court proceeds to gain the access.

Bromery also met with a faculty-administration advisory committee which also discouraged court action.

The Collegian has been using typewriters provided by staff and other students, and its regional and national news and photos have been provided by the Greenfield Recorder newspaper.

A Collegian Board of Editor's decision to allocate four ad-free pages a week for women's news was defeated by Collegian staff two weeks ago. The editors had granted the pages after the Undergraduate Student Senate threatened to cut-off the Collegian budget and 75 women had occupied the Collegian office, forcing production off-campus.

Police seek two men for weekend rape

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Amherst police yesterday released a police artist's sketch of two men who they say raped a woman Saturday.

Police said two men driving a late model, mid-size, 4-door sedan Saturday forced a woman into their car near the intersection of Massachusetts Avenue and North Pleasant Street. "They then drove to a wooded area and raped her," a police spokesman said.

There were unconfirmed reports yesterday that a second rape occured, possibly on campus, at about the same time the first occurred. Those reports could not be confirmed.

Amherst police refused to comment on the report. UMass Director of Security Saul L. Chafin yesterday said he had not been briefed on either case yet.

One suspect in the confirmed rape case was described by police as a white male, 20-25, roughly five-and-one-half feet tall, and weighing about 145 lbs. Police said the suspect has brown hair, brown eyes, and a "big nose" with freckles on it.

The other suspect in the case was also described as being a white male, 20-25, about six feet tall, and with a heavy build between 250-275 lbs. Police said he had blonde shoulder length hair, freckles on his face, and was "very fat with a flat face."

The annual "Schlitz-a-rama" was being held in the same area at the same time the woman was forced into the car, but it was not known if the two assailants had been attending the event or if the two had any connection with it. Several thousand persons attended the event, which featured live bands and large quantities of beer.

Hillel group sponsors Holocaust remembrance

By MARIA MESSITT
Collegian Staff

To commemorate the six million Jews killed by the Nazis during World War Two, UMass' B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation, and Zionist Alliance will sponsor Holocaust Rememberance Day Thursday.

Workshops, films, discussions, photography exhibits, and music dealing with the personal and societal effects of the Holocaust will be on the agenda. The idea is to offer information, and raise people's awareness of the Holocaust, said a Hillel member.

Harriet Parker will give a workshop on "Sharing the Effects of the Holocaust on Our Lives Today," tonight at 7 in Campus Center room 803. Parker, who received a Ph.D in Education from UMass, has for the past five years been active in groups dealing with oppression of Jews, and has done related counseling.

A multi-media program including a photography exhibit, music, information, and a documentary film, will be held Thursday, May 4 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Student Union's Cape Cod Lounge. The French documentary film, "Night and Fog", dealing with concentration camps, will be shown continuously all day.

Maximillian Lerner will lead a discussion on "The Human Spirit and the Holocaust" at 3:30 p.m. Thursday in the Cape Cod Lounge. Lerner, who escaped from Europe during World War Two, has spent the last thirty years traveling around the world lecturing on the Holocaust. Lerner will be available throughout the day for personal discussions.

"The Diary of Anne Frank", the 1959 film based on a Pulitzer Prize-winning play, will be shown on Thursday at 7 p.m. in Thompson 104. It is based on an actual diary written by a young Jewish girl, who for two years hid with her family in an Amsterdam attic in Nazi-occupied Holland. The film is free.

Hillel members said they feel it is everyone's responsibility to learn what the Holocaust was, and who it affected. They said they feel the workshops and discussions are necessary to give people a chance to reflect on what happened.

Judaic Studies major and Hillel member Avi Lev said he feels people must be made aware that the Holocaust happened in a modern society. It set a precedent, he said, and could happen anywhere, at anytime.

The most frightening thing, said Lev, is that the Holocaust was carried out in a bureaucratic and detached manner, not by psychotics and murderers, but by average people.

Smith, Amherst, and Hampshire College will also sponsor Holocaust Remembrance Day activities.

Smith College will offer a service, and lecture entitled "Personal Reflections on the Holocaust; Living the Life of Anne Frank", today at 4:30 p.m. in Nielson Library. Hampshire College Professor Hedy Rose will deliver the lecture.

Amherst College will hold an ecumenical service Thursday, at 5:30 p.m. in Chapin Lounge.

Hampshire College will hold a discussion on the Holocaust Thursday at 3:30 p.m. and a memorial service at 5 p.m. Both events will be in Emily Dickinson Hall, room 17.

Mount Holyoke College has no Holocaust-related activities planned.

'Carter's peace plan flawed'

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

"It is inconceivable how President Carter's plan to sell weapons and planes to Saudi Arabia will promote peace in the Middle East," said Executive Director of the Social Democrats Carl Gushman.

"The Social Democratic party is not a political party, but a political organization working within the democratic party," Gushman explained. Gushman spoke about the United States and the other Mid-Eastern countries' role in Mid-East peace at a meeting last night sponsored by the UMass Zionist Alliance and the Social Democrats.

Gushman said Carter's comprehensive peace program with the aim of all the nations involved in a compromise at a Geneva conference has one major flaw. "You have to bring all the opposing parties together, and it was falsely assumed that Syria and the Palestinian Liberation Organization would reconcile with Israel," he said.

Gushman said, "The United States voiced that the issue is not Israeli territorial concessions, but the recognition of Israel as a state." Although Sadat did go to Israel and recognized Israel as a state, the P.L.O., Syria, Lybia and other Mid-East countries do not, he said.

"President Carter agreed to sell Saudi Arabia the planes because Saudi Arabia threatened to cut off oil supply to the U.S.," Gushman said. M.I.T. Professor M.A. Adleman proposed a simple plan to reduce conflicts like this, he said.

The United States could have sealed bids for oil purchasing and this way the oil producing countries could fight among themselves, Gushman said.

"President Carter would not do this because he feels it will offend Saudi Arabia," he added.

The Social Democrat policy advocates a separate but divided peace. Gushman said he favors a settlement with Jordan on the west bank, because "without Egypt the other Arab countries will not go to war," he said. "There will not be war, and because of this there will be an evolution of peace," he added.

Gushman said, "President Carter had completely reversed his stand on Mid-East affairs."

'Harassment' closes co-ops

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

Student run co-ops in the Student Union and Campus Center closed their doors early yesterday morning as part of a protest of "administration harassment," according to signs posted on co-op doors.

Because of federal stipulations, the Student Federal Credit Union remained open, but a sign posted on their door expressed sympathy with their protest.

The shut down was part of "Co-op Day", a celebration intended to "educate people to the plight of the co-ops," according to Stereo Co-op President, Richard A. Dimambro.

Recently, a UMass administration policy preventing University departments from purchasing goods or services from the co-ops aggravated an already tenous relation between the Co-op Coalition, a group representing most of the co-ops, and the Campus Center management headed by William H. Harris.

A meeting between eight co-op members and Assistant Director of the Campus Center, Bud Wilkes, capped the Co-op Day festivities.

According to Coalition member, Malcolm Quint, Wilkes responded positively to the ideas of a contractual relation between co-ops, the Board of Governors and the administration.

Fire strikes Mackimmie

Residents of MacKimmie House were evacuated for about 20 minutes early yesterday morning after smoke from a fire of suspicious origin filled the lobby of the Southwest dormitory.

The Amherst Fire Department responded to a 2:59 a.m. alarm with four engines, but MacKimmie residents had already used a fire extinguisher to put out the burning fringes of the backing to two vacant telephone outlets.

A concrete partition separates the adjacent outlets.

A spokesman from the News Bureau said yesterday that state police had been called in to investigate. Twice earlier this semester, the dorm was the scene of two trash fires, both of suspicious origin.

Pre-reg. forms due today

Pre-registration forms for Fall semester classes are due before 5 p.m. today at the registrar's office in the Whitmore administration building.

A supervisor in the Whitmore office yesterday said the office had only received 3,500 of the possible 16,000 forms.

Marion Markwell also said students face a $5 late fee if their forms are not turned into the registrar's office today.

Bowie Kuhn to speak

Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn will speak tomorrow on "Baseball — A Five-Year Perspective," at 7:45 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium.

The free lecture is the last in a series sponsored by the UMass Sports Management Program.

Kuhn did his undergraduate work at Franklin and Marshall College and at Princeton University, where he received his B.A. with honors in 1947. He studied law at the University of Virginia, where he received his LL.B. degree in 1950 and was an editor of the law review.

After law school, Kuhn joined the law firm of Wilkie, Farr and Gallagher of New York City, where he did legal work for baseball's National League. He was elected commissioner of baseball in 1969, and elected to his second term in 1975.

Asinov to speak

Dr. Isaac Asimov, science fiction writer and author of over 160 books, will speak on "Solar Energy" tonight at 8 p.m. at Metawampee Lawn.

Asimov has been called "the nearest thing to a human writing machine" for his prolific writing. I, Robot, Fantastic Voyage, and the Foundation Trilogy are examples of his science fiction. He has led people through the universe — almost literally — with books on the stars, the solar system, Jupiter, and a book entitled The Tragedy of the Moon. Other works include an encyclopedia of science and technology and books on the physical and biological sciences.

Although primarily known as a science author, Asimov has also written mysteries, guides to the Bible and to Shakespeare, a book of humor and The Sensuous Dirty Old Man.

Born in Russia, Asimov became a naturalized U.S. citizen in 1928. He is an associate professor of biochemistry at Boston University. He has won the Westinghouse science-writing award. As to his success as a writer, Asimov describes himself as ".... the beneficiary of a lucky break in the genetic sweepstakes."

The lecture is sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Angry students plan to address Trustees

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

Students United for Public Education will have a limited time period to make their presentation at today's board of trustees meeting and will not be able to open the meeting to any interested students as they had wished to according to student trustee Bob Dion.

The board is meeting today at the UMass-Worcester campus.

In an open letter to the board last week, the students claimed they had asked for an open meeting with the board but had only received a scheduled half hour to make a presentation. The organization opposes Secretary of Education Paul L. Park's plan for centralizing state higher education in Massachusetts.

Dion said "the board doesn't want to spend the time, there are a lot of things the board has to do at this meeting. The board will have a very negative attitude if SUPE tries to extend their deadline."

Dion said he thinks the organization will try to open the meeting anyway to allow interested students a chance to address the board. Members of the organization could not be reached last night for comment.

Representatives of the Massachusetts Society for Professors will also be present at the meeting to protest the way labor negotiations are progressing between faculty and the University. The society voted to send representatives at their meeting last Friday. (See related story, page 1)

Both SUPE and the MSP have complained that the trustee meeting has been changed from the Amherst campus to the Worcester campus, making it difficult for them to gain access to the meeting. Chairman of the board Joseph P. Healey last Monday claimed that the meeting had been scheduled for Worcester from the beginning and was not changed from Amherst.

The board will also be addressed by Collegian Editor-in-Chief William A. Sundstrom. Sundstrom said he wants to make the board aware of the situation concerning the takeover of Collegian offices.

The board will hear a report from the Student Affairs committee on the possibility of exempting juniors from mandatory dorm housing. Dion said the Student Affairs committee and the Budget and Finance committees have met and discussed junior exemption. Dion said the chances of juniors being exempt is "good".

Other committees addressing the board will be the Long Range planning committee and the Budget and Finance committee. The presidential search committee will report to the board on the developments of the search for a university president.

Meeting talks taxes

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

There may be more surprises in store from the Amherst Tax Payers Association at tonight's reconvened annual town meeting when discussion begins again on the budgetary Articles 15 and 16.

The annual town meeting is scheduled to reconvene at 7:30 tonight at the Amherst Regional Junior High School.

Monday night's meeting was highlighted by a motion to defer all action on the proposed town budget until town officials bring back a new budget calling for no increase in the tax rate.

William Gurski, the treasurer for the Amherst Tax Payers Association and the person who made the initial motion to defer action on Article 15, said last night he hoped the meeting would not be forced into an item-by-item discussion of the proposed budget.

"Tomorrow (tonight) I'm just going to sit back and observe," he said. "But I hope we don't have to go through an item-by-item discussion of the budget."

Gurski would not comment on whether the taxpayers association had any other plans to stall action on the recommended budget.

Gurski said he hoped a compromise package would develop which would allow the budget to be sent back to the town officials so they can make the cuts in the budget.

"That's what the Town Manager was hired to do, and what the Board of Selectmen were elected to do," he said. "Believe me, they know where those cuts can be made."

Gurski said there has to be cuts of around $270,000 from the recommended operating budget of $3,921,919. The recommended budget calls for a $1.50 hike on the Amherst tax rate, which is a 3.4 percent increase over last year.

The first motion to defer came on Article 15, which recommended amendments to the Personnel By-law to create three new town positions and classify others.

A stunned and seemingly confused Town Meeting voted 129-85 to defer all action on Article 15 until near the end of the 62-article warrant.

Gurski made the same motion before Article 16, calling for the Town Meeting to defer all action on the article calling for the town to adopt a comprehensive budget for fiscal year 1979.

At this point, three selectmen and Town Manager A. Louis Hayward argued town meeting was turning away any power it had over the budget-making process.

Selectmen Roger C. Jacque and William C. Atkins were the only members of the board to lend support to the motion to defer.

The motion to defer action on Article 16 was defeated 108-107, only two votes away from turning the budget back to the Town Manager, School Committee and Finance Committee.

Prior to discussion on Articles 15 and 16, town meeting approved the first 14 so-called "housekeeping articles". These articles included transfers of minor sums of money from within the towns departments.

House defeats bottle bill; Harrington's vote decisive

BOSTON [AP] — The Massachusetts Senate, with its president, Sen. Kevin B. Harrington, casting the deciding vote, split down the middle yesterday and defeated the mandatory-deposit bottle bill.

It was the second year in a row the Senate killed the controversial measure. The latest version of the bill had cleared the House last month by a 10-vote margin.

Designed to discourage the use of throwaway cans and bottles, the bill would have imposed deposits of a nickel or dime on nearly all beverage containers. Beacon Hill debate of the measure centered on whether the bill would destroy more jobs than it might create in the state's bottling industry.

The Senate voted 20-20 on the bill with Harrington waiting until the end of the roll-call to cast his negative vote, denying the measure the bare majority it needed to stay alive.

The Salem Democrat, as the Senate's presiding officer, rarely votes except on closely contested issues but had said last week he intended to kill the measure if his vote proved decisive.

Before voting on the entire measure, the Senate debated whether to sweeten the bill by adding an amendment calling for a non-binding referendum this fall on the bottle question.

A few uncommitted senators had indicated they might support the measure if it contained such a provision.

However, the amendment failed by the same 20-20 margin with Harrington again providing the key negative vote.

The amendment had been endorsed by the Senate Ways and Means Committee, with Committee Chairman James J. Kelly, D-Oxford, predicting an advertising campaign for the referendum would pump $2 million to $4 million of out-of-state money into the Massachusetts economy.

Kelly alluded to a 1976 referendum on the bottle bill, in which national can and bottling companies reported spending more than $1 million to defeat the proposal. The deposit measure failed in that test by about 20,000 votes.

Several legislators objected to Kelly's argument, complaining that a new referendum would impose too great a hardship on the bottle industry.

Senate, MSP discuss rights

By CINDY REGET
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate tonight plans to discuss a platform of negotiations with the Massachusetts Society of Professors, and the proposed budget for the fiscal year 1979-80.

Jay Martus, senator, plans to propose a list of nine "student rights" which are scheduled to be voted on by the senate. These student rights deal with the withholding of grades and the picketing of commencement by the faculty personnel.

If the list is accepted by the senate, it will be presented to the Massachusetts Society of Professors for approval. Members of the Massachusetts Society of Professors will be present at the senate meeting to answer questions and to discuss the proposal.

Budget allocations for Recognized Student Organization groups are planned to be discussed and voted on by the senate. This budget is funded by Student Activities Tax Fund dues which total $1,266,339.00. Eighty-five percent of the budget goes to the funding of the Student Senate Bus Service.

Bob Dion, co-president of the senate, said he expects the student rights proposal will be given the senate's full support. "If these rights are not approved by the Massachusetts Society of Professors," he said yesterday, "then the students will take steps to negate the actions made by the M.S.P."

Inside the makeshift newsroom

By DOROTHY A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

The hardwood floors don't quite make it as suitable typewriter tables and the kitchen is a bit cramped to serve as a newsroom, but Collegian staffers continue to turn out UMass' daily newspaper.

Operating from the private home of two Collegian staff members is a great inconvenience to paper production and a strain on the staffers but the conditions have brought them closer together.

Assistant News Editor Beth Segers said, "I think it's fun but tempers are wearing thin. It's hard to expect the Collegian to publish a normal paper when we're working under abnormal conditions. The big thing is phones and the lack of communications to the outside," she said.

The makeshift newsroom contains only one phone.

Above the repetitive tapping of typewriter keys, editors give instructions to their staff members while the stereo constantly plays.

Amid the crumpled paper of rejected first pages, staff members sit on floors, chairs and couches, editing stories, and laying out Collegian pages.

"While working in these somewhat cramped quarters brings the staff closer together, physically if not emotionally," said sports writer Steve Zack, "I still feel that the Collegian office is the proper place for the newspaper's production — but not the only place. We can put the paper out anywhere if we have to."

The Collegian staff members involved in the past two nights of production were much in agreement.

"I feel we shouldn't have to be here," said Paula Strollo of the Collegian Graphics department. "At least there is a certain amount of dedication from the staff. After you get over the initial anger anything is funny. The enjoyable part is that it seems to bring everyone closer together," she said.

Although yesterday's Collegian had fewer pages than originally planned and today's is no exception, Assistant News Editor Christopher Schmitt says he feels the quality of the paper has remained consistent.

"Obviously it is a hassle to produce off campus," said Schmitt. "Space is tight and we don't have the facilities to produce as we normally would," he said.

"Generally I don't think the quality of the Collegian has been hurt. We're doing fine under constraints," he said.

Advertising representative Dave Perlow said, "Our advertisers don't really know what is going on and we don't really know what to tell them. I think it's good the paper is still functional, despite the fact that we don't have an office," he said.

Layout technician and ex-Sports Editor Judy Van Handle said, "I think it's a great inconvenience to all concerned. It is an infringement on our right as students who pay the activities fee to be denied the use of our facilities."

Because the staff members have been unable as yet to gain entry to the Collegian office, certain portions of the paper are not publishable. These include most notices, classified advertisements, comics, and Black Affairs.

Black Affairs staff member Terrell Evans said, "I'm not sure if we're not able to publish or don't want to publish. We haven't met as a group to decide where our sympathies lie.

"We are possibly looking toward printing on Friday," Evans said. "We'll have a meeting before any concrete decisions are made."

"I've had approximately six hours of sleep in the past three nights," said Brad Goverman. "It's also an emotional strain. I've been a staff member for three years. It's a shame to see people I've worked with become so separated on both a personal and ideological level.

In Easthampton slayings

Jury convicts Harris

WORCESTER [AP] — Herman L. Harris showed no emotion yesterday as he was found guilty of triple murder in the gunshot killings of his mother, his sister and an elderly man, then sentenced to five life prison terms.

Harris, 50, of Virginia Beach, Va., was convicted after about five hours of deliberations by a Worcester Superior Court jury. The two women and 10 men returned guilty verdicts on all seven counts brought against the career Navy veteran.

Defense lawyer Elio Bellucci immediately said he would appeal the convictions for the March 1977 deaths of Harris' mother, Velma P. Kulis, 69; his sister, Mozelle J. Evans, 47; and George Healey, 77, a boarder at the Kulis Home in the western Massachusetts town of Easthampton.

The jurors found Harris guilty of driving from Virginia on March 19, 1977, shooting his victims in a family dispute over $30,000, and returning home. He apparently took his 7-year-old daughter with him on the trip.

Harris' mother had filed a lawsuit against her son several weeks before the slayings, accusing him of taking the money from her under false pretenses and refusing to return it.

Harris also was found guilty of assault with a dangerous weapon and attempted murder in the shooting of his 20-year-old niece, Deborah A. Evans, who survived a severe head wound.

After a brief recess, Judge John J. Moriarty imposed mandatory life sentences on each murder count, meting out two other concurrent life terms on counts of aggravated burglary and assault in a dwelling house, a 15-20 year term on the attempted murder count and 7-10 years for assault with a dangerous weapon. Harris was ordered to serve his sentences at the maximum security Walpole state prison.

Harris' wife, Della Marie, also was outwardly emotionless as the verdicts were read and sentences imposed. She had been treated at Worcester City Hospital Monday night after she suffered chest pains while waiting in the courthouse lobby during jury deliberations.

The verdicts were returned about an hour after jurors resumed their work yesterday morning.

During the four-week trial, a state police firearms expert testified that bullets used in the killings definitely were handmade in a bullet-making mold owned by Harris. Authorities never recovered the murder weapon.

Harris, testifying in his own defense, said he had gone to the Easthampton house on the night of the killings, but insisted the residents all were in good health when he left.

Miss Evans, who suffered some memory loss as the result of her wound, told the jury she recalls letting Harris into the house, then hearing shouts and screams.

State senators speak on abortion funding

By BRYANT M. JORDAN
Collegian Staff

In the Massachusetts House of Representatives today, anti-abortion and pro-choice forces can be expected to prepare for another fight over whether or not state tax money should be used to fund abortions.

Due for debate on the House floor will be the long-awaited state Medicaid budget appropriations bill, and attached to it is an anti-abortion provision that would end the use of Medicaid funds for abortion. The provision, tacked on last week by the House Ways and Means Committee, appears in the budget bill four times.

Rep. Charles Doyle, D, W. Rox, one of the orginal proponants of anti-abortion legislation in the House, said the Committee added the amendments last week after he and Rep. Raymond Flynn, D-Bos., said they would add it when the bill came to the House floor, anyway.

In three previous attempts by anti-abortionists to halt state payments for abortion, both the House and the Senate passed the legislation. However, Governor Michael S. Dukakis vetoed two of the bills outright, while he line-vetoed that part of the bill which dealt with abortion, in accordance with a positive ruling by the state Supreme Court.

The bill in question at that time was one intended to grant a pay raise to state workers. But opponents of abortion in the House attached the anti-abortion "rider" to the bill in the belief that the governor, after receiving the bill once it passed the House and Senate, would have no choice but to sign it into law due to the tremendous pressure on the part of state workers for the raise.

Dukakis, however, was firmly opposed to the anti-abortion provision and said he would veto the entire bill if necessary. He then appealed to the state Supreme Court to decide if he could legally veto the amendment only. The Court ruled in favor of a "line veto" in this case on the grounds that the amendment had nothing to do with the main purpose of the bill.

The governor's most recent veto of legislation containing anti-abortion provisions came last week, on April 25, when he vetoed a bill intended to increase the state's share in paying for its employees' health insurance payments. The bill, introduced by Flynn, would have prohibited anyone insured under the state's group health policy, or their dependants, from using the plan to pay for abortions.

In vetoing the bill, Dukakis said:

"The time to debate the issue of public funding of abortion is when a bill in that subject is before the Legislature and not when completely unrelated matters are being considered."

Doyle, who last year introduced into the House a petition of the Massachusetts Citizens for Life which would prohibit the use of tax money to fund abortion, is one of the most outspoken anti-abortionists in the House.

"The pro-abortion element is the most contemptuous element in society," he said. "People who vote anti-abortion know that abortion is the killing of an unborn child.

"Doctors can detect a heartbeat fifteen days after conception," he continued, adding, "Those who vote pro-abortion are either ignorant or just being expedient."

Doyle disagrees with Dukakis that an end of public funding of abortion would "create two classes of citizens: one with the right to choose an abortion and another that is effectively denied that right." Without explaining how it applied, Doyle said that the June 20, 1977 U.S. Supreme Court ruling that neither the Constitution nor Federal law dictated that a state must use Medicaid funds for elective abortions guarded against such a situation.

"To me," Doyle said, "the issue is a moral one."

To Senator Denis L. McKenne, D-Middlesex, the issue is not one of morality but of human rights. He says he has no religious feelings shaping his view of abortion; he believes, simply, that the fetus is a human being and is, therefore, "entitled to all the rights of one."

"When the doctors can say that everything's fine, that it's not a living child, then I would change my mind," he said.

But one senator who doesn't believe anyone in either the House of Senate will change their minds or votes on abortion is John W. Olver, D-Amherst. Olver, who has continually voted against all anti-abortion legislation, says the abortion issue is an anathema.

"There is a sense of rectitude" among the anti-abortion majority in the Legislature, he said.

"There attitude is this: 'Hey, we're in the majority; why don't you give it up?" he said.

Olver said that even in the senate, where Dukakis still has enough votes to have his vetoes sustained, the anti-abortionists are in the majority. The danger to public funding of abortion, he said, may come when some senators feel that they can no longer, "in good conscience," sustain a veto of an important bill because of an anti-abortion amendment attached to it.

For this reason, the Medicaid budget appropriations bill, which will also fund aid to the blind, the elderly, and other disadvantaged people, could mean trouble for pro-choice forces.

However, Olver said many of those who vote anti-abortion are conservatives who never wanted to pay for state medical care in the first place.

If it came to it, Olver said, the anti-abortionists would have "less qualms" about not getting the budget through at all.

When asked why the anit-abortionists can't make the anti-abortionists understand the importance of public funding of abortion, Olver said "no one is going to change their mind on the issue."

"If pro-choice groups don't start seeing this thing on a political level, and realize that it's who is sitting in the Legislature that counts," he said, "this is going to continue to be an issue.

"To borrow a phrase from the environmental people awhile ago, Olver said, they're going to have to get out of office 'The Dirty Dozen' or so who are keeping this issue going."

Jean Weinberg, head of the state affiliate of the National Abortion Rights Action League, said the strategy is to wait to see what happens when the bill gets to the Senate. If it passes there and the governor vetoes it, as she said she is certain he will, then the House will get the message that there is just no way the anti-abortion legislation is going to get through.

Downfall of the faculty union?

By JON HITE

A serious question is being raised across campus: "Will the faculty cause the downfall of their own Union?"

Last week's decision by the Massachusetts Society of Professors to withhold student grades this semester, as a show of unity against the University, may backfire and lead to the downfall of their hard-working but sometimes unrealistic union.

A small sampling of faculty members during the last two days has revealed that opposition to withholding grades transcends the student body and runs deep within the faculty itself. While students feel a deep resentment to having their grades used as tools of political leverage in an effort to get the administration back to the bargaining table, some faculty members are equally upset that their colleagues would hold student grades for ransom. One faculty member stated that she was "not going to punish my students for the administration's inability to negotiate in good faith."

"I expect that my students will come to classes, participate in discussions and do their homework," another faculty member said. "Those are my terms, and the students can expect that I'll come to class with something to say and grade them fairly. And I intend to grade them," he said.

Faculty negotiators have become more convinced over the past few months that the University is trying to stall the collective bargaining negotiations initiated last year when the faculty, by a clear but far from overwhelming majority, voted the MSP as their collective bargaining agent. Since that time the negotiations have wallowed in petty conflicts and major bargaining differences. Both sides, of course, continue to blame each other for the delays. Finally, last week the University's negotiating team walked out of the bargaining sessions and it is expected to be some time before the torn fences are mended and the two sides get back to the business of negotiating a contract.

The angry feelings displayed by the MSP are understandable. In the last fourteen months, since voting to go union, the MSP has tried to both negotiate a contract and reassure its membership that they are getting something accomplished. As a Union member put it, "We've got to hold our political base and get a good contract for our membership. It's not easy, but until last week we were making headway."

Unfortunately, the grade withholding scheme may work to weaken the MSP in the eyes of its membership. The feeling of understanding between faculty and students has never been stronger, but it has its limits. The action of the MSP in urging its members to hold back on turning in students grades has begun to have a negative effect on students, and this may act as a catalyst to other faculty members to rethink their support for the Union's position.

Student reaction ranges from a feeling that the faculty pronouncement is "a bluff" to this angry response from a student who is transferring out of UMass: "If they (the faculty) withhold my grades and screw up my chances to get into Columbia, their asses will be in court real soon," he said. Some students sympathize with the MSP but don't understand why they should suffer for the bargainers' disagreements. It's not my problem although I support the teachers," one woman stated, "but I don't think my parents are going to understand."

Many faculty members involved in the Union don't feel that they are getting the support from the general faculty that they need to bring their contract talks to a close. There is even the feeling that many faculty members would, if given the chance to do so today, vote against the MSP. This reaction is not shocking considering that last year's hopes for a speedy negotiating period have given way to slow and deliberate negotiations by both sides. Faculty are becoming disenchanted with the stagnation of the negotiations and are unsure as to how they should channel their frustration.

The worst thing that the union could do would be to alienate their membership by voting an emotional solution to the problem. Not only would they be losing the support of the student body, the faculty's second line of defense, but they would endanger support from within their own ranks. That could be a disaster for the union, and would play right into the hands of the administration.

The smartest thing that the faculty union could do right now is to rethink their position on withholding grades and come up with a more appropriate strategy for dealing with the enemy.

Takeover: "people have been wronged"

To the Editor:

When attending a University this size it is stressed that students, although they have many different interests, must try to work cohesively with one another. This is an idealist prophecy and things do not always operate as smoothly as we wish they did. But we must continue to try and keep in mind that there are 25,000 students on this campus and not everyone of them believes in the same things as our own special interest group does. And if the special interest group escapes out of its own realm, and begins to conflict with others interests that are of a separate nature then something is wrong.

Something is wrong. People have been wronged. All because of a silly, unorganized takeover of the Collegian by the feminist group on campus. Was the takeover silly? Who knows, this is not what I am arguing. I am avoiding the women's pages controversy because this is not my main concern right now. What is my major concern right now is that I am the manager of the UMass Sporting Goods Co-op and am responsible for seeing that the co-op runs smoothly. In our first week and a half of operation we have been very successful and have received much support from all the students. On Monday, May 1, when many of our customers were to pick up orders they had requested, things did not run smoothly. Things did not run.

The administration did not shut us down, nor did our competition, but instead it was our fellow students that prevented us from operating on this day. Not only the Sporting Goods Co-op, but other student services were locked out for the day. Index, Spectrum, Stockbridge yearbook all closed down and none of us directly affiliated with the Collegian. But we all suffered. Why? It is not my place to answer this. We'll leave this up to the protesters.

I can still hear the obscenity that was expressed to me over the phone as I tried to co-operate with these women and inquire about the possibility of us gaining access to our office. There was no getting through to these women protesters, no consideration or respect on their part for any other parties that were forced to become involved in "their" protest.

Had the women shown some respect and consideration this letter would never have been written, because I believe to an extent that these women are fighting for a good cause. But I also believe that there are many ways to achieve certain goals and objectives without infringing on others rights. At a campus this large, students, regardless of their special interest problems, can in no way afford to be irrational with their actions and directly interfere with students needs and interests.

As a graduating senior who is concerned with the preservation of human rights and the Collegian, I would like to do something that just might never have crossed the minds of the vocal dissidents desiring voice in the Collegian: I am submitting my first Letter to the Editor.

It is somehow ironic to me that even though this simple form of redress is and always has been available to the people at UMass, there are those who would rather "Storm the Bastille," blindly insisting on a privilege that is no more theirs than any other single group at UMass.

Until the silly disruption of the past few days, I have never considered the Collegian to be anything but representative of the entire population, and I still don't.

The major premise of the protesters seems to be that women's rights have been ignored and that a special section should be established for women only. If there is anything more sexist than this, I cannot imagine what it is. Realistically, can you imagine a special section devoted to every group on campus?

Letters

As a result of the current occupation of the Collegian offices, we do not have access to some letters submitted prior to the occupation, and are thus unable to publish them.

For the duration of the occupation, Letters to the Editor may be dropped off at the Collegian mailbox, at the bus ticket window in the hotel lobby on the third floor of the Campus Center.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Executive Editor, c/o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters fo a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. on the day preceding that date.

Rizzo terrorizes MOVE

charles bagli

By CHARLES BAGLI

Philadelphia. W.C. Fields (one of our great American philosophers) always said "I'd rather be dead than in Philadelphia." Well, right now the mayor of Philly is trying to make that wish come true for some people.

The mayor is Frank Rizzo. The problem is the political group, MOVE, which has become a thorn in his side. He has had their house surrounded for almost a year now, trying to starve them out. Rizzo's other problem is his career. He can't run for mayor again so he has to figure out how to launch a national career.

Mayor Rizzo is a stand-out kind of guy. It's not that he is so different than any other mayor in this country, it is just that he is more open about what he is. Frank's first claim to fame was as the "law-and-order" police chief of Philadelphia back in the late sixties. He declared war on the black liberation movement. He gained notariety in some circles when he raided a Black Panther headquarters (in 1971) and ordered all the members to strip naked in the middle of the streets for searches.

At 3 p.m. on March 7th Mayor Rizzo made his most terroristic move since that raid. He ordered the blockade of a whole community in Philadelphia to actually starve out a radical commune called MOVE. He declared "surrender or die".

Rizzo's siege began almost a year ago when police were sent to evict MOVE, whose members are mostly Black. The cops were met at the door by armed MOVE members saying they would defend themselves against further provocation and eviction attempts. For the last two months residents of the racially mixed community of Powelton Village in West Philadelphia have demanded an end to the police occupation. Rizzo's response has been to cut off MOVE's water and utilities and to put the entire community under police surveillance.

The major daily newspapers have been grabbing headlines by saying that MOVE is a terrorist organization that wants to annihilate Philly. One reporter even said that MOVE wanted the A-bomb to carry out terrorism.

This couldn't be farther from the truth. In the last six years MOVE members have been arrested over 600 times for opposing police abuses, school cutbacks and for openly calling on the people to rise up against the rich and their buddies like Rizzo. They have been harassed, beaten, even their children have been injured and killed by the cops. These children are a special target for the police who have been trying to abduct them, charging MOVE with child abuse. Rizzo must get these children out of the house if he is to go through with his plans for an all-out armed assault. MOVE Members have refused to give their children up. This is one more proof that the issue from the beginning has been Rizzo, the cops and their vicious rule — not MOVE.

Mayor Rizzo is in a tight situation. He doesn't like the idea of this commune rejecting his dictates, or the courts or the cops. But he is facing growing outrage over the whole affair. Newspapers recently reported that the city's taxpayers have already had to foot a bill of $1.5 million for Rizzo's massive 24-hour-a-day stake-out on MOVE's house. His cops have beaten MOVE's members, then turned around and charged them with assault; they have killed their children and call them child-abusers. And what disturbs Rizzo the most is the tremendous support MOVE has been getting from all over Philadelphia. From March 1 through March 7, there was a constant parade of people bringing them food, clothing, money and other supplies to help them hold out against Rizzo and the cops.

In the last week the situation in Powelton Village has been heating up. A MOVE member reported that the children inside the house were contracting dysentary, for lack of water. A group of fifty people from the community tried to break through the police blockade to bring the MOVE water and food. The police prevented this and in the ensuing fight arrested nineteen people.

Rizzo has broken off negotiations with MOVE and it appears the powder keg could go off at any time. The "honorable" mayor cannot run again for mayor but has recently announced that he will launch a national party and campaign to fight for the rights of white people. I'd guess Rizzo wants to use the MOVE issue as a launching pad for his racist campaign.

Even though a lot of people don't agree with some of MOVE's ideas, what they do know is that Rizzo, the Philadelphia warlord hated widely by minorities and workers, is attacking the people once again. And they are supporting MOVE by militantly standing up to this attack. The people of Philadelphia are determined that Rizzo will not launch a national career on the bodies of black people in Philly (W.C. Fields or no).

Topsy survey

damon thomas

By DAMON THOMAS

For some time now, I have wanted to dispel a notion that some people have of UMass students. It seems to me that certain individuals believe that students here are not knowledgeable of or concerned with what is happening on their campus and in the world around them. To demonstrate to these individuals that they have an inaccurate and unjustifiably negative perception of students here, I released a questionnaire to students on the UMass-Amherst campus. This questionnaire was designed to gauge the approximate strength of a typical student's grasp on knowledge of everyday issues. Twenty-one thousand randomly-chosen UMass students of all ages, races, sexes, majors and backgrounds participated in my survey; these students were selected as being representative of the campus population at large, and all of them cheerfully completed the questionnaire and promptly returned it to me.

The results I determined, er, excuse me, obtained, are extremely revealing and indicate that, in most instances, UMass students are NOT apolitical, apathetic, ignorant, or insensitive.

The original questionnaire appears below. Ask yourself the questions to find out how knowledgeable you are. Percentage breakdowns of people responding in favor of a particular answer are given in parentheses.

1. The AEC is:
   a. a punk rock group (20 percent)
   b. an amateur curling league based in Sylvan (10 percent)
   c. a regional anti-nuclear power group; the local affiliate of the Clamshell Alliance (50 percent)
   d. a building on campus (20 percent)
2. The UEC is:
   a. violently opposed to the policies of the AEC (2 percent)
   b. a toxic chemical found in dining commons food (87 percent)
   c. Undergraduate Economics Council (10 percent)
   d. all of the above (1 percent)
3. What does the Parks Plan for reorganization of higher ed represent?
   a. More outdoor classes (10 percent)
   b. Please repeat the question (5 percent)
   c. Deliberate attack on the shape, direction, and well-being of public higher education. (70 percent)
   d. Sometimes (15 percent)
4. What does the Bakke decision imply for minorities?
   a. Nothing (5 percent)
   b. Yes (16.2 percent)
   c. A reversal of many of the civil rights and affirmative actions gains achieved during the 1960's. (38.9 percent)
   d. No popsicles on Fridays (39.9 percent)
5. A verdict of guilty for misuse of Senate phones could have lead to what for Brian DeLima?
   a. Don't know who Brian DeLima is (11 percent)
   b. Upset stomach (42 percent)
   c. Aloha (21 percent)
   d. Who cares? (26 percent)
6. The Pierpont struggle is a clear example of:
   a. No opinion (.05 percent)
   b. Ask me later (50 percent)
   c. Irresponsible decision-making on the part of campus administrators (46.85 percent)
   d. What happens when mayonnaise and squash are mixed (3.1 percent)
7. This survey is:
   a. pointless (10 percent)
   b. vague (10 percent)
   c. helpful (0.0 percent)
   d. Strange (80 percent)

Only two points need be made with regards to the survey. I had hoped that respondents would favor answer "c" and that they would have realized that "c" was the most logical, morally righteous, and otherwise befitting response to each question. Unfortunately, not everyone saw things that way (refer to question 7). Anyway, so much for spilt milk.

Secondly, a more extensive breakdown of responses by age, sex, race and major appears in a nifty, little handbook available from Thatcher Publications, Inc., 423 Thatcher House, UMass, Amherst 01003. The handbook, which sells for only $37.50 per copy, is a handwritten (sorry, budget cuts) five page summary of all the results obtained from my survey. Buy now while supply lasts.

Issue is more than space

By ALVIN F. OICKLE

"Whose side are you on?" somebody asked me the other day. "The women's or the men's?"

"The students," I replied.

That sounds a bit smug, I know. It even sounds evasive. And, in a way, I guess, it is evasive, because the differences between the UMass feminists and the Collegian cannot, for me at least, be reduced to taking sides.

First off, this cannot be called an issue between men and women; or, worse, it cannot be stated as women versus men. There are men and women on both sides. One of the strongest pro-women speakers at a Collegian Board of Editors meeting two weeks ago was a man. Among the Collegian staffers getting out these editions of the paper — prepared in an off-campus private residence — are women.

Nor is the issue concerned with there being, or not being, space available for news about women and of special interest to women. Just about everyone seems to agree that there should be news columns for that important subject. The Collegian staff members have several times taken stands that explicitly acknowledge the need and their obligation to try to meet it.

The issue, in fact, is centered on the decision-making authority within the students' newspaper. To begin with, it must be understood that the Collegian is owned by the students. They control its direction through the election of officers called the Board of Editors. Each person who serves some time in some function becomes a voting member of the staff. Any member may seek elective office.

Following tradition, policies established by majority vote and even hunches, Collegian staffers turn out a daily newspaper all 28 weeks of UMass' calendar; 142 times a year.

The Collegian staffers are, in the final analysis, students who choose to be members of an organization. My experience over the past 14 years has turned up few journalistic diletantes. Virtually everyone takes seriously the noble principle of serving the newspaper's community with a truthful, comprehensive account of the day's happenings.

Not everybody believes the Collegian succeeds in that aim. Among tnem currently are a group whose main interest is equality for women. In seeking special space for their concerns, they cite the space devoted regularly to sports, political news, Black Affairs and other categories of news.

So, whose side am I on?

I'm on both sides. I believe there should be space for women's news and opinions. And yes, for proselytizing, for persuasion and even for haranguing the readers. But I believe such space should be made available within the already flexible and somewhat liberal, guidelines the Collegian staff has set for the daily product.

And that space should be used, if it is to have any lasting impact on the readers, by exploring and exposing the many examples of inequality on campus and in the world beyond.

I need the information a regular women's section can provide me. I need all the help I can get in trying to improve my understanding and attitudes about women and about men and about their interrelationships.

That's why I am on the side of those who want more space in the Collegian.

And that's why I am on the side of those on the Collegian who want to see that space used effectively. It is, after all, space for which many of these young people have worked hard to obtain and protect.

Because both sides agree on the essentials, the details can be worked out by people of good will. I hope that this is accomplished soon so that we all can get on with the business of helping the Collegian's readers learn more about equality.

Alvin F. Oickle is with the Greenfield Recorder and is a News Advisor to the Collegian.

Mountaineering #4.

THE OPTIMUM MOMENT.

Mountaineering[1] is a skill of timing as well as technique. The wrong moment, like the wrong method, marks the gap between amateur and aficionado. So the key to successful mountaineering is to choose the occasions wisely and well. When, then, is it appropriate to slowly quaff the smooth, refreshing mountains of Busch Beer?

Celebrations, of course, are both expected and excellent opportunities to test your mountaineering mettle. Indeed, on major holidays it is virtually mandatory to do so. Imagine ushering in the fiscal new year or commemorating Calvin C. Coolidge's birthday or throwing caution to the wind during Take-A-Sorghum-To-Lunch-Week without the benefit of Busch. A disturbing prospect at best.

On the other hand, not every event need be as significant as those outlined above. Small victories like exams passed, papers completed or classes attended are equally acceptable. Remember the mountaineer's motto: matriculation is celebration.

BUSCH
B

Interpersonal relationships are also meaningful times. There are few things finer than taking your companion in hand and heading for the mountains, transcending the ho-hum and hum-drum in favor of a romantic R & R. Naturally, couples who share the pleasures of mountaineering run the risk of being labeled social climbers. But such cheap shots are to be ignored. They are the work of cynics, nay-sayers and chronic malcontents.

I'LL CLIMB THE HIGHEST MOUNTAINNNN

Similarly, the ambience of an athletic afternoon (e.g. The Big Game) is another ideal moment. Downing the mountains elevates the morale of the fan and, hence, the team. Therefore, if you care at all about the outcome, it is your duty to mountaineer.

When should one not enjoy the invigoration of the mountains? Here, you'll be happy to learn, the list is much briefer.

Mountaineering is considered declassé with dessert, improper during judicial proceedings and just plain foolish while crop dusting around power lines. Otherwise, as the hot-heads of the sixties used to say, "Seize the time!"

---

[1] Mountaineering is the science and art of drinking Busch. The term originates due to the snowy, icy peaks sported by the label outside and perpetuates due to the cold, naturally refreshing taste inside. (cf. lessons 1, 2 and 3.)

Mitmen face Huskies — Gazelles meet Chiefs

By BILL TARTER
Collegian Staff

The UMass baseball team will host perennial river University of Connecticut in a doubleheader today, beginning at 1:00 p.m., at Lorden Field.

Both teams will be hoping to sweep the set to preserve any chances at post season play.

The UConn, last years ECAC champ, were on fire at the start of this season, winning its first eight games, but have slumped to a 14-10 mark. Currently ranked sixth in the ECAC standings still the Huskies have a slim chance at gaining one of the top four spots for the tournament. None of the four teams have to surpass has more than seven losses.

The Minutemen, ranked 7th right behind UConn with a 14-17 record also maintain a slim possibility for the playoffs, but it will require a near sweep of their final 11 games.

UMass will be sending to the mound two of their top pitchers, Tom Nigro and Doug Welenc. Welenc has been consistently sharp all year while possessing one of the lowest ERA's in New England. His 1.24 average for nine innings is second only to Holy Cross's Rich Jasinski at 1.21.

Tom Nigro, by virtue of winning his last two starts, has evened his record at 4-4.

Connecticut is expected to counter with two of its aces Mike Fredericks and Dennis Long, who are both among the top 14 rated pitchers in New England. Fortunately for UMass they will not have to face UConn's finest pitcher Craig Jones who just hurled two days in the Huskies win over St. Johns.

The Huskies hitting attack is led by Randy LaVigne. His .398 ave. and 5 home runs, both of which lead the team, demonstrates his versatility to hit for power as well as average.

On the UMass side Doug Aylward still sits high a top the batting race in the ECAC's District 1 statistics. His lofty .482 batting average is .73 points above his nearest rival at .409. Coach Dick Berquist has converted Aylward from his normal role as pitcher to an outfield capacity. I think you can see the reason why.

Also representing UMass among New Englands top batters are third basemen Leo Kalinowski at .330, centerfielder Mike McEvilly at .320 and a team leading 22 RBI's, and Mark Sullivan with a solid .314.

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

The undefeated UMass women stickers today will take to the field for the last time in pre-tournament action, as they travel to Springfield College for a game.

In action Saturday against a tough UNH team, the women displayed some of their finest play to date, tying the game, 4-4.

They hope to win in tournament action this weekend.

"Tomorrow's game will be an opportunity to really put on the finishing touches for the tournament," said Coach Garahan. "We hope to polish up the finer points of the team game."

The Springfield College women's lacrosse team is not one to be looked over, however. Coached by Pam Hixon, their record to date stands at 3-2-1. Previously a club team, Springfield College in intercollegiate competition is a team on its way up.

Although Springfield lost to UNH 11-1 (UMass tied, 4-4), it had an impressive victory over Connecticut 15-2, and barely lost 5-3, to a very strong and reputable Yale team.

Its defense has let in just six goals in five games.

And, Springfield as a traditional UMass arch rival is not to be forgotten.

UMass, according to Garahan, has been concentrating on their specifics and adding new dimensions to team play, however. He hopes to make some personnel changes on the line-up and to try to play all, regardless of score, for one last assessment of play before the weekend.

It should prove to be an interesting competition.

For the JV lacrosse team, 5-4 has proved to be a catchy score in its past two games. Unfortunately, the numbers were reversed in the second game.

In action against Bridgewater State last week, the women "hung in there" and pushed hard to win with a second half come-from-behind drive.

At half-time, score stood at 2-1, Bridgewater, "They just were not hungry enough," said Coach Mary Murray later. But ith some half-time switches in line-up, and some good strong determination, the situation reversed itself in seond half action.

Under the leadership of co-captain Becky Haag, and with the scoring rush of Laurie Vincello, the team pulled through to win.

"They really hustled for the win," said Coach Murray.

In action against a varsity Mt. Holyoke team yesterday, it looked to be yet another victory, as the stickers completely dominated first half action, with a 4-1 half-time score.

Be it due to overconfidence or Mt. Holyoke's superior play experience, though, second half action proved to be disasterous and the end of the JV's undefeated season.

B's nip Flyers

Rick Middleton scored on a Jean Ratelle pass in overtime last night to lift the Boston Bruins to a 3-2 victory over the Philadelphia Flyers at the Boston Garden in the first game of the best of seven semi-final Stanley Cup series.

Ratelle, who figured in all three Bruins goals, opened the scoring in the first period. Philadelphia's Reggie Leach countered Ratelle's goal with a first period score.

Don Marcotte's second period goal, assisted by Ratelle, put the Bruins ahead 2-1, but Philadelphia captain Bobby Clark sent the game into overtime with a third period tally.

SPRINGFIELD, [AP] — Sportscaster Curt Gowdy, a basketball player at the University of Wyoming in the 1940s, has been elected the new president of the National Basketball Hall of Fame.

The hall's trustees on Monday selected Gowdy for the job, which carries no salary. He has been a trustee of the hall for several years.

Gowdy was the main speaker at the annual enshrinement dinner that concluded day-long ceremonies marking installation of five new Hall of Fame members.

Pats pick 'Bama and Pitt stars

FOXBORO, [AP] — The New England Patriots' top two National Football League college draft picks won't enter any wrist wrestling championships.

No. 1 choice Bob Cryder and No. 2 pick Matt Cavanaugh both have been plagued by broken or fractured wrists.

Cryder, a 278-pound offensive guard from Alabama, broke his wrist early in his college career, and it's never healed properly after being rebroken.

Cryder says he wears a protective shield on the wrist, and it doesn't affect his play.

Cavanaugh, the star passing quarterback at Pittsburgh, missed three games last season after fracturing his wrist in the opening loss to Notre Dame.

The injury happened when Notre Dame's big defensive end Willie Frye fell on Cavanaugh. Ironically, the Patriots wanted to draft Frye in the second round Tuesday, but the Pittsburgh Steelers grabbed him just before New England's turn.

The UMass women's softball squad came up one run short here yesterday as they lost a heartbreaker to Southern Connecticut, 5-4.

This game put the Minutewomen to test on their home field before they must face Southern once again next week in the first round of the Eastern Regional Tournament.

UMass just couldn't get their bats swinging in time and Coach Dianne Thompson attributed the loss to her team's "inability to match the offense to their strong defense."

Tricia O'Connor, who pitched a strong two-hitter on Saturday, couldn't make her previous performance, giving up four runs in the first three innings. Sue Peters, who has been pitching consistently strong of late, went the last 4 and a third innings giving up another run.

Southern scored one run in the first inning and came right back again in the fifth to pummel the Minutewomen for four more runs.

Whoever said the game isn't over until the last out made a good point as the Minutewomen showed some of their class and determination in the last of the fith.

Pat Oski led off the inning with a walk and Carol Bruce followed by reaching on an infield error. Chris Verdini kept the rally going as she laid down a perfect bunt to load the bases.

Kathy Horrigan added an RBI to her total as she also walked. Cheryl Meliones' fielder choice scored another run and still left the bases loaded for a Jennifer Parker single, adding two more runs to the scoreboard.

Sue Peters, who never fails under pressure, drilled a single through the infield to score the last run. The score was now 5-4 in favor of Southern and the UMass nine never were given another opportunity.

The JV women, coming off a double victory against Berkshire Community the day before, also came up on the short end as they were defeated by a strong Southern JV, 15-2.

The season winds down this weekend as the Minutewomen face Vermont in a doubleheader away on Saturday and Springfield College on Tuesday.

IN THE HOT BOX.... This was the last home game for seniors Cheryl Meliones, Pat Oski, Carol Bruce, and Trish O'Connor.... Fern Lee has been the defensive star for the JV's with two fine outfield plays.... Here we come Regionals.

UConn edges JVs, 3-2

By WALT CHERNIAK
Collegian Staff

The UMass JV baseball team played well yesterday, but some tough University of Connecticut pitching was simply too much for them, as they fell to the Huskies 3-2 at the JV field

Lefthander Mark Waslick started for the Minutemen, and pitched what coach Jim Bedard called "an excellent game." Waslick went the distance, allowing only five hits, walking four and fanning four. Only one of the three runs scored off him in his nine innings of work was earned, as a couple of costly errors hurt the team.

UConn drew first blood in the top of the third without the benefit of a hit, but UMass tied the score in the bottom of the fifth inning.

Don Roeder walked, stole second, and continued on to third when the catcher's throw sailed into center field. Glenn Dooling then lined a sharp sacrifice fly to knot the score.

UConn tallied two more times off Waslick in the sixth, while the Minutemen, who had six hits on the day, were having trouble at the plate. UMass scored its final run of the day in the bottom of the ninth.

Roeder singled and stole his third base of the afternoon. Dooling then bounced a ground ball towards shortstop which hit Roeder for the first out. Mark Leahy sacrificed Dooling to second and Mark Litano singled him home, but it wasn't enough, as the Huskies got out of it.

The loss drops UMass to 10-7-1. This afternoon, Steve Aulenback will be on the mound when coach Bedard's troops take on Westfield State at the JV field at 3:00.

It's been a rocky road for the Gorillas this year

By RUSS SMITH
Collegian Staff

Note: It's not easy to write a commentary of a team whose personnel and coach you've come to respect through the long enduring bus rides, hotel trips, etc. It makes it even harder when the team seems to have fallen upon hard times and is nearing the end of a so-so season. Following the Army game today at 3 p.m. the Gorillas have only Harvard, Springfield and Dartmouth remaining on their schedule. I can only hope this commentary is taken not as a vindictive attack on the team, but as an overview, constructive criticism of what this sportswriter thinks.

Second-guess coaching is easy.

As UMass lacrosse fans know, this year's squad is plenty different from the squad of last season. Since UMass lacrosse has always been a successful venture, fans come to expect more of the same this year. But through the Gorillas barely .500 record in comparison to past ones, followers have been wondering what exactly is wrong with this team

Half of this year's squad was no where to be seen this time back in 1977 with the greater majority of the newcomers finishing up their high school playing days. With no previous college playing experience on the whole the '78 campaign, with one of the toughest schedules ever, could have been passed off as a rebuilding year. Had this been done, I can only help but believe that the attitude of the team would have been somewhat better. They would've played with less pressure and tension. Would this have improved their record? Maybe-maybe not.

Which brings us to the attitude problem on the team, better expressed perhaps through a line in a Fleetwood Mac song — '... players only love you when they're playing.' Some players became unhappy with their lack of playing time.

Attitudes have a way of spreading-like wildfire. Unhappy players breed more unhappy players, leading to dissension. Dissension does not improve a team's play (or morale).

Unfortunately among the internal conflicts is Garber's coaching methods. While Garber's past record has proven he can coach lacrosse, thoughts exist that maybe his coaching style is a bit outmoded. Whether this is a warranted argument is not up to me to say; but when people on the team begin to question his managerial maneuvers (how can a freshman, first year on the team question his coaching style when all they can compare it with is how their high school coach ran his team). It only leads to more problems.

The pride behind the team has unnaturally vanished — or rather dissolved to the point where some care not that the team is losing games — or slipping by in certain games, but how much playing time they get — how many assists they have — and how many games they have to play in before they get a jacket. In short, selfish goals, in some cases, are preceding the team's.

The team hasn't gotten its act together. It has played in streaks — playing fundamental lacrosse at times — scooping balls, passing, cutting, etc. Skills can always be improved — and I wouldn't blame skills for the reason this team hasn't really lived up to expectations. Skills can always be worked on — but a bad attitude and dissensions (especially when it is allowed to build up inside an individual) will only divide the squad.

It's sad to see this team — a great bunch of guys, be split by personal goals and a lower sense of pride.

I hope the team pulls together forgetting past problems, and at least can salvage what remains of this season. The desire to work as a team, to listen to the coach - whether you agree or not, or at least make a conscious effort-to reach the remaining goals (No. 1 in New England) and return the team to a sense of togetherness necessary to be victorious.

Writing under oppression

At the present, I am writing under oppression. Russ Smith, a fellow sports columnist, is yelling at me to do a campus-oriented column.

I started out last evening planning to do a column on the basketball recruiting situation here at UMass, but I promised Russ that I would not do a column on recruiting (which he finds irrelevant at this time of the year). My apologies to Coach Leaman for taking up his time yesterday — I'll try to run the column next week when Russ isn't looking. Then I tried to do a column on the current basketball standings but again I had to junk it because I couldn't think clearly about what I was doing because I had people typing to the left of me, to the right of me — in fact, all over the place and all of them were typing at the same time and we were all in close quarters, unlike the Collegian office where I am accustomed to doing my writing.

My thinking was further hindered because of more than a dozen people cramped into a small work area trying to put out a paper. But I suppose little space is better than no space at all.

Anyway, here's my column or what's left of it.

I attended my first lacrosse game a few weeks ago when Garber's Gorillas destroyed the University of Vomit, er Vermont. I found out that lacrosse is not as bad a spectator sport as I thought it to be. Lots of action, quick paced, and even a good hit or two. Not bad. But there was one question that stood out in my mind. Why does everyone sit on "the Hill" and not in the bleachers?

How come we hear of the big size crowds for basketball, football, and lacrosse, but not for baseball, softball, and golf? Must be a mystery.

Speaking of mysteries, I will attempt to shed some light on the scintillating subject of why people drink more at UMass' outdoor sporting events than at the indoor events.

One can see that smuggling a keg of beer into the Cage presents difficulties that wouldn't occur if one were to bring a keg to a lacrosse game. Also, at an outdoor event, it is much easier to relax in the stands of the football stadium (Alumi Stadium if you didn't know) which are rarely filled and pop open a can of bush, I mean Busch, beer and chug it down comfortably unlike the Cage which is constantly packed to the point where your knees become attached to your rib cage.

Which leads to the subject of a new sports facility for our teams. How the state can see it fit to award UMass-Boston approximately nine million dollars for a sports arena and leave us with no ice rink, a dilapitated basketball arena, and outdoor tennis courts that face unheaval by the local hurricane winds, I'll never know.

It has been proposed that a new sports facility for our campus would cost approximately 14 million dollars and would accommodate 15,000 spectators. The cost is hardly a ripple in the pond considering what the state pays for a worthless project like the Tillson Farm power plant which was built near here. It malfunctioned when it opened, stopped working, and hasn't been repaired since.

Despite the circumstances I am writing under, I have met my deadline once again.

Coach Leaman, Orono would be a nice change right now.

Tuition, fee bills scheduled to rise

By MARK LECCESE
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — An increase on next year's fee bill for UMass-Amherst undergraduates voted yesterday by the UMass Board of Trustees will bring the total tuition and fee bill for in-state undergraduates to $42 for next year.

The trustees voted to increase room, board, and health services fees. A $45 tuition increase that will appear on in-state undergraduate's bills was passed by the trustees in 1976 as part of a progressive tuition increase plan.

There is also a $22 increase in the Massachusetts meal tax for students on the meal plan and an $8 increase in the Student Activities Tax Fund that was passed by the Undergraduate Student Senate two weeks ago.

Similar increases were also passed for graduate students on the Amherst campus and students on the Boston and Worcester campuses.

A report issued to the trustees by acting UMass President Franklin K. Patterson explained the reasons for the increases as "cost of living increases, other inflationary increases and the payroll requirement for the 53rd week."

The "53rd week" results from the fact that because there is not an even 52 weeks in a year, an extra week must be added to University payrolls every third year, and the budget must increase to reflect the extra week.

Fees which stayed the same were the Campus Center fee, the athletic fee and the Fine Arts Center fee.

Tuition was not raised for out-of-state undergraduates, but was raised $130 for out-of-state graduate students.

The board's Student Affairs Committee was scheduled to report on the possibility that juniors may be exempted from mandatory housing requirements, but did not report.

Director of University Relations Howard White said, "I think it is fair to say that the trustees were generally in favor of supporting an action to make it optional for juniors to live on campus. It is not a firm decision, but they will probably make a decision at the June meeting."

The board also approved the list of graduates from the three UMass campuses. UMass-Worcester will graduate 65, UMass-Boston will graduate 1,158 with bachelor's degrees and 27 with master's degrees and UMass-Amherst will graduate 3,092 with bachelor's degrees, 349 with master's degrees, and 113 with doctorates.

Faculty pickets Whitmore

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Approximately 250 faculty members yesterday at noon picketed the Whitmore administration building to express dissatisfaction with progress in current contract negotiations, and then later staged a march through campus.

In a picket line snaking from the bottom of the ramp at Whitmore to Lot 71 near Munson Hall, faculty members shouted chants of "Two-four-six-eight, Bromery negotiate" and "we want faculty rights, we have faculty power." Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery is also UMass senior vice-president for faculty labor relations.

Joining the faculty were about 10 members of the Graduate Student Employees' Union.

UMass Director of Security Saul L. Chafin yesterday said the "tactical control unit" of the UMass Police Department was used for the first time in security measures, but said he would not elaborate on specifics of the unit since the unit may be used again in the future.

The faculty march began at Whitmore and wound through campus to the Student Union Building. The protesters then swung back to Whitemore, where the group broke up shortly after 1 p.m.

Students appeared largely unaffected by the demonstration as they passed up and down the ramp to Whitmore. A group of about 50 students gathered to watch the protesters.

"The administration walked out, and they closed the negotiations," said Massachusetts Society of Professors spokesman Alvin Winder. "Now they call on us to negotiate."

Contract talks were broken off April 24 after faculty negotiations refused to accept an administration proposal on personnel policies. The administration has said it would resume negotiations when the faculty said it was ready to do so. Faculty representatives have said they are willing to "negotiate any time, anywhere" but claim the administration has not responded.

Winder said yesterday's protesters were "an angry faculty mobilizing quickly" to protest. He also called upon students to join the demonstration.

"It's really very much in their interests to support collective bargaining and faculty demands," he said.

Winder re-affirmed the MSP's plan to picket commencement exercises May 27. The MSP voted to picket the ceremony, and also to withhold student grades at the end of this semester at a meeting last Friday.

"If there is no resumption in talks, we may picket graduation and explain to parents and students why we are doing that," Winder said. "That's under consideration."

Susan Hammonds, president of the University Staff Association, sent a message to the protesters yesterday. The association represents various UMass clerical, technical and administrative employees.

"I regret the USA cannot be out in force today," she said. "We do however support you (the MSP) in your struggle."

The faculty last February staged a negotiation in front of the board of trustees in Memorial Hall. They protested not receiving a 2½ percent pay raise the state legislature granted to all state employees. The administration has said the raise must be negotiated as part of a final contract.

The University is fiscally autonomous and can do whatever it wishes with state funds.

Bromery addresses Senate

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery last night at an Undergraduate Student Senate meeting asked the senate to find a "feasible resolution to the problem between the Massachusetts Daily Collegian and the women protesters."

James O'Connell, senator from the Sylvan area government, also requested the resignation of newly elected co-Presidents Robert Dion and Donald Bishop

James O'Connell, senator from the Sylvan area government, also requested the resignation of newly elected Student Government Association co-Presidents Robert Dion and Donald Bishop.

In other business, the senate passed a motion which would allow its Collective Bargaining Task Force to negotiate with the Massachusetts Society of Professors on joint action to respond to administrative conduct in current contract negotiations. (See related story page 3) Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury addressed the senate on his position regarding student co-ops, the senate unanimously passed a motion to support the Room-to-Move organization in its continued existence, and Senate Speaker Brian DeLima entertained motions for his impeachment.

Following Bromery's appeal to the senate, the group passed a motion by Senator James Lewis to support women currently occupying Collegian offices. The motion carried 31-10 as most of the 101 members of the senate were not present.

The senate defeated a proposal by Senator Eric Anderson to put the decision to support the women to a referendum of the student body. Most senators said the referendum would take too long to do. Anderson, however, said it could be done in "at most, five days."

The women protesters have occupied the Collegian offices since 4:30 p.m. Sunday. The occupation began with a sit-in. Monday at 3:30 a.m. the women barricaded themselves inside the offices, refusing to allow Collegian staff members access to the office.

Town nixes health posts

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Town Meeting last night clarified its attitude against increased town spending when it defeated the proposed new positions of community health director and environmental health coordinator.

The Town Meeting is scheduled to reconvene Monday at 7:30 p.m. at the Amherst Regional Junior High School.

The town meeting approved all new Wastewater Plant staffing, which was included in the personell by-law section of Article 15.

The defeat of the two health positions was a heavy blow to the board of health, which had lobbied hard for the approval of the two positions. One member of the board was overheard to say, "There goes six years of hard work down the drain."

The motion to classify the new positions was part of Article 15, which called for revisions to the town's Personnell By-law. John H. Peterson, who chairs the Finance Committee, motioned to ammend the personnel by-law so that the request to form the new position of community health director be deleted.

Peterson argued there was no way to tell if the town actually needs the new position of Community Health Director to maintain the quality of health services in the town.

Instead, he proposed the Board of Health, Finance Committee and the Board of Selectmen develop a comprehensive plan without the new positions to maintain the health program for the next year.

"If you fund the Community Health Director position, there will be $15,366 more appropriated for health services in Article 16 (the article dealing with the proposed operating budget) than it really appears. We should develop an alternative plan for maintaining the health program through the next year.

Members of the Board of Health argued the position is a necessity, and it would not increase the cost of the health services budget. They maintained that actually there was not a new position being proposed, but a reorganization of the health department.

Ann Gross, a member of the Board of Health, said the present Public Health Director would move to the Inspections Department to take the new position of Environmental Health Coordinator.

"We are not creating a new position as much as we are retitling the old one of Public Health Director," she said.

"How can a major health department operate with any kind of continuity without a director with a knowledge of the seventies?" Gross said.

"We cannot operate without this person," she said.

Some Town Meeting members disagree with Gross.

"We're being lied to," said Brent M. Spears, M.D.

"IT may well be that we want to develop a comprehensive health program in this town, but we are going to have to realize that it is going to be very expensive. And for peoole to come in here and tell us that they aren't creating a new position when it's sitting right there on the transparancies in front of us, well, that's like telling us that one is two," Spears said.

Spears repeated the argument of Peterson.

"I feel we need a comprehensive plan before deciding to create the new positions, but we also need an honest statement so we can make an objective decision."

Members of the Board of Health argued there was no creation of new positions in the health department, arguing instead that the new position would be the Environmental Health Director, who is part of the Inspections Department.

The town meeting voted 131-83 to defeat the motion for the creation of the Community Health Director position. That vote also defeated the motion to delete the current position of Public Health Director.

Prior to last night's meeting, the Board of Selectmen had voted to recommend approval of the Community Health Director position, and when it was obvious the proposed position was going to be defeated, Chairman Diana H. Romber could only say, "Well, I had a moment of hope, but the timing is horrible."

"If it had happened three nights later people might have voted for it after seeing the entire budget," she said.

Selectmen to tell UMass of future festival concerns

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

Complaints about last Saturday's Schlitz-A-Rama have spurred the Amherst Board of Selectmen to send a delegate to UMass Dean of Students William F. Field to convey their concern about future festivals.

Selectmen delegated board member Nathaniel Reed to contact Field about the University-town cooperative security measures after they received numerous complaints about fights, traffic and noise at the annual festival, sponsored this year by the Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity on North Pleasant Street.

Both UMass and town police reported a larger than usual number of persons being held at the station for protective custody last weekend. Amherst police reported one arrest for breach of peace during the beer fest.

Diana Romer, who chairs the selectmen, suggested to other board members at their meeting Tuesday night that the town review the required security measures for large festivals to see if the rules are adequate.

In related police action:

Amherst police continue to search for two men who they say raped a woman last Saturday. There was reportedly another rape reported on campus late Sunday afternoon, but UMass police have not yet confirmed the incident.

Selectmen remove tenant representative

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen Tuesday night removed one member of the Amherst-Tenant Committee and threatened to remove another member because of the two members' four-month boycott of all committee meetings.

The board voted to remove Mary Wentworth from the committee, and to inform committee member Joanne Levinson by registered mail that she will also be removed if she continues to boycott all committee meetings.

The two members have boycotted committee meetings since January to protest what they feel is a lack of power and effectiveness on the committee's part. The members also refused to resign from the committee. Both women were unable to be reached yesterday for comment.

Selectman Nancy B. Eddy yesterday said nominations to fill the position (or positions) would be made in a week or two. She said there are currently five or six names being considered.

In other action, the board voted 3-2 not to recommend the proposed land swap between the town and the owner of Watroba's Store in North Amherst. The proposal, Article 54 on the warrant presently before the Town Meeting, calls for the town to swap the old North Amherst School and part of its lot for Chester Watroba's store and part of its lot.

Watroba could not be reached for comment.

The board deadlocked last week in its first vote on whether to recommend the swap. At that time, Selectmen Roger C. Jacque and William C. Atkins voted to support the article while Selectmen Diana H. Romer and Nathaniel Reed voted not to support the article. Eddy abstained from voting during the first vote, saying she needed more time to consider all financial aspects.

In his remarks Tuesday night at a meeting sponsored by the UMass Zionist Alliance and the Social Democrats, Gershman was critical of President Carter's plans to sell weapons and planes to Saudi Arabia.

UMass cop's case goes to jury

Former UMass police officer Michael Bozak's case is expected to go to the jury today after four days of testimony, according to Northampton Superior Court Clerk Salvator Polito.

Bozak, a resident of Hadley, is accused of raping a Greenfield Community College woman who was riding patrol with him as part of an internship program in the summer of 1976.

According to Polito, the girl was a law enforcement major at the Greenfield. She was assigned to Bozak's patrol duty when he allegedly raped her.

The defense and the prosecution have called all their witnesses. Court reconvenes tomorrow at 10 a.m.

UMass Director of Public Safety Saul Chafin was unable for comment yesterday and further details of the crime were unavailable.

Meanwhile, Amherst police continued their search for two men who police say raped a woman April 29.

Trustees meet in Worcester

Bromery urged to action

WORCESTER — The chairman of the University Board of Trustees yesterday at a trustees meeting urged Amherst campus Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery to work quickly to provide the Massachusetts Daily Collegian staff access to its office, which has been blocked since Monday morning.

The Collegian office in the Campus Center basement has been occupied and blockaded by at least 50 people, mostly women, demanding guaranteed pages for women's news. The people have not allowed any Collegian personnel to enter the office since closing the doors early Monday morning.

Trustee Chairman Joseph P. Healey called the occupation a "clear violation" of the University's student picket codes, but he said he is "willing to leave it in the hands" of Bromery.

Healey made his remarks at the monthly trustee meeting at the UMass Medical School after Collegian Editor-in-Chief William A. Sundstrom criticized Bromery and other campus administrators for acting in an "irresponsible manner" while dealing with the occupation.

Sundstrom, reading from a seven-page statement endorsed by other members of the Collegian Board of Editors, told the trustees the campus administration is "engaging in a double standard" by not enforcing the University picketing codes this week while they did enforce it two years ago to persuade occupiers to clear out of Memorial Hall.

The University picketing code states people obstructing entrance and exit from campus office space should be cleared out first by persuasion and warning from the administration, and as the "last possible alternative," by police using minimum force.

Trustee Haskell Kassler asked Bromery if the campus administration is not working quickly to end the Collegian occupation because the protest is between two student groups and not students and administrators.

Bromery replied saying the Collegian occupation is different from others he has faced because the campus administration is not involved in the negotiation sessions between Collegian and women representatives.

Bromery, responding to other questions, said he doesn't think the occupation is at a stage requiring court or police action because not all channels of mediation have been exhausted.

Bromery also disputed three points of criticism in Sundstrom's statement, saying he did not tell Collegian editors he would participate in mediation, but rather he could work better if he were participating. He also questioned if a loss of advertising material locked in the Collegian office violates the Collegian's right to publish guaranteed by the First Amendment, as Sundstrom said.

Bromery also said he has delayed seeking a court injunction to open the doors of the Collegian office because a court judge rather than Bromery himself would then decide how to treat the occupiers.

The Collegian editors statement also said the editor's "are forced to consider the possibility that the University is allowing the Collegian's First Amendment Rights to be obstructed because the Collegian has been critical of their offices and actions."

Bromery did not respond specifically to this charge at the trustees' meeting and could not be reached for comment last night.

Another negotiation session between representatives of the Collegian and the protesters ended yesterday without reaching an agreement. A Collegian staff meeting is being called Friday to disperse information and to discuss future action.

SUPE asks Trustees for program support

By BRAD GOVERMAN III
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — About 65 members and advocates of Students United for Public Higher Education yesterday travelled to the Board of Trustees meeting here yesterday afternoon to ask the Board's support of their program which calls for:

—budget cuts — no tuition increases

—no public funds to private higher education, and —no support for state Secretary of Education, Paul Park's plan for reorganization of Public Higher Education.

SUPE also requested the Board of Trustees held an open forum every semester on a UMass campus for any students wishing to voice their opinions on the quality of education they are receiving.

SUPE, a recognized Student Organization of about 40 active members, was joined in its appeal by representatives from the Massachusetts Society of Professors, Asian American Studies Association, and the Massachusetts State Student Association. The two buses the groups chartered to the meeting were funded by the Student Legislative Task Force, a branch of the SGA.

Nine SUPE advocates used 30 minutes allowed the group by the Board to criticise Park's reorganization plan and the state's use of public funds for the support of education in the private sector.

Park's reorganization plan regionalizes public higher education to eliminate duplications of resources.

SUPE member Rona Weiss called the plan "nothing more than a dressed up attempt to implement budget cuts at the public schools under the guise of eliminating duplication." "Instead," she continued, "narrowness and parochialism will be fostered by this cost-benefit approach."

Larry Mandel, SUPE advocate and representative of the Massachusetts State Student Association, said he was "offended by the Park's plan, because it is an attempt to deny us of a well rounded education...we don't want to be molded into technocrats," he added.

In response to these criticisms, Park said he "wondered seriously if you (SUPE) read the report in detail."

Park said he would go over the report with any of the SUPE members to clarify his intentions behind the reorganization plan.

Following the 30 minute SUPE presentation, interim UMass President Franklin Patterson said that the present status of the budgets of the Amherst and Worcester campuses presented "very serious problems."

From the Board's original request of $83.6 million for the Amherst campus, the Massachusetts legislature is only prepared to grant $74.4 million.

Senate to meet with MSP

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night voted to have its representatives negotiate with members of the Massachusetts Society of Professors to discusss the possibility of joint action by students and professors in response to contract negotiations.

The senate passed a motion for the senate Collective Bargaining Task Force to meet with members of the MSP and negotiate on the conditions under which students would give their support to MSP job actions. The MSP recently voted to withhold grades, picket Whitmore daily and picket graduation.

The Task Force will also select four members to sit on a committee with professors to examine the effects of withholding the grades as a possible protest action in response to administration conduct in contract negotiations. (See related story, page one)

The faculty and administration are currently negotiating their first collective bargaining contract . The MSP is the Amherst chapter of the faculty union.

Students will also approach the administration about meeting with Whitmore representatives so that students can have a fuller understanding of the administration position at the bargaining table. Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery told the Collegian he would support administration representatives meeting with students. However, he said discussion may have to be limited to certain topics.

Bromery also said that he would want Dan Salce, student observer at the negotiations, to be part of the group which met with administration representatives. Bromery said this could help expedite negotiations since Salce would be informed of the administrative positions.

Protesters discuss Collegian occupation

By DOROTHY A. CLARK

Collegian Staff

It's not exactly a comfortable home, but according to those standing vigil outside the Collegian office, the occupiers say the energy level inside is high.

At least six supporters wait outside at all times, they say, to try and gain the support of passersby and to give support to others inside.

Bearing leaflets and food, the supporters pass information inside and communicate through a crack in the door. "There's always people outside to talk to people when they walk up," one woman said.

"People really want to know what's going on," she said. "We really are into discussing."

"I find that I'm spending five to seven minutes with each person. It's not like yelling at each other, just some real heavy discussions," she said.

During the interview a telegram was passed out from the inside for the supporters to read. The telegram came from Robin Morgan in New York City, supporting the women's action in their quest for separate pages.

"Respect and support go to you ... " the woman described as a renowned feminist said.

The supporters say they have also received telegrams and phone calls of support from author Mary Daly, The Tahoe River Coalition of Black Feminist Women, and groups from Columbus, Ohio.

One of the women outside the Collegian office said she had been inside the office for the first two days but had to leave due to "a combination of claustrophobia and the flu.

"I didn't feel like I had the right to infect anyone," she said. "The claustrophobia just got to me."

With the barricading of the Collegian office, the protesters have also denied other student organizations the access to their offices.

"We are sorry we had to lock it up but it is necessary," another woman said. "Those are accesses."

One woman said the occupiers made offers with the other co-ops so that arrangements could be made to get them some of their necessary operating equipment, but as of yet they haven't heard from the co-ops, she said.

The outside support group said they have been subjected to some harassment by angry students. One woman said last night a group of men came down "looking for a confrontation. We handled it calmly," she said.

Food and other supplies are provided for the occupiers by Earthfoods and the Peoples' Market, the outside group said.

Collegians are also passed in through a crack in the door. One woman who was surprised to see the paper still being published said, "To be truthful, it's too bad. I would like to see it not published."

Another woman said the fact that there are so few pages being published is good because it shows people that something is wrong.

Many of the outside supporters said they would be interested in working on the Collegian staff, provided that there were women's pages.

Asimov lectures to 1,000: 'Solar energy is feasible'

By DIANE BURAK
Collegian Staff

A crowd of 1,000 last night listened to science fiction writer Isaac Asimov as he described the dangers of overpopulation and predicted a world of space colonies run largely by solar energy.

During his lecture in Mahar Auditorium Asimov predicted that in 250 years, world population would average 100,000 persons per square mile.

He said we would be living in huge apartment skyscrapers that covered the entire earth. He said it would be necessary to take the ocean out of its bed and grow algae on the roofs of the skyscrapers to gee the population.

He suggested an alternative to that situation would be to lower the birth rate. He felt acceptance of "women's lib" would be a viable means of achieving this without blookshed or starvation. He said this would "double the brainpower of the world without adding a single person."

Asimov cited the development of space colonies as a solution to the expanding world population problem. He said money invested in such colonies would quickly return a profit, in terms of the energy it would provide.

He advised transferring industries nto space to get rid of their pollution.

He also advised using resources of the moon, which he said was "only three days away."

Asimov said that the exploitation of space would be a positive thing that would encourage international cooperation. Every country could benefit from such a move and so every country ideally, would support space exploration. He felt the resulting world would be more peaceful, and that countries would be less interested in nationalism.

He said when we expand beyond our planetary system, the people of the world will outgrow their infancy and become mature, having learned to do something better than fight and destroy each other.

Asimov said a second reason why the world could be doomed would be an energy shortage. He said the world's present supply of oil will last only thirty-five more years at the present rate of consumption.

He suggested solar energy as the most feasible replacement because there is enought of it to supply present needs, it can be safe, and it will last as long as humanity.

He advised the use of microwaves harnessed to provide energy, although he said the waves could not "...beam you down from the middle of Amherst." He said the present cost would be $5 billion per year.

He said the alternative to developing solar energy would be war, which he cited is an expense of $400 billion per year. He said those arguing against the expense of solar energy should consider the possible consequences of not exploring it. He called the military a "quick road to suicide."

Asimov felt that DNA research would not be hazardous to people. He felt that cloning, when it occurs won't be exciting. He said if there were 50 of him, "They would not be me."

Famed novelist Isaac Asmimov

He said although the new persons would come from his genes, they would have to be nurtured in a female. He said the possibility of cloning brainless, obedient people who could be ordered around would not be necessary.

"You don't have to go through clones for that." He thought the value of cloning would be for organ transplants.

Life long fan meets Asimov

By DIANE BURAK
Collegian Staff

"I've been waiting 30 years for this," said Peggy Thompson, 41, while waiting to meet her favorite science fiction author, Isaac Asimov. "He made a big impact on my life."

Thompson, of Somerville, said the first book she ever read was authored by Asimov. She said she has often used what she called Asimov's ability to turn a disastrous situation into a humorous one in raising her children. Thompson was visiting her daughter Lisa, a UMass student who lives in Melville dorm, when she learned of Asimov's lecture.

Thompson said she gave Asimov "the only fan letter I have ever written." She said she had written it last December but had been too embarrassed to mail it.

> 'I've been waiting 30 years for this'

She said Asimov's science fiction provided an escape to difficult living conditions she experienced growing up during World War II. She said she often didn't know where she would get her next meal. Asimov's books, she said took bad situations — like horror on other planets — and turned them into funny adventures. She applied this sense of humor to cope with her conditions.

Thompson was one of many fans who crowded Asimov last night, requesting his autograph in one of the books he had written. He received a standing ovation from these fans at his lecture.

Carter orders study on solar strategy

GOLDEN, Colo. [AP] — President Carter marked "Sun Day" yesterday by ordering a new Cabinet-level study to develop a national solar strategy and by praising solar energy as a potential counterweight to rising oil prices.

In remarks prepared for delivery at the Solar Energy Research Institute here, however, Carter didn't promise any new funds for solar research. But the president noted that his proposed budget for fiscal 1979 contains a 64 per cent increase in money for development of solar power over the federal budget of two years ago.

On the first day of a three-day swing through Colorado, California, Oregon and Washington, Carter announced that the Agriculture Department will lend $14 million to the city of Lamar, Colo., for a project to turn livestock excrement into methane gas.

Carter had lost all four states to Gerald R. Ford in the 1976 election, and his Western tour was billed by the White House as an effort to win public support for administration programs.

"Nobody can embargo sunlight," the president told his audience at the research center, a federally financed project operated for the Department of Energy by the private, non-profit Midwest Research Institute of Kansas City.

"No cartel controls the sun," Carter said in an apparent reference to the Arab oil embargo of 1973-74. "Its energy will not run out. It will not pollute our air or poison our waters. It is free from stench and smog. The sun's power needs only to be collected, stored and used.

"The question is no longer whether solar energy works," he added. "We know it works. The only question is how to cut costs so that solar power can be used more widely and set a cap on rising oil prices."

Carter said his energy plan, still stalled in Congress, would increase use of home solar systems by offering more than $500 million in tax credits — up to $2,000 for each homeowner — over the next seven years.

The Cabinet-level review will be headed by Energy Secretary James Schlesinger, who accompanied Carter on the trip. The panel will issue a report by Sept. 1 to help Carter make budget and legislative recommendations next fall.

"The job of this committee will be to develop an overall solar strategy for speeding the use of solar technologies — both by new programs and by improving existing federal programs," Carter said.

At every stop, Carter will be seeking support for the administration's priority goals for 1978 — the voluntary anti-inflation program, tax cuts and revisings, civil service reorganization, and implementation of an urban policy, said Deputy White House press secretary Rex Granum.

Women's news policy

The Collegian Board of Editors, in light of what appears to be lengthy negotiations with the women's community, has recommended a policy to its staff regarding women's news.

The policy, according to the board, is still open to discussion and evaluation and should not be interpreted as final.

The eight-point proposal includes:

—a guaranteed minimum of 40 inches per day for staff-generated stories, integrated throughout the news pages

—the news pages will no longer be under the jurisdiction of one editor; sports, editorial and Black Affairs space will remain under the jurisdiction of department editors

—wire and news service stories relating to women's issues need not infringe on the guaranteed 40 inches of space

—editorial questions concerning sexual preference, rape, contraception and similar issues should be referred to the women's editor and-or assistant

—women's cultural events will be covered in Below the Salt as any cultural event would, the process of which will be worked out jointly between the women's editor and the fine arts editor

—the Collegian makes a long-term commitment to reorganizing the news process to ensure all perspectives a place in its pages

—the news and women's department will be responsible for the content of stories generated in their individual departments, and reserve the right to screen headlines and have editorial control over photos and graphics associated with those stories

—major stories, generated by the staff or from news services, will appear in the first four news pages

—a nightly conference will be held between the managing, news, and women's editors and their assistants, to jointly determine space and placement of material appearing in the news pages. Decisions unsatisfactory to either department can be appealed to the Editor-in-Chief. When the women's department needs substantial space to cover an event or issue, they should notify both the managing editor and the assistant business manager at least three days in advance to allow for space.

Sun Day celebrated at UM

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

What can you do with empty beer cans? If you went to the Sun Day celebration yesterday on the University library lawn, you already know.

For those who missed the day-long activities, a 1972 UMass graduate exhibited a solar hot water heater made partially of 125 sun faded Miller beer cans. The cans — empty of course — were used as reflectors in the "flat plate collector" to heat water circulating through the system.

"Actually it's Metawampee pond water," Virginia Richardson confessed yesterday while explaining her exhibit to the growing crowd of onlookers. "The heater is made of native garbage I collected from the Amherst dump," she added.

Sun Day, a nationwide celebration of the Sun set up to focus attention on solar technologies already in use and on commercial processes under development, began at UMass with a 5:30 a.m. sunrise ceremony on Orchard Hill.

The idea of Sun Day was created by Dennis Hayes, a member of Worldwatch Institute, in an effort to inform the public of alternative renewable energy sources.

The Institute is a group of scientists and teachers dedicated to researching alternative energy sources.

UMass' celebration included information tables on the library lawn, live music, exhibits, demonstrations, films and speakers. Among the exhibits were a windmill-powered transistor radio and a solar grill used to cook hot dogs.

Science fiction writer Issac Asimov last night spoke on Solar Energy (see related story, page 4).

The concern for solar energy as a viable resource was addressed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis yesterday in a Boston celebration when he said the state's economic future depends on whether it learns to use the sun, which he termed "one of the only free energy sources."

Richardson's beer can project, made easier by her degree in art and design while a student here, was not the only exhibit by the Sunderland resident.

"Everything in solar takes too long," she said.

Instead, Richardson prefers wind energy and demonstrated a "low power windmill" she built which uses the wind to run a Sears Solid State AM-FM transistor radio. The project was originally designed by John MacGeorge of Norwalk, Conn. and reprinted in "Alternative Sources of Energy", a bi-monthly magazine she said.

"I followed the instructions to the letter," Richardson said.

The entire energy source for the radio — all the parts of the windmill as well as a battery pack and a voltmeter — cost $7, Richardson said. "The radio, though, cost $31.95," she added.

Clad in yellow Keds, a plaid wool jacket and a green cap, Richardson said she plans to go into business with her projects soon. This Saturday, she will join others in a solar celebration on the Amherst Town Commons.

Wallace to speak at graduation

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Television journalist Mike Wallace will give the main address at the UMass-Amherst commencement May 27, the University announced today.

Wallace, 59, is one of six persons chosen by the University Board of trustees to receive an honorary degree this year. Author James Baldwin will also receive an honorary degree, as will British astronomer E. Margaret Burbidge, Federal District Judge. W. Arthur Garrity Jr., Latin American historian Dr. Lewis Hanke and Singer Company Chief Executive Joseph S. Flavin.

There were about 38 nominations for this year's honorary degrees, said Alice Kucinski, staff assistant in the chancellor's office. The trustees decided who would receive the degrees early last fall but kept their choice confidential.

Applications for two undergraduate commencement speaker slots are now being reviewed by a senior committee in the Office of Student Affairs.

A problem could conceivably arise with this year's graduates, as the Massachusetts Society of Professors has voted to picket outside commencement ceremonies.

Wallace, who appears weekly on the highly rated CBS news program "60 Minutes," graduated from the University of Michigan in 1939 and has been involved in news broadcasting since then. The Brookline native was a communications officer in the Navy during World War II, and afterwards became a radio news reporter in Chicago.

Since joining CBS in 1951, Wallace has been featured as an interviewer of newsmakers worldwide and has been anchorman on two of the station's news programs. He has received many awards, including an Emmy Award, a Robert Sherwood Award and a Peabody Award.

Novelist and playwright James Baldwin, who grew up in Harlem, has had five books on the national best-sellers lists. His plays have been performed on Broadway. Baldwin's books include "Nobody Knows My Name," "If Beale Street Could Talk," and his most recent — a children's book written in 1976 — "Little Man, Little Man." Baldwin has been a prominent spokesperson for civil rights.

Dr. E. Margaret Burbidge, former director of the Royal Greenwich Observatory in England, is president of the American Astronomical Society and professor of astronomy at the University of California in San Diego.

Judge Garrity, a Worcester native, has been U.S. District Judge for Massachusetts since 1966. He is currently presiding over civl rights litigation concerning the Boston Public schools. Garrity is a graduate of Holy Cross College and Harvard Law School.

Dr. Lewis Hanke, the first Latin American historian named president of the American Historical Society, was appointed Hanke Professor of History at UMass in 1969 and retired as professor emeritus in 1975.

★ Senate

O'Connell, "was that the co-presidents were elected by 59 students out of a possible 19,000 students."

The motion was tabled due to lack of quorum by the senate. Dion and Bishop were elected co-presidents last week.

"Whatever the senate wishes is okay," Dion said. "But after Don and I win in September, we will run again in the spring."

Speaker DeLima last night said he has appealed the decision of the student judiciary court concerning his mis-use of SGA phones.

"I still contend that I did nothing wrong. I do not regret the decision to run for senate speaker and to come to UMass."

He added, "I will now entertain any motions for my impeachment that the senate might have."

A hush fell over the senate and there were no motions for impeachment made.

Jets will enhance Israeli security –Vance

WASHINGTON [AP] — The nation's leading diplomatic and military officials told Congress on yesterday the pending sale of jet fighters to Israel, Saudi Arabia and Egypt will enhance Israel's security, not imperil it.

Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, Defense Secretary Harold Brown and Air Force Gen. David Jones, acting chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, called the proposal a step toward peace in the Middle East and "vitally important" to U.S. interests there.

The trio, testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, opened the Carter administration's formal defense of the war planes sales. President Carter wants to sell 60 F-15 jet fighters to Saudi Arabia, 75 F-16s and 15 F-15s to Israel and 50 less sophisticated F-5Es to Egypt.

Meanwhile, Senate Minority Leader Howard H. Baker, R-Tenn., said he personally approves of the most controversial element of the sales plan — the sale of the F-15s to Saudi Arabia.

But Baker also said Congress may well not go along with the deal unless the Carter administration compromises on the number and mix of the planes, delivery dates and restrictions on their use.

Under parliamentary procedures, Congress has 30 days to disapprove of an arms sale sent to Capitol Hill by a president. If it fails to act by May 28 on the current proposal, the deal will go through. The only way Congress can stop the sales is to pass resolutions of disapproval in both the House and Senate.

While Vance, Brown and Jones were defending the sales plan, several members of the Senate committee expressed concern that it may be unwise and could harm Israeli security interests.

One day earlier, 22 of the 37 members of the House International Relations Committee had introduced a resolution to kill the entire sales deal.

Vance, nonetheless, reiterated the administrations's view that the sales are necessary.

"These sales will maintain essential links that permit us to play the fundamental role as a mediator between the parties," he said.

"Failure to proceed with the sales will seriously undercut the American role in the peace process and raise grave doubts about U.S. readiness to work with moderate governments in the region," Vance added.

Brown said, "These sales will continue to assure that the military balance will remain in Israel's favor.

"Indeed, Israel will be relatively stronger after receiving these additional F-15s and F-16s, while giving Egypt and Saudi Arabia a more reasonable assurance that they can defend themselves from other quarters about which they have real reasons for concern," the defense secretary said.

The Israeli Air Force currently relies on United States provided F-4 Phantom fighters. The planes formed the backbone of Israeli air defense int he 1967 and 1973 wars.

However, the planes have become increasingly vulnerable to attack, particularly from Soviet made surface-to-air missles. Israel suffered virtually no loss of aircraft in the 1967 war, but aircraft losses went up in the 1973 Yom Kippur war, in which Egypt launched a surprise attack on Israel, during the religious holiday.

Bright skies and warm weather yesterday provided an ideal setting for Sun Day on the library lawn. Other parts of the country were not so fortunate, however, where the sun did not shine at all. (Staff photo by Christopher H. Schmitt)

UN troops clash with Moslems in S. Lebanon

TYRE, Lebanon [AP] — "I have never seen a battle so confused like it. There was shooting everywhere, and everyone was shooting at everyone."

A French army spokesman yesterday thus described a series of clashes between Moslem extremists and U.N. forces in which a Senegalese soldier, two French troops and a Palestinian were killed.

Twelve French soldiers were wounded in the fighting Tuesday night, and the spokesman, Capt. Jean Menegaux, said "many gunmen" were killed.

French U.N. forces in southern Lebanon beefed up their positions yesterday following the fighting, which began when the Moselm extremists ambushed a French patrol.

Menegaux said the two-hour battle was the worst since the U.N. Security Council dispatched troops to southern Lebanon last month. It raised the total number of peacekeepers killed to eight.

Among the wounded was Col. Jean Germain Salvan, the 46-year-old commander of the 1,233-man French force, the largest and best equipped among the United Nations contingents.

Appeal expected on abortion law

BOSTON [AP] — An appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court is expected from a federal court decision that a Massachusetts law requiring parental consent for an unmarried girl under age 18 to obtain an abortion is unconstitutional.

A three-judge panel in U.S. District Court ruled 2-1 Tuesday in a suit filed by pro-abortion advocate William Baird against Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti seeking to have the law overturned. It was the second such ruling in the case.

The case centers on the legality of the state law, although the case involved an unidentified minor girl age 16 at the time it was filed three years ago.

The ruling followed a second full trial on the case, ordered by the U.S. Supreme Court. Judge Bailey Aldrich of the 1st Circuit Court of Appeals and District Court Judge Frank H. Freedman joined in the majority ruling. Retired District Court Judge Anthony Julian, sitting by assignment, dissented.

Attorney Joseph Balliro, who represented Baird in the proceeding, said the decision clears the way for possible appeal by Bellotti again to the U.S. Supreme Court. "I expect him to appeal," Balliro said yesterday.

The first ruling in 1975 that the abortion law was unconstitutional was returned by the Supreme Court after declining to hear an appeal.

National GOP relying on state aid

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — National Republican Committee Co-chairperson Mary Crisp told state Republicans yesterday that the national Republican party is relying on state organizations in its efforts to rebuild the GOP.

Crisp, on a three-day tour of Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine, told a Republican caucus in Concord that the Republican party was going to concentrate on electing its members.

She urged members of the House and Senate to run for re-election and if they did not want to run, to recruit other Republicans to run.

"We must never lose sight of the necessity to win the state, local and national elections. The Democrats never forget that and that's why they control government across this land," she said.

When asked if Republican Women's Clubs across the country were involved in women's issues, Crisp said they were not.

"They were interested in winning elections and governing and they are not involved in any issues in particular," she said.

When asked why the Republican National Committee had not taken a stand supporting the extension of the deadline for ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment, she said the committee had "no position on that issue."

Berkshire County to vote on Casinos

ADAMS, [AP] — Residents of Berkshire County are expected to be asked this fall to vote on whether they want casino gambling to become a new attraction in the tourist region.

Joseph Dragone of Greylock Associates, the firm lobbying for an advisory referendum on the issue, predicted the Massachusetts Senate will go along with House approval of the nonbinding November ballot question. The legislature still would have to legalize casinos in the state.

Corporate campaign donations legal

BOSTON [AP] — Corporate campaign contributions — of any size — will be legal in Massachusetts after May 22 as a side effect of a recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling, Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti informed legislators yesterday.

Currently, such contributions are illegal, and violators face a fine of up to $50,000.

Bellotti wrote to legislators after reviewing last week's court decision striking down a Massachusetts law restricting corporate contributions to referendum campaigns.

Voyages of the starship occuprise

To the Editor:

At 8:30 am you called and said you were there "occupying" the collegian office. at 8:30 am you called and wondered where i was. i was a five minute walk away, thinking how very tired i was. i was tired of words like energy, occupy, energy, picket, energy. i was tired of all those words, the time required for their generation was wasting my time. you rambled on about bicycle chains and i wondered what happened to the beginning. what happened to our "pages", our "educational tactics." where is the thing itself ... four pages ... the final frontier.

These were the voyages of the Starship Occuprise whose one semester mission to seek out new modes of expression and self-determination, to boldly go where no womens editor had gone before.

Editor's Log Stardate: 36-24-36
... kap'n we con't get the Klingon staff to vote our way"

... "well if they won't listen to our commands, we'll have to take immediate action. Lieut, Uhura, send a security team to the transporter room and give them orders to set their phasers on passive resistance. If need be, we will send reinforcements with flutes, guitars and a substantial supply of granola ...

at 8:30 am you were locked behind collegian doors. did you need a room of your own to write four pages? were you up so early to spawn new and more responsible species of journalism? no. you were wasting my time. i should have beamed you down a hard-core feminist.

Occupiers infringe on student rights

To the Editor:

On the eve of the third that a small, but vocal minority have not only taken over the Collegian office, but have also barricaded the entrance to the INDEX, STOSAG, SPECTRUM, and the Sporting Goods Co-op, I am furiously frustrated.

Why haven't these protesters been removed, arrested or gassed as any others would have been after an hour? What they are doing is not only illegal, but also obstructing the educational process of hundreds of students involved in the four publications, in addition to halting the various services that these groups as well as the Co-op provide to all students on this campus regardless of whether they are male, female, or undecided.

Chancellor Bromery, is it because the outside publicity, which is bound to be bad, will not do you any good in your campaign for the presidency? I think we deserve some answers and some action!

The war to segregate women's news, if it should exist at all, should not interfere with these outside organizations. For this reason alone, these tactics have been wrong. Furthermore, those 35 to 50 people down in the B.O.C. do not represent the feelings of the majority of the women on this campus. And, if one bases their argument from a journalistic standpoint, I have two things to say:

1) Nuts to your proposed propaganda sheet.

2) Why weren't you women who want full editorial control now at the Collegian office as freshpersons to earn the responsibilities of decison-making as juniors and seniors like Judy Van Handle, the former Sports Editor; or Dottie Clark, the Managing Editor? One cannot deny either their roles or their powers, which were earned not by poetic chants or by touches used as barricades, but by lots of positive energy.

How do you women ever hope to gain respect by using tactics which hurt the majority of students? Who the hell are you to keep me out of an area which I help fund and in which I have a definite right to be working?

Pat Doyle

Too much beer; not enough spirit

To the Editor:

I'll get right to the point. I have black female friends on this campus who are some of the nicest people I have met. Yesterday, while the Schlitzarama was going on, the Newman Center was the location of a third-world fashion show. I attended the "Rama" and had a pretty nice time. No one shouted obscenities at me or racist comments. On the same hand, the third-world fashion show goers should have had the same hassle-free situation.

This was not the case. People in cars passing by, while my friends were crossing the street, shouted obscenities and racial comments [and not the "all men [and women] are equal" kind].

It is important to say that the perpetrators represent a small portion of the "Rama" people — because most of us there were there to hear good music and have a good time — but those few people who wish to impose on other people trying to live their lives and enjoy their leisure in my book are wrong.

A university should be a forum where one becomes more aware of his or her fears, prejudices, curiosities and passions — and learns through them how to grow more positively by respecting and understanding the feelings of others as well as respecting the knowledge in which one clothes him or herself.

Beer is great; spirit is great; but too much beer and not enough holy spirit can make a negative situation out of pleasant moments.

Carolyn Guerra

Demands "dangerous, unconscionable"

To the Editor:

I have no connection with the University in general, or with your newspaper in particular. I am a Hilltown resident who has worked in the book publishing industry, and who was, many years ago, editor of a college paper at the University of Michigan.

The current news reports about demands by UMass women to obtain control over coverage of women's news in your paper, however, is of direct concern to me, as it should be to all who cherish the notion of a free and independent press. To capitulate in any way to this request would be to deny all principles of a free press; the demands being made upon you, while perhaps motivated by sincere concern, are dangerous and unconscionable. I would encourage you to call upon the legal resources of the American Civil Liberties Union to combat the efforts of those who besiege you. Such vigilance on your part will put all of us who care about a free press in your debt.

Another option: you might "demand" of the women's groups that you should appoint, and have approval over the actions of, those women who would concern themselves with matters journalistic. The logic of such an action would be no less compelling than that of the women who occupied your office this morning.

"Non-career" conference

To the Editor:

You are invited to the first Non-career Planning Conference at Amherst College, on Thursday, May 11, at 8:30 p.m. in the Red Room of Converse Hall.

As conference organizers, we wish to draw together in one room non-career people from all walks of life. To hear your experiences and make non-career living a tangible choice for those feeling "weak career directedness." While exchanging good ideas among yourselves.

Conference Agenda

8 p.m. — Pre-conference Gathering, for non-career people to meet and warm-up.

8:30 — Brief Speakers, with clarifying questions from audience.

Thereafter — Deeper questions and spirited commentary from everyone.

Very importantly, we solicit several of you to become Brief Speakers. By preparing a 5 to 10 minute progress report on your personal non-career. How are you making out?

We are looking for a ceiling of 8 speakers. Ideally half women. Please volunteer by telephone now. [Our numbers are listed below.] Our deadline is May 7.

To sharpen the subject matter, we propose a working definition of career. A "career" is a socially preconceived ladder that you climb toward recognized success. Your career gives primary meaning to your life.

Naturally, a "non-career" is the way of life of everyone else who took the training but didn't climb. [Or fell off the ladder!]

A non-career may be a satisfying path or tumbling within the abyss.

We start in with these big questions ...
What turned you away from a career?
What things do you want out of life?
And what are your means?
What is your material standard of living.
And how do you acquire it?

We look forward to your personal wisdom as speaker or commenter.

More feminist rhetoric

candy carlon

It is no small fact that women's news has been neglected on this campus. The working conditions within the Collegian provoked an atmosphere of hostility, making it almost impossible to be productive. And when the daily confrontations occurred, the women's department, more often than not, lost out. No well defined guidelines had been created to protect its validity as a department and to keep the Collegian aware of its existence.

It was imperative that the Collegian be forced to represent women, thereby educating the community. The ideal was, of course, integration but that had been attempted unsuccessfully, leaving the ideal simply an ideal. Women from different organizations demanded compensation in the form of four pages with total editorial control. But, in the midst of our campaign, the issue became distorted. Any alternative assuring space and its control was ignored; the issue was pages, no longer representation and education.

The Collegian found representation in the form of pages unacceptable. As a means of coming to terms with this disagreement, the Collegian offered to negotiate. We entered negotiations with the understanding that both parties would negotiate in good faith.. But negotiations were severed by an occupation of the Collegian offices by the so-called representatives of the women's community. How is a community represented with its "representatives" isolate themselves and alienate the people they are trying to represent? This is absurd.

But they broke the agreement of good faith. Once bargaining ended, I found I could not represent or support a small group of women whose actions were unfair and dogmatic. It was and is impossible to seek change when no one listens.

The point is to change, the point is not merely to shift the power. I refuse to allow the pettiness of power struggles to negate the education of women and men as to the condition of women and their right to equality. One of the vehicles to establishing this goal is the development of a working relationship with the Collegian.

This has been achieved in the form of an instituted policy that includes total editorial control, 40 guaranteed column inches per day and provisions for placement of copy. Whether the acceptance of this arrangement be viewed as hypocritical on my part or not, is of little importance. What is important is that we get our foot in the door and make the Collegian accept the women's department as an integral part of the whole. The Collegian must, therefore, remain accountable to this newly established policy. Women needn't fear the censoring that has so effectively silenced them in the past. There is now an open forum in which to express our opinions, to share information and contribute to the growth of women's culture.

Protest challenges Festival success

By MARIO A. BARROS
and K. STEPHEN SHAIN
Fine Arts Staff

This week's demonstration, like last year's model, has many characteristics that distinguish it from other protests of the past. For one, it takes on the objective essence of being racist in that it deprives the students of this campus the information needed to make the Duke Ellington Spring Music Festival a success by blockading our files and denying us access to the necessary materials-copy and photos included. By preventing publication of this week's Below the Salt, an issue dedicated beforehand toward providing that festival with the coverage needed to sell tickets and raise interest, the Collegian protesters are threatening, in effect, to rain on the first major outdoor Black student-produced cultural event in this campus' history. Since when does protest have to serve the objectives of the oppressors? The "concerned" individuals who so fervently wrote letters to the editor of the Collegian couldn't have put a larger stumbling block before the festival than does this untimely protest.

The calls for forced and coerced support from the Black community (by the commanded presence of Black Affairs at all negotiations) fall on deaf ears here as they further illustrate the elitist nature of this protest. Did this issue-struggle come from the women of this campus or was it cultivated by a small core group that is attempting to show some women the "Truth"?

Any struggle pursued from the top down seeks to impose its values on the masses of people it purports to support. Showing a gross disregard for the students of this campus, a "vanguard" of sexual preference freedom fighters have locked themselves in the Collegian offices and have disrupted not only the service of this campus' only daily news organ, but have prevented the staffs of the Spectrum, the Stockbridge yearbook, and the Sporting Good Coop from fulfilling their obligation to the students of this campus and have prevented graduating seniors from receiving their copies of this year's Index. Fighting in the name of the women's movement, these sexual liberationists have also displayed their arrogant and insensitive lack of concern for the people of color on this campus who are looking forward to the success of the spring concert.

Spinning directly from the hub of the wheel of controlled forms of protest on this campus, (another leaking fixture?) this form of vanguardism seeks to impose itself on the students of this campus. Once again, we have a certain few who see fit to tell the "masses" what exactly it is that they want. In doing this, they take away the movement's spontaneity and make it a staged production. It's unfortunate that this staged production is going to interfere with the dissemination of information pertinent to the Duke Ellington Spring Music Festival. It is in this manner that the occupation takes on a racist significance.

Genuine forms of solidarity can exist in the community but all must stem from and express mutual respect and consideration. Solidarity is fostered by the aforementioned elements — not coerced. Demanding the presence of Blacks in their struggle demonstrates the fundamental lack of confidence in the occupiers ability to represent any oppressed group on this campus and finds its expression in forms of domination similar to those that they claim to be fighting against. Again, the oppressor couldn't do a better job himself.

The occupation will serve to perpetuate ignorance in that the significance of the personalities performing at the festival will go unexplained. The tribute to Duke Ellington, planned for this week's Below the Salt and the profiles of Patti Labelle, McCoy Tyner, Pharoah Sanders, Buddy Guy and Junior Wells as well as the immortal Duke and his son Mercer will go unpublished due to the singular, self-interested form of struggle pursued by the vanguard of deception and their selfish file-sitting maneuvers.

In closing, we would like to relate to this campus a true story that not only displays the nature of the operant racism involved but also demonstrates the frustration that the Collegian has encountered in dealing with and negotiating with this campus' demagogical stiflers of the press. When asking one of the vanguard organizers of the occupation about the composition of the occupation, we asked, "Have you any support from the Black community?" She vociferously responded, "Yes, he is sitting right over there," pointing to a prominent Puerto Rican male. "But he's Puerto Rican!" we cried. Her militant response? "Close enough....."

from our perspective

A good-faith proposal: let's think about it

An interim policy affecting women's news in the Collegian has been recommended to the staff by the Collegian Board of Editors.

It is the desire of the board, and we hope the staff, to provide the UMass campus with equality coverage of women's news in our pages.

It's time for the Collegian to acknowledge the role the women's community has played in making us aware of our deficiencies.

In the course of negotiations prior to the occupation of our offices, Collegian negotiators, presenting a counterproposal to the initial demands of four ad-free pages a week, offered 30 inches of space as a guaranteed minimum for each issue. Each Collegian page can be broken down to 64 column inches of space.

We hope the proposal will change the structure of the news department which forced the women's editors to pursue separate pages... this change in structure is a first step toward mutual accountability.

Our initial proposal also guaranteed space for wire coverage and substantial space for special events and issue as the need for that space arises.

The Collegian feels that this proposal allows for the flexibility which a daily newspaper needs. Because the size of the paper is determined by ad sales, a large amount of guaranteed space could cut into the space left for sports or other news.

The assistant women's editor, who had been negotiating for the women's community, recognized the feasibility of implementing this new policy. She approached the Collegian negotiating team to bargain for changes she thought would make it more workable, after the representatives of the women's community had rejected the Collegian proposal.

These changes included upping the guaranteed number of column inches to 40 per day and realizing editorial control as other d3partments now know it.

Three new dimensions were also added to the Collegian proposal, through discussions with the assistant women's editor. Editorial questions concerning sexual preference, rape, contraception and similar issues will be referred to the women's editor and-or her assistant. Coverage of women's culture will be covered in Below the Salt, the Collegian's weekly fine arts magazine, as any cultural event would. In addition, major wire service and staff stories will be placed on the first four news pages of any given issue, as are any major stories.

We hope the proposal will change the structure of the news department which forced the women's editors to pursue separate pages.

We believe this change in structure is the first step toward a realization of mutual accountability.

This recommended policy is by no means closed to discussion and evaluation by the women's community and the Collegian staff.

The assistant women's editor has assured the board she will work to effect this proposal as soon as possible. The board has given her an equal assurance of its intention to cooperate in the fullest.

Duke Ellington Music Festival set for Saturday

McCoy Tyner

McCoy Tyner's many Milestone albums – Inner Voices is his twelfth for the label – are amazing in many ways. Not only are they consistently brilliant examples of the thinking, writing, and playing of a master artist, but they are also remarkably varied, ranging in size from unaccompanied solos to full string orchestra and including a wide scope of settings and approaches. Inner Voices is, once again, different from any previous Tyner record.

Inner Voices is the latest manifestation of McCoy's formidable talents as composer-arranger-orchestrator, a role he has been approaching with much enthusiasm for sometime now. The LP is a tremendously vital, startingly original collection of music. It contains five new Tyner compositions performed in a variety of settings, some of which were firsts for McCoy. We can only echo the sentiments of producer Orrin Keepnews: "With the remarkable interplay between piano, voices, horns, guitar — and with McCoy's magnificent writing — Inner Voices has to be at least as big a leap forward for him as Fly with the Wind was."

The musical settings include two 13-horn big-band pieces; two selections on which the vocal choir serves as the orchestra; and a samba that is opened and closed by an incredible piano-guitar duet. The voices are heard on all but one of the selections, and on several tracks the acoustic guitar of Earl Klugh plays melody lines with the piano and is given ample solo space.

Among the other fine musicians who worked with McCoy on the date were Ron Carter, Jack DeJohnette, and a host of top New York horn players. William Fischer, conductor for the sessions, had also worked closely with Keepnews on production and with McCoy on the vocal arrangements.

Inner Voices is sure to garner even more praise for Tyner, who in the brand-new Down Beat Readers' Poll was voted top acoustic pianist (for the fourth year in a row) and Jazzman of the Year (for the third consecutive year).

Tyner was born in Philadelphia on December 11, 1938, of musical parents (his mother played piano and encouraged McCoy's childhood interest in music). After many years of private music lessons, McCoy enrolled at the West Philadelphia Music School, and later attended the Granoff Music School. By the age of 15, he was heavily into r&b sounds and swing. He led his own seven-piece combo at local Philadelphia clubs.

In 1959, McCoy played with saxophonist Benny Golson and later joined the jazztet, organized by Golson and Art Farmer, and including Curtis Fuller. McCoy played with the Jazztet for six months, both on the East Coast and in San Francisco.

He then joined John Coltrane as pianist, when the group was only two weeks old. Tyner quickly became a major force in improvisational piano, while Coltrane, of course, was a major influence on McCoy's artistic development.

Tyner left the Coltrane quintet in December 1965. When asked about it, McCoy simply says: "Well, you can love a man and you can follow him — but eventually you get so you must leave home."

McCoy Tyner's genius and power is evidenced in the fact that, since leaving Coltrane, has he continued to grow transcending that obviously fertile period. He has become something infinitely more than "John Coltrane's pianist," but was something of a commercial breakthrough as well.

His next release, Focal Point, was recorded with his current working group — an exceptionally tight-knit unit that includes Eric Kamau Gravatt on drums, Charles Fambrough on bass, percussionist Guilherme Franco (with Tyner since 1973) and multi-reed players Joe Ford and, most recently, George Adams.

Supertrios, released earlier this year, with a two-album set that paired McCoy with two different trios (Tony Williams-Ron Carter, and Eddie Gomez-Jack DeJohnette) and utilized material that stressed the differing concepts and strong points of each duo.

Perhaps John Coltrane summed up McCoy Tyner better than anyone: "McCoy is always looking for the most personal way of expressing himself. He doesn't fall into conventional grooves. McCoy has taste. He can take anything no matter how weird, and make it sound beautiful."

Patti Labelle

In the 60s, a group by the name of Patti Labelle & the Bluebelles "dazzled the Soul world with a hit called "I Sold My Heart To The Junkman". This rather obscure group had this little dittie as their only claim to fame. In fact, to quote a recent issue of Black Music magazine, "they couldn't even get arrested."

This all changed when they adopted the moniker, "Labelle" and recorded the early 70s hit, "Lady Marmalade". This cut was a success on all the charts with a bullet and had the hoardes out to check out their bizarre stage show. They were a new element to the Black female vocal group. While the Supremes of Motown and the Emotions (then much younger, less reknown and in Memphis) were well-behaved, Labelle dared to be different thus opening the door for the outrageous in Black female soul. (Say, "thank you", Chaka Khan, etal.)

Their milestones weren't set without suffering, however. People of the sicker mentality would have them cast as crazed lesbians with their garish apparrel and highly charged stage performance. In short, they were somewhat misunderstood in their unique presentation. It didn't stop them though as there were packed houses and gold records to follow.

The group broke up and two out of the three have recorded solo LPs and singles. Patti's single "Dan Swit Me" has made some waves and her debut LP was a success in carrying on the Labelle spirit of charged music with conviction and "how's-that-grab-ya" lyrics. Her live performance is exactly what the driving force behind Labelle's should be. She screams, stomps and is never afraid to say how she's fellin'. Highly explosive.

Pharoah Sanders

Sanders was born in North Little Rock, Arkansas in 1940. In that lively musical community, he was turned on to gospel in church and to people like James Moody, Sonny Rollins and John Coltrane at home. He began congregating with local musicians and learning instruments; he played drums in the marching band at school, clarinet, and then saxophone at age 19, when he settled in Oakland, California. There, he played with musicians like Sonny Simmons, Smiley Winters and Trevor Koehler.

In 1962, Sanders left the Bay Area for New York City, and became a key force in the then-emerging avant-garde movement in the city, meeting and creating with Sun Ra, Don Cherry and others. John Coltrane, more established than many of the other participants in this movement, but continually looking for ways to develop and broaden his musical scope, was a mentor to much of this bold generation of jazz players, and found in Sanders someone who shared his musical aspirations. Sanders was integrated into the Coltrane group and they began to make history.

During this short time, from 1965 until Coltrane's death in 1967, Coltrane and Sanders were making some of the most visionary, extraordinary music to be heard anywhere. Their sessions, live and on record, were charged with unbridled inspiration; both Sanders and Coltrane were becoming more religiously-oriented at that time, and the music, free-flowing, experimental composing and playing, can surely be described as spiritual. The many excellent albums on which Sanders was featured was featured alongside Coltrane on sax — there were about a dozen, including Cosmic Music, Live In Japan, Om, Meditations, all durable classics — were an important turning point in the development of modern jazz.

Coltrane's death didn't halt Sanders' progress. He appeared on other artists' albums, including some by Alice Coltrane, and formed his own bands, making a series of exceptional album for Impulse Records, albums that continued the Coltrane-Sanders excursions into music shaped by divinity. He used vocals on many of these records, and one result was the inclusion of "The Creator Has A Master Plan," as sung by Leon Thomas, on Karma. The song enjoyed a good deal of airplay on the burgeoning "underground" FM radio scene, and helped spur Sanders on to acceptance by listeners not otherwise attuned to jazz. Along with albums like In A Silent Way, Sanders' late '60s and early '70s LPs were the first signs that what's become known as "fusion music" was going to happen. Besides Karma, albums like Thembi, Village of the Pharoahs, Tauhid and Jewels of Thought spread Sanders' musical message.

Then, suddenly, Sanders wasn't heard from as much; he retreated from the commercial record arena, becoming more involved with his religion, making rare appearances and one independently-released album in 1976. Gradually he began to reemerge as a guest soloist on a Norman Connors album, and now with Love Will Find A Way, his Arista debut. The album, featuring a gallery of accomplished supporting musicians as well as some superb vocalizing by Phyllis Hyman and Connors, is something different for Sanders, as he applies his instruments — the warmth of his soprano sax, the brilliance of his tenor — to various styles and settings. He's as entrancing cutting loose on Marvin Gaye's "Got To Give It Up" as he is interpreting the ballad melody of "Answer Me My Love," popularized by Nat "King" Cole. There are Latin touches, electronic textures, romantic moods, all touched with the artistry and energy of Pharoah Sanders.

From Havana to Amherst: with love

By GERMAN PINIELLA

The Grupo Moncada, one of Cuba's most popular and evocative musical groups, will make its first area appearance on Thursday, May 4, at 8 p.m. at the Campus Center Auditorium, continuing a six-week U.S. tour.

The group's performances will provide the first real opportunity American audiences have had since the blockade to hear songs representative of the new Cuban song movement, the "Nueva Trova." The group will also perform traditional Cuban, Afro-Cuban and Latin music.

Grupo Moncada, eight musicians who began singing and playing together when most of them were students at Havana University, has toured extensively in Cuba and in the past three years has emerged as one of Cuba's foremost talents.

The U.S. tour is being sponsored by the Center for Cuban Studies, for whose benefit the group will present its concerts. The Center, a nonprofit informational center located in New York City, is scheduling performances in New York, the Boston area, Washington, D.C., the San Francisco Bay Area and Los Angeles. Following their West Coast appearances, the group will return to New York City in mid-May for a final concert and a weekend series of seminars and workshops with local community and university music groups.

Tickets for the concert are $3 each and may be obtained at the door.

Grupo Moncada first appeared together publicly on October 7, 1972 at the University of Havana. Group member Alberto Faya had been singing for some time the songs of new young Cuban composers and singers, such as Pablo Milanes, Silvio Rodriguez and Noel Nicola. The musicians in Grupo Moncada discussed at length the new Latin American music and were making their first attempts to play quenos and other unfamiliar Latin American instruments.

The group knew what it wanted from the very beginning — to popularize the folk music of Latin America with special emphasis on Cuban music. The members of the group got to know one another better as they worked together to define certain musical concepts and became increasingly aware that music could be an instrument of revolutionary change. Searching for their own musical roots, they became part of the "New Latin American Song Movement," contributing to that movement music which speaks of Cuba's history.

Their first major work, "Cancion del Moncada," gave the musicians an idea for the group's name. Structured as a cantata, this song tells of the attack on Fort Moncada in July, 1953 by Fidel Castro and his followers. The work, composed only a few months after the group started working together, shows the intellectual and political responsibility with which the group approached its creative task from the start.

Since then, the musicians have perfected their performing skills without giving up their determination that their music truly reflect Cuban cultural roots and history. This dedication is as important as the 41 instruments that Grupo Moncado plays and the wide range of its repertoire.

Grupo Moncada performs mainly in schools, universities, work centers and amateur festivals in Cuba, as well as appearing regularly on radio and television in Cuba and abroad. In 1974 and 1975, the group toured Peru and in 1976, Germany and Czechoslovakia. Before coming to the U.S., Grupo Moncada will be performing in Europe again. In addition, Grupo Moncada has participated in concerts and music festivals with well-known Latin American singers and composers and representatives of revolutionary song movements in other continents.

The members of Grupo Moncada are:

Alberto Faya, graduate of the University of Havana who majored in the history of Latin American Art. Now a professor at the university. Composer. Former member of the choir of Havana's Pedagogical Institute. First voice, guitar, tres, charango, vihuela and bass.

Julian Fernandez, graduate of Havana's Pedagogical Institute. Currently in graduate school. Composer. Guitar, tres, lute, charango, mandolin, percussion and chorus.

Ruben Galindo, student at the University of Havana's Polytechnic Institute. Composer and first voice. Guitar, tres, lute, bass, electric bass.

Jorge Gomez, graduate of the University of Havana where he majored in the history of Latin American Art. Director of educational programming for university television. Directs the group and acts out some of the group's songs. Zampona, marimbula, percussion and chorus.

Juan Gomez, student of Latin American History at the University of Havana. Director of programming, cultural department of the Polytechnic Institute. Bongo, tambor leguero, and other percussion instruments.

José Alberto Himaly, graduate of the University of Havana where he majored in economics. Official of the Ministry of Culture. Tumbadora, bata, bonke echemiya, quinto, tambor leguero and other percussion instruments.

Tomas Rivero, graduate of the University of Havana, majored in French. Music consultant at the "casa de Cultura" (Cultural Center) in Municipal Square, Havana. Composer. Piano, organeta, guitar, bass, accordian, percussion and choir.

Pedro Trujillo, graduate of the Pedagogical Institute. Composer. Has studied music and does the transcriptions for the group. Flute, percussion and choir.

A woman's view of the Duke

Duke Ellington In Person,
by Mercer Ellington
with Stanley Dance;
Houghton Mifflin Company,
Boston, 1978
$10.95 hrdbk.

Reviewed by IRMA McCLAURIN-ALLEN

It is impossible to blindly idolize Duke Ellington after reading Duke Ellington in Person written by his son, Mercer Ellington. The biography was written to complement two existing authoritative works: Music is my Mistress, an autobiography and The World of Duke Ellington by Stanley Dance, a book which focuses primarily on the music of Ellington and his professional growth and development.

Mercer Ellington felt that both books lacked a certain perspective on his father and so he set about trying to do two things in his book: 1)... "to try to show the strength and frailties of the very real man behind the public image".... and 2).... "to shed light on the relationship between father and son... in such a way that each person can be seen as the other's alter ego." And although Mercer Ellington does provide insights into the band and gives sensitive personal and professional portrayals of the musicians who came and went in his father's band, ultimately it is the "Duke" as a person, a man of his times and his upbringing with whom the book is concerned.

Having assigned himself two difficult goals, Mercer proceeds to try to capture and unravel the man behind the image of the "Duke".

The first portion of the book gives us the Ellington genealogy which is a chronicle of talented artists and entrepreneurs. The narrative, however, is disorganized, for it fails to distinguish between what is trivia and therefore irrelevant to narrative and what aspects of Ellington's personal and professional life really illuminate for the reader the complex interworkings of the man and his mind.

The perspective in this first section of the book is that of a child unraveling a puzzle. Mercer Ellington is a son who does now know his father and is heavily dependent upon his father's music associates and the media to help him understand this enigmatic figure. Glaringly absent is a critical perspective; Mercer refuses to subject his father's behavior and attitude towards him as a son to any close scrutiny. Thus what we see is a superficial image which contributes nothing to our understanding.

What is significant though is Mercer's accounts of events or conversations which foreshadow attitudes and motives which appear later in the book. We learn, for example, that Duke Ellington is a manipulative, driven, paranoiac genius. Ellington is also a staunch patriarch who rules supreme in his home and in his band. He deliberately withholds help to members of his family who showed talent, including his son Mercer.... "Gump was the first to forecast that there would be a conflict between Pop and me about bands and recongnition, that Duke Ellington would make certain he remained on top, regardless of whom he knocked down, including me." (p. 21) Rather than the hostility which one expects as a natural consequence, Mercer justifies Ellington's machinations... "His determination in maintaining himself, and sometimes withholding information to make sure of his position, might be regarded as ruthless or selfish, but looking back over his career I would say it was done in the interest of the whole, of what he regarded as family." (p. 21)

The gesture of understanding is magnanimous given the events which followed; leading to a stymieing of Mercer's attempt to grow as an individual and musician by his father.

Almost as if via the process of writing this book Mercer begins to understand his father, the later sections of the book are full of narratives which really focus in and reveal the vacillating nature of Duke Ellington. Also, as Mercer becomes more secure in his relationship with father and especially near his father's death, he is less noble with his silence and openly disagrees with and criticizes Ellington's methods. The tensions revealed are open and honest. Truly Mercer subverted many of his own professional attempts in order to remain on call by his father; Ellington, on the other hand, seems to have made no sacrifices for his son — and in some cases, consciously sabotaged Mercer's life and profession.

Ellington is exposed to us as a genius who is unable to openly express his love, respect, etc. to those around him and who approaches life in a methodical and almost scientific manner.

Mercer gives us clues to his father's political and religious interests and shows how his values and morals within these areas were reflected in many of his compositions. The analysis of Duke Ellington's relationship with various women, including Mercer's mother, is frightening in its honesty and revelations.

The book, Duke Ellington in Person is an uneven writing venture with a slow start. Yet, in the final analysis, we are privy to some critical areas within Ellington's personal and professional life. What the book offers is a starting point; it is by no means complete for it also illuminates for us the ambiguities and ambivalence of Mercer Ellington, the son towards his famous father, the Duke.

In addition to the personal aspects of Ellington's life, Mercer introduces a few songs by Duke Ellington on women which were never published or recorded. In a sense they represent a regression if you look at some of the more political works — these poems in fact, become an indictment of Ellington's "machismo".

Although Mercer takes the time to recall every name of every musician who had played with Ellington, to the point of distraction, he does provide us with some ancedotes and portrayals which are sensitive, endearing and insightful about their music.

For record collectors, the book does give a chronicle of Ellington's records and Mercer attempts to catalogue according to their quality and according to his father's affectations for the music.

The portrait of Ellington, is in some ways tragic; nevertheless it does provide us with a necessary perspective in our attempts to synthesize the man with his music. The Duke will live on, not only because of the great impact of his music, but because of the obvious and sometimes self-effacing commitment to continuing his work by his son.

Your Birthday

THURSDAY, MAY 4

Born today, you have two distinct sides to your nature and are often in conflict with yourself. You have attraction-repulsion complexes about many things. You have learned not to worry about this duality; others worry about it a great deal, for it makes you difficult to know and impossible to predict.

You are highly emotional. As a child, you may have trouble restraining yourself from tears or laughter, often at the most inauspicious times. You should learn to control your emotions as you mature, but never to the point of not feeling them inwardly.

You are an excellent salesman, especially of your qualities. You should never have trouble finding a job, for you can show yourself as the answer to any prospective employer's prayers. However, you may cause trouble by seeming the source of solutions for others' problems.

Also born on this date are: Thomas Henry Huxley, biologist; William Prescott, American historian.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

FRIDAY, MAY 5

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) -- Don't let emotions overcome good sense. Take your time deciding this morning.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) -- Encourage others to strike out on their own. You need to feel free of dependents.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) -- Early depression may cause concern later. Study a new procedure.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) -- Another's confidence makes it easier to face things you fear. Move ahead.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) -- Don't decide until you've heard all of both sides. Ask questions.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) -- Urgency forces decisions you may later regret. Try to remain calm in confusion.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) -- Fault-finding is annoying to those with you. If you must criticize, be tactful.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) -- Decide what you want to achieve today, then achieve it.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) -- Try to charm your way to success. Save time, energy, and wear on talent.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) -- Easygoing ways may cause concern in those who love you. Let others know you see pitfalls.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) --Self-control may hinder success today. Be aware of the need to let go.

ARIES(March 12-April 19) -- Inner conflict prevents your making decisons early today. Resolve them and all is well later.

JV baseball team ticks Westfield, 7-6

By WALT CHERNIAK
Collegian Staff

The UMass JV baseball team took advantage of six errors and banged out ten hits to take a five-run lead, and then held on to defeat Westfield State, 7-6 at the JV field yesterday.

Steve Aulenback started for the Minutemen, and had a somewhat shaky afternoon, but picked up the win. Aulenback allowed 14 hits and five walks in his nine inning stint, while striking out three.

Chris Koperniak tripled to right field with two out in the UMass first and scored on a wild pitch to give coach Jim Bedard's troops an early 1-0 lead, before they picked up three more in the second.

Don Roeder led off with a pop fly single to left field, the first of his three hits on the day, moved to second on a passed ball, and scored on a double by Doug Yacek. Jim Aulenback then nubbed a grounder back to the box, but the over-anxious Westfield pitcher threw it away, allowing Yacek to score and Aulenback to go to second. Aulenback later scored on a Paul Rampone bounce-out.

Westfield State picked up a run in the fourth, but UMass countered with two more to take a commanding 6-1 lead. Consecutive singles by Jim Aulenback, Pat Raimo and Rampone produced one run, and then Frank Letizia lined a shot to left center for a triple to chase home another.

Tom Grimes provided what proved to be the winning run in the bottom of the seventh with an impressive display of sheer hustle and base-running ability. Grimes led off the inning by tapping a slow roller to shortstop, a beat it out for an infield hit. He then stole second base, and, two pitches later, broke for third. The catcher's throw eluded the third baseman, and the ball went down the left field line as Grimes scored the seventh run.

Westfield scored single runs in the seventh, eighth, and ninth innings, and had the tying and go-ahead runs on base with two out in the final frame, but a ground ball to shortstop Letizia ended that threat, as the Minutemen held on to win, 7-6.

The JVs play an odd sort of doubleheader today, as half the squad will be in Westfield to face the Westfield State club again, while the other half will take on Amherst College here. Greg Popovich and Scott Hildreth will be the starting pitchers.

"His decisions are less stable than a speeding bullet, more outdated than a locomotive, unable to bind small contracts without at least a single dispute. Look! Here at UMass! It's a birdbrain, it's a plain idiot, it's Bowie Kuhn!"

This is the way Charles Oscar Finley would introduce Kuhn, the commissioner of major league baseball, who is speaking tonight at Mahar Auditorium at 7:45 p.m.

Others would disagree. There are those who would say Kuhn's running feud with Finley is the only buffer which has kept the Oakland Megalomaniac from poisoning baseball with his somewhat less-than-orthodox point of view.

Controversy still flares up when mention is made of Kuhn's nullification of Finley's attempted two million dollar sale of Rollie Fingers and Joe Rudi to the Red Sox in 1976, and his abortive million - and - a - half dollar peddling of Vida Blue to the New York Yankees in the same year. Kuhn later voided other attempts by Finley to sell Blue.

Both Fingers and Rudi left Oakland as free agents in 1977. They are with the San Diego Padres and the California Angels respectively. This year, Kuhn allowed Finley to trade Blue to the San Francisco Giants for a slew of players and a relatively modest sum of money.

The commissioner and the Oakland A's owner have had a veritable plethora of differences since Kuhn was elected top dog of the National Pastime in 1969. In that time, Finley has proposed to amend the Grand Old Game with orange baseballs, phoney medical reports, a count of two strikes constituting a strikeout, three balls a walk, designated hitters and night games in the World Series, to name just a few. The latter revision has since been voted into effect by the baseball owners, and the American League has adopted the designated hitter proposition.

Kuhn has fined Finley a healthy number of times, and may be one of the reasons Finley is trying to peddle his A's to a Denver concern, and extricate himself from baseball.

The topic of Kuhn's speech is "Baseball — A Five-Year Perspective," and it is the final lecture in the UMass Sport Management program's spring lecture series of prominent sport folks. Football Commissioner Pete Rozelle was an earlier notable presented by the Sport Management program.

Kuhn has a law degree from the University of Virginia, and before he was elected commissioner, Kuhn did legal work for baseball's National League.

UMass track awards

Ken O'Brien, head of the men's and women's track and cross country programs at UMass, has been named New England Coach of the Year for 1977 in Division I cross country.

Assistant Coach Arnie Morse made the announcement and presented O'Brien with a plague at the second annual track and cross country banquet Tuesday night in the campus center.

Track and cross country Most Valuable Players were named for both men's and women's squads, as well as next year's captains.

Junior Mike Quinn was named men's cross country MVP. Quinn was re-elected cross country co-captain, along with junior Louis Panaccione. Senior Jane Welzel, who graduated in December, was named women's cross country MVP. Junior Debbie Farmer and sophomore Barb Callanan were named co-captains for next season.

Women's track MVP was senior Nancy Cominoli. Co-captains for next season are Farmer and sophomore Cindi Martin. Men's track MVP was Joe Martens, with next year's captain being Gerard Hermann.

All captains and MVP's were chosen by the respective team members.

Gorillas battle well, but still fall to Cadets

By RUSS SMITH
Collegian Staff

Playing nationally ranked Army before the largest (1,000) home crowd of the season, Garber's Gorillas played in probably their best game of the year only to fall to the Cadets in the end 12-10.

Ignoring, for a minute, the fact they did lose the game, the team displayed decent passing, worked some good plays, and most of all, through their constant hitting, applied pressure on the Cadet attack. The team effort enabled the 'crossers to stay right with the sixth-rated Cadets.

Had it not been for a couple mistakes, UMass very easily could have won the game. With the backing of the hometown crowd, no Minuteman was run over by any Cadet. At times they even had the Arm running around haphazardly and had them looking shaky at times.

West Point fell behind 1-0 on a Pete Schmitz shot to army goalie Jose Olivero's right. Army's Ted Harkin had a chance to put the Cadets on the board but the rubber ball bounced off the post to Duck Goldstein's right side.

Army scored three goals in the first period to pull away to a 3-1 lead. However, Skip Vosburgh picked up a stray ball in front of the Army net and scooped it into the strings to put UMass to within one as the first quarter came to a close.

Brooks Sweet knotted the score at 3-3 after only thirteen seconds into second quarter. Again Army came back with two goals upping the score to 5-3. But again, the Minutemen came back.

Sweet hit for a goal and then Dave Martin's high shot also snuck by Olivero.

To keep in the spirit of things Army went up 7-5, and UMass came back to knot it again, 7-7-, just before the first half ended.

UMass never scored in the third period as many close passes just missed connections. Meanwhile, Army netted the ball twice, despite the superb job by UMass goalie Goldstein and the defense squads. Meanwhile at the opposite end of the field Olivero was also well in goal.

Down 9-7 UMass didn't give up and figure the game lost even though many fair weather fans exited early when Army went up by an 11-8 lead.

Saturday-Spring Concert day-is the New England title game. If UMass plays the way it did against Army, Harvard is going to have a rough going. And it's a long ride back to Cambridge.

... no "Round the crease this time." ... dot, dot, dot, ... the whole team played super ... an effort that came up just short .... of victory ...

Batsmen could make it

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Two weeks ago today, the UMass baseball team's chances of being chosen for the ECAC District I playoffs seemed deader than a Wilbur Wood fastball.

After all, a 9-15 record is hardly conducive to raising the eyebrows of anyone, much less a selection committee.

But after yesterday's doubleheader sweep over UConn, the Minutemen's prospects for making the four-team field are considerably brightened. Their record is now a vastly improved 15-17.

"I think our chances, if we win our remaining Division I games, to be considered for selection are good," UMass coach Dick Bergquist said. "If we win out two games with Providence this weekend, we really would be in contention."

Those two games — at home against Providence College — will indeed go a long way toward determining whether UMass goes to the playoffs after a one-year drought.

In 1976, the Minutemen came within one run of beating Maine in the double elimination tourney. The Black Bears went on to win the District I playoffs, the NCAA Northeast Regional Tournament, and represent this area in the College World Series.

A bit, though, about the matter at hand: Providence sports a 14-6 mark, and are currently in second place among District I schools. Obviously, UMass would create a favorable impression at this stage of the season with the committee if it sweeps the twinbill.

But the weekend set with the Friars is hardly the end of UMass's season-ending drive. Seven more games remain on the 42-game schedule, including a rematch with UConn and doubleheaders against Siena and Brown.

"It still depends on how we do against the rest of the Division I schools, like UConn, Brown and Siena," Bergquist said. "They're all necessary, but the biggest step right now is beating Providence."

The coach himself is in a rather peculiar position. He is the chairman of both the ECAC District I and NCAA Northeast Regional Tournament selection committees.

The other three members of the committee are coaches John Connelly (Northeastern), Don Cook (Fairfield), and Ken MacKenzie (Yale).

If UMass is one of the teams in contention for a playoff berth, Bergquist will disqualify himself from the selection procedure. The same holds true for any of the other three panelists.

The alternates are John Norris (Rhode Island) and Jack Whalen (Holy Cross). But Whalen will be out the window, since Holy Cross (21-7-2) and on top of the standings' appears to be a tourney shoo-in. Likewise, out goes Cook, since his Stags are 17-7 and second among the 11 teams in District I.

The committee is slated to meet Friday, May 12 and discuss the selection process. At least two or three of the select four will be named the following Sunday, while the others may not be named until Tuesday, May 16, according to Bergquist. The tourney is to be played May 20 and 21.

If the panel were to convene today, it would probably choose Holy Cross, Providence, Fairfield, and Boston College (11-5-1) to fill out the field. Maine (13-8) and UConn (14-10) would be close behind, as well as the Minutemen.

But records tell only part of the story, Bergquist said.

"Based on my experience, the committee would first look at the team's Northern record, overall record against Division I schools, and the caliber of competition," he explained. "Number two, pitching strength would be considered, and I think that would help us since we've shown we've had more than two good pitchers."

the strong Division I teams the Minutemen have seen in matches this spring, including Providence College, URI, Yale, Harvard, Holy Cross and arch-rival Amherst College.

The match will be a two day 36 hole tournament, with the best four of five scores counting each day.

Coach Ed Vlach said his lineup for the New Englands, the most important tournament of the year for the Minutemen, will be team captain Jim McDermott, who has played the most consistent golf of the year, Chuck Dempsey, who shot a 79 in the first match at Yale, Victor Lahteire, who finished fifth individually at Salem St., with a pair of 79's, Marty Hunt and Jeff Orr.

At stake in the tournament will be possible individual and team invitations to the National Championships, to be played in June.

Vlach said that because of the team's mediocre record thus far this spring, the Minutemen would have to do "very, very well in the tournament to even be considered for a birth." The two low individual scorers in the match will automatically draw invitations.

Baseball defense wins 2-header

By BILL TARTER
Collegian Staff

How sweet it is! The Jackie Gleasons familiar shout was created for moments like these.

The UMass baseball team, enjoying perhaps their finest hour of the season, made it look easy as it swept the University of Connecticut in a double header yesterday 3-1 and 5-1, at Lorden Field.

Winning both games of a doubleheader is always pleasing, but when it comes at the expense of last years New England Champ and perennial rival UConn, it truly doubles the pleasure.

Analysis inside

Pitchers Doug Welenc and Tom Nigro were the masters yesterday, relinquishing only one run a piece while breezing their way to complete game victories.

Welenc, now 6 and 3, allowed only four singles during seven innings of work in the opener. Granting only one run, Welenc maintained his 1.24, ERA second only to Holy Cross's Rich Jasinski at 1.21 for top honors in New England.

In the second game, Nigro won his third consecutive start, restoring his record to a respectable 5-4.

In neither game could UConn get an extra base hit as Nigro limited UConn to six singles while also striking out half a dozen. A two out last inning chopper brought home their only tally, spoiling Nigro's bid for a shutout.

Coach Dick Bergquist applauded his two hurlers, "The pitching today was great, Welenc and Nigro are a solid 1-2 punch."

"Along with the AIC game that was Nigro's best performance of the year, he was really throwing strikes. As for Welenc, I've said it before, I feel he is the finest pitcher in New England," concluded Bergquist.

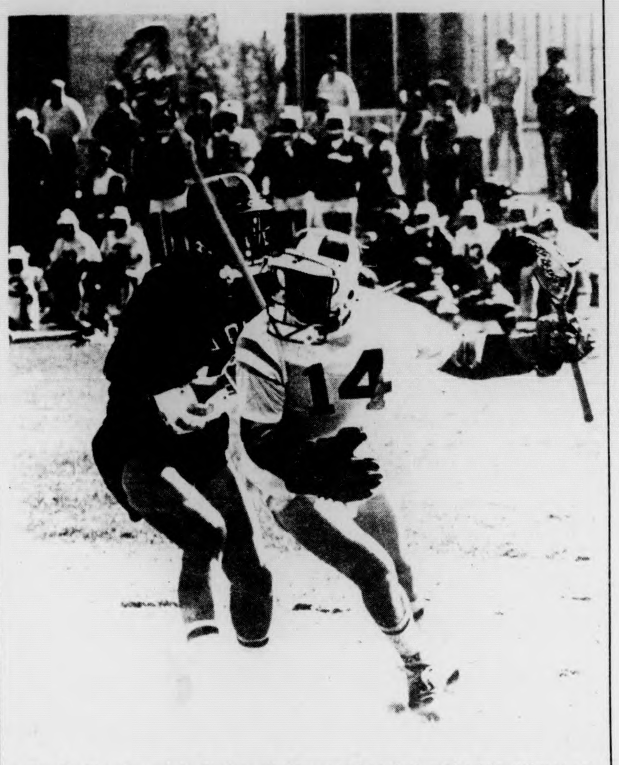
In order to provide the duo with their victories the Minutemen had to overcome two of Connecticuts aces Mike Fredericks and Dennis Long.

In the opener UMass got lone runs in the 2nd, 4th and the 6th off Fredericks. John Czerapowicz starting in only his second game of the year due to injuries figured strongly in the attack. His second inning double drove home Dale Stone with the team's first run, while his fourth inning single (his first two hits of the year) set up Mark Sullivan's game winning sacrifice fly. Sullivan responded again in the sixth, doubling home Leo Kalinowski with the insurance run.

One of Welenc's only times of trouble came in the fourth when UConn grouped three of their four hits together producing their one run. The Huskies threatened again in the seventh with the tying runners on 2nd and 3rd and only one out. But Welenc bore down and came in with the "express" to get Mike Panciera on strikes, and finally got pinch hitter John Capman to pop out to end the game.

In the second game the battery of Nigro and Charlie Ciccone took the game into their own hands. Ciccone provided his partner with all the runs he would need, lofting a towering fly ball over the left field wall for his third home run of the year. Mark Sulivan scored ahead of him getting on with a walk. By the time Nigro entered the fourth with a no hitter his team had supplied him with a four run lead.

The double loss virtually eliminated UConn from any tournament possibilities while it still gives the Minutemen a breath of hope. With a northern record of 14-9 (all that counts in the ECAC ratings) they have a chance to capture a fourth spot.



The Gorillas chased the Cadets all afternoon but sixth-ranked Army hung on to win 12-10 yesterday before an estimated 1,000 fans on the Hill. See story page 19.

Women's lacrosse team ties Springfield, 8-8

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

The Springfield College women's lacrosse team has come a long way this year, but certainly not far enough for them to tie a team with the talent that UMass has. Yet, that's exactly what happened yesterday as the two teams played to an 8-8 tie.

Springfield is a team which early in the season recognized their limited ability and opted not to enter the upcoming New England Playoffs, but they played an inspired game – something UMass didn't do.

this was not the same UMass team that tied New Hampshire and beat Rhode Island Saturday. Coach Frank Garahan said that yesterday's team didn't have any of the spirit that the team has had in their past games.

"We started off well but after a while we acted like we didn't care anymore," he said. "Actually we were lucky to get out of there with a tie."

UMass did start off quickly, grabbing a 6-2 halftime lead with Deb Hartley and Judy Kennedy scoring two goals each, but Garahan said that his team still wasn't playing well. Other first half scorers were Sue Kibling and Julie Hall, with two assists going to both Jean Hackett and Carri Nickerson.

Springfield got the momentum in the second half and closed the gap to 7-5. With less than ten minutes gone in the half, UMass scored their final goal and the score was 8-5. Second half scores were by Hackett and Fiona McAllister, who played "a fantastic second half", said Garahan after coming back from an ankle injury which sidelined her from the previous two contests.

The Chiefs came back and tied the score with about 2½ minutes remaining for the moral victory.

Goalie Robin Jennings "played an excellent game," said Garahan, stopping Springfield from walking away with a win. She made nine saves on the astroturf.

Garahan said that it's time to get back a better attitude before the playoffs start this weekend in Bridgewater.

He knows that the team is capable of playing better, and doesn't want to dwell on one game.

Men's golf try for Div. 1

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass Men's golf team will try to end an up and down spring season on a positive note this week, as they venture to New Haven Conn. for the two day New England Division I Championship, to be played tomorrow and Friday at demanding Yale Country Club.

For the Minuteman, who finished fifth in a field of 12 at the Salem State Tournament last weekend, this will be the second visit of the spring to the difficult Yale course. On the first trip down, the linksters finished second to Yale in a triangular match played April 6.

The Minutemen, who have won the New England's two of the last three years, will be facing the toughest field they have seen all spring in this year's tournament. Included in the competition will be several of ## Amato a heavyweight?

The UMass wrestling team won only five meets during the winter sports season, and this feat was followed by a somewhat (save for the heroics of John Allen) disappointing performance in the New England tourney.

Coach David Amato had been working for over a year in an attempt to restore UMass wrestling to the prominence that it once had under the guidance of the late Homer Barr, and I am sure that he viewed the team's failure in the New Englands as merely a part of that long climb back to the top.

Amato wants his team to be a good one, so he has worked tirelessly to recruit the best talent available and to mold that talent into perfection.

How successful has Amato been?

To begin with, anyone who has seen Amato the coach in action at a practice can appreciate his knowledge of the sport. To be more blunt, the man knows his shit.

And that is an attribute of a good coach.

I spoke about recruiting. Just ask why New England college wrestling coach who the most able high school recruiter in the region is and invariably the name David Amato will be cited. Oh sure, he does not always come up with the best talent, but then he does not have the recruiting money that Boston University, Rhode Island, and other have either.

In spite of this handicap, Amato brought to Amherst a number of top-notch high school grapplers from Massachusetts, New York, and New Jersey for this past season and he has already made tentative plans to bring another fine crop along in September.

That too, is an attribute of a good coach.

However, Amato encountered problems this past season that I do not believe he anticipated. During his rookie season as coach two years ago, the team was adorned with mature upperclassmen. Keeping the crew in line was rarely a problem and everything ran rather smoothly.

But this season was different. There were an amazing number of freshmen performing where seniors performed just one season earlier. The only real veterans on the squad were Tim Fallon and Larry Otsuka.

What David Amato should have done was treated this conglomerate of rookies with the same leadership he so gracefully exhibited the season before. He was too gentle with some wrestlers, too strict with others. He left doubt as to if he could win, and maintain, the respect of his entire team.

David Amato is so dedicated to his job and to his sport that he sometimes forgets that he is dealing with human beings and I do not for one second compare him with such thoughtless scoundrels as Ohio State's Woody Hayes or Indiana's Bobby Knight. Those morons are out to win at all costs and without respect to human emotion, but Amato does not fit into that mold. He wants a respectable wrestling program, but I don't think he is the win-at-all-costs type. He also has respect for his athletes, even though he didn't always show it.

I like Amato as a coach and I think that UMass is very fortunate to have him. It is because I like him that I feel justified to be able to compliment the man for his accomplishments while criticizing him for his faults.

UMass is on the verge of becoming once again competitive with BU and URI in wrestling, and Dave Amato is the reason for this prediction. All he has to remember is that he is dealing with people, and people are not always on the ball. They also have problems.

If Amato can keep that in mind in the coming season, then perhaps he will understand it when a wrestler wants to leave the team for personal reasons. Perhaps he will realize too, that when you have a highly-touted crybaby on the team it is better for the sake of the entire team to just throw him out the door rather than pamper him.

Then his men will realize that they are dealing with a class guy.

CAS profs rap Bromery in vote

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

The faculty of the College of Arts and Sciences at a meeting last night informally expressed "no-confidence" in Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

However, the faculty did not formalize that sentiment into a resolution.

Instead, faculty members today will begin circulating petitions around campus expressing their "no confidence."

Bromery last night said the faculty's action was "their constitutional right" and called it a "union vote." He had no other comment.

The informal expression of "no confidence" came after meeting moderator and co-ordinating Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences T. O. Wilkonson refused to allow philosophy professor Robert Wolff to make a motion for the body to express "no confidence" in Bromery. Instead, after complicated parliamentary maneuvering, Wilkonson allowed Wolff to, in effect, "say what he was going to say."

Wolff then read a motion he said he was going to have proposed that expressed "no confidence" in Bromery. His remarks were greeted with a loud round of applause from nearly all the approximately 100 faculty members present.

The College of Arts and Sciences is UMass' largest academic college and includes some 800-850 faculty members.

In other business, the faculty forged an alliance of sorts with the Massachusetts Society of Professors.

"I think what I'll be doing," Wolff said last night, "is circulating a petition now."

Wolff said the text of his petition, which will be circulated by other faculty members also, will be:

"Whereas, the chancellor of this campus, in his role as vice-president for labor relations, has advanced and defended bargaining proposals subversive of the most fundamental principles of academic life; and,

"Whereas, we will not accept as the president of our University any person who does not support the fundamental principles of academic life;

"Therefore, we the undersigned express no confidence in the chancellor and call upon the board of trustees to remove his name from the list of candidates for president."

As UMass senior vice-president for faculty labor relations, Bromery has come under fire from faculty members for administration proposals on a contract the two sides are currently negotiating.

In forging the alliance with the Massachusetts Society of Professors, the faculty passed two resolutions introduced by and sponsored primarily by the MSP.

In one resolution, the faculty said they were "profoundly concerned over the failure of our central administration and board of trustees to repair the damage wrought by years and years without significant salary increases" and were "even more concerned with the continued quality of education" in the college because of the administration contract proposals.

The resolution said such items are "intolerably inconsistent" with the nature of a university and called upon the UMass Board of Trustees to "renew its commitment" to traditional faculty procedures and to direct the administration to proceed accordingly.

The resolution passed after a line which

'Everything is lovely' for spring concert

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

With one day left before the Duke Ellington Spring Music Festival, everything is going "lovely," according to a festival official.

"All of our problems have been worked out," said festival coordinator Stanley Kinard. "Everything is lovely. It should be a great show."

Unlike last year's spring concert which was behind schedule all day, Kinard said the gates at Alumni Stadium, where the event is to be held, will open at 10:03 a.m. and the show will begin promptly at 11 a.m."

The five acts that will perform tomorrow are scheduled to last an hour each, with a half hour intermission between each one.

Buddy Guy and Junior Wells will open the festival at 11 a.m., followed by the Duke Ellington Orchestra at 12:30 p.m., Patti Labelle at 2, McCoy Tyner at 3:30 and Pharaoh Sanders at 5.

Neither Kinard nor anyone else connected with the festival who was contacted last night had figures on how many people have already picked up tickets.

But "there have been long lines" at TIX, a ticket agency for campus activities, Kinard said and "I'm expecting a big crowd. We're planning for thousands."

UMass students can get free passes to the festival upon presentation of a student I.D. at the TIX office, located next to the Senate Note Service in the Student Union Building.

TIX, which normally opens at 10 a.m., will stay open until 9 p.m. tonight to accommodate students, Kinard said. Passes may also be obtained at the gate tomorrow. Students must have passes and I.D.'s to get in.

Non-UMass students can buy tickets for $6 and non students for $7 at Ticketron Outlets. These tickets will also be sold at the gate.

Depending on the weather, which will probably affect crowd size, Kinard said, there will be from 15 to 30 UMass police on duty at the festival. There will also be a student security force of about 85 people.

And the policy of no "bottles or cans" will be strictly enforced, Kinard said.

"We'll be looking for cans and bottles," Kinard said.

Former UMass cop acquitted in rape case

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Former UMass policeman MIchael Bozak, accused of raping a Greenfield Community College woman in August 1976, yesterday was acquitted of the charge in Hampshire Superior Court.

The jury of nine men and three women deliberated for less than three hours before announcing their verdict, according to Clerk of Courts Salvatore Polito.

The 22-year-old woman was working with the UMass Department of Public Safety doing field work in law enforcement and was assigned to patrol duty with Buzak on the night of the alleged crime.

According to a court official, the woman testified that Bozak kissed her several times at the beginning of their shift and she told Bozak she did not want him kissing her. When they returned to police headquarters, the woman reported Bozak's actions but the officer on duty told her she was "exaggerating," the official said.

The woman said when they returned to their patrol, Bozak made "a suggestion" to her and then she said Bozak raped her outside of the car.

According to the court officer, the woman was afraid to report the rape to the other officers because "she didn't trust them." She said Bozak took her to a Route 9 restaurant after their duty.

Bozak confirmed the woman's testimony but said she consented to sexual intercourse when they were out of the car.

According to a source, Bozak has been unemployed for two years since being forced to resign the UMass force after a disciplinary hearing.

UMass Director of Public Safety Saul L. Chafin was unavailable for comment.

Summer job market—flexibility will help

By PATRICIA KEEFE
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the second in a two-part series on summer jobs.

The Student Employment Office, unlike the Placement Service, specializes in non-work-study, part-time, off-campus employment.

Any summer job offers received at placement are sent to Ellie West Conry, assistant co-ordinator and job developer of off-Campus and part-time jobs.

West could not characterize the summer job market for students saying, "there's not enough perspective; the National Unemployment figures do not include students."

West said, "The student who is more flexible in what he will do and where he will live has a better chance of getting a job."

Addressing the idea of competition from high school students, she said, "I don't think the high school student has the jump. Too many jobs specify over 18 or 21 or look for students with courses in specific fields."

West did say, however, "It depends on the area and company.

Some companies have a policy of hiring the sons and daughters of employees."

"In an area like Amherst, with a high number of high school and returning college students, as well as the five-College student population, the local employer will hire the kid next door," said West.

There are many jobs available according to West. She stressed summer camp jobs, sales on commission jobs, vacation relief, anything child-care related and 4,000 state jobs.

As part of her job, West contacted 850 in-state companies and about 100 organizations across the country who specifically said they hired students. Almost all companies said they gave high priority to those students with relatives in the company.

She also contacted chambers of commerce in beach towns "because they are a high priority with students." Many responded that they received enough walk-ins without placing ads with college employment services. West said "these employers want to see faces and talk to any applicants in person."

At the office, besides a summer job book, students can obtain the first edition of the "Student Employment News". This edition contains listings of off-campus summer employment only. Future editions will contain both off-campus and on-campus jobs as well as listings for both work-study and non-work-study students.

West said she is "proud of this first attempt to make life easier for students." She added "it would be ideal if the Collegian would publish free, as a student service, job listings. More students would be reached." The office hopes to publish listings on a weekly basis as well as to do a mailing.

In terms of publicity, West said, "we can do as much as is necessary." "An important part of getting a job is knowing how to go about it and what you want", said West. Students can come in and talk with West about job strategies.

The trio of Mashed Potatoes pictured above will be performing their comedy tonight at 8 p.m. in Herter Hall.

Mashed Potatoes perform comedy

By FRAN BASCHE
Collegian Staff

Bo Jaillie, Gabby and Bingle can be clones, clowns, salesmen, mothers, judges and a variety of other characters that combine to create humor that "defies categorization" — Mashed Potatoes.

When they're off stage Joe Baillie is a journalism-English major graduating this month, Steven Kravitz (Gabby) is a junior studying the performing arts, and Alan Silberberg (Bingle) is a sophomore considering a possible career as an illustrator.

Together they form Mashed Potatoes, a comedy group scheduled to perform in Herter tonight. The free show is being sponsored by the BDIC Mosaic Series, and begins at 8 p.m.

The act started with only Kravitz and Silberberg on campus radio station WMUA on a Monday night. Baillie heard their routine and asked to join. The trio now performs at area clubs in addition to their bi-weekly radio comedy on WMUA.

Kravitz said the group began at the City Studio Cabaret, a professional reperatory threatre in Northampton, where it performed late at night on weekends, after other performers had finished their acts.

It is Baillie who said the group's sense of humor "defies categorization." Kravitz and Silberberg agree. They say the humor ranges from slapstick to vaudeville to political skits. Kravitz, who is going to Europe next semester to study mime, includes his art in the skits. Outrageous clothes, hats and props are also used.

The group says it gets its ideas for skits the same way it finds props — anywhere and anything. Previous skits have included "Mutant Matinee-a Genetic Love Story", aired on WMUA and "Talk is Cheap", a satire on talk shows.

The preparation for tonight's performance has been done entirely by the trio. Silberberg says the group plans to "set up craziness" to involve the audience in its antics by using refreshments, helium balloons and "auditions for an audience."

Kravitz and Silberberg, who grew up together in Worcester, both live in Van Meter North dormitory. Baille, from Marblehead, lives in Dickinson dormitory.

called for the "selective withdrawal of service, not to the injury of students" was deleted. The line called for that action in order to resist the "intolerably inconsistent" administration actions.

The second resolution directed the three academic deans in the college to communicate to their superiors that "department chairpersons must remain members of the collective bargaining unit as recognized by the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission" and that the deans should "urge the administration to honor legislative intent and grant the two and one-half percent increase to all members of the collective bargaining unit."

The state legislature last year granted the pay raise to all state employees. The administration has said the raise must be negotiated as part of a final contract.

Handicapped students push for bus lift

By DAN GUIDERA
Collegian Staff

The Handicapped Students Collective and the director of Balanced Transportation William Barrett continue to disagree on the University's method of complying with Section 504 of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare's guidelines on transportation of handicapped students.

The Handicapped Students Collective is pushing for the adoption of a wheelchair lift to be fitted on the front door of UMass' buses. Barrett is in favor of expanding the present van service rather than implementing the lifts.

Advocates of the front-lift system, currently being manufactured by Transportation Design and Technology of San Diego, claim that Barrett was unaware of this device when he made his decision.

Barrett said he did not have the data on the front door lifts when he initially met with the students. "I couldn't get in touch with TDT," he said. However, Chairperson of the Transportation Committee of the Collective Peggy Griffin said she was able to reach TDT after three phone calls.

In his first public statement on the matter, Barrett ruled out the front-lift method and rejected a back-lift system because it was unworkable and inconvenient to the driver. Barrett still plans to go ahead with his original plan.

Although Griffin claims that the lifts are 90 percent maintenance free and some models are already in use, Barrett said, "The state of the art of the lifts is just not there." Both Barrett and Les Smith of TDT said the lifts would not be available for a year, but Griffin said Smith told her in a phone call that the lifts could be made ready in four to six months.

The front-door lifts, priced in the area of $12,000 to $15,000 would be less expensive than expanded van service, primarily because vans require more maintenance and drivers with a degree of medical skills. Barrett said the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority agrees with his plan and will assist in the funding. However, Griffin said 90 percent of the cost of the lifts would be paid for by the state and Federal governments.

In his original report, Barrett expected difficulties in schedules if the buses were equipped with lifts. "The worst scenerio possible would be two or three wheelchairs at every stop on a crowded run. There would be a problem in moving the ambulatory people around to let the handicapped people on and off." Griffin said the lifts would take approximately one minute for each person, but if run properly the schedules would not be noticeably affected.

The TDT lifts would not require the inconvenience to the driver as was described in Barrett's first report, according to Griffin. At no time would the driver have to leave the bus; he simply would operate the lift by remote control, she said. Barrett, however, expressed reservations about the method of securing the wheelchairs once they were on the bus.

Griffin said she expected, handicapped students to have to greater difficulty than other students in getting to the buses. She said Barrett's belief that the buses would not be accessible to handicapped students in the winter was exaggerated.

Court hears Bonin charges

BOSTON [AP] — Nine misconduct charges against suspended Superior Court Chief Justice Robert M. Bonin will be heard by the seven justices of the state Supreme Court, the court decided yesterday.

The justices said the charges will be treated as an information — a formal accusation against a lawyer that can be the basis for disciplinary proceedings leading to disbarment, suspension or censure.

The court ordered Bonin to answer or plead to the charges by May 12 and said the hearings will begin between May 31 and June 5.

The court's Committee on Judicial Responsibility brought the charges of misconduct and normally would hold the hearings.

But, Supreme Court Justice Francis J. Quirico had said the case was unusual because of Bonin's position, and the Superior Court should not be without a chief justice for long.

Bonin could have asked the court to hold a hearing after committee hearings on the charges.

"He Bonin intends to deny those charges when the time comes," Paul R. Sugarman, one of Bonin's lawyers, told the full bench of the high court yesterday at a hearing on whether the court would take over the proceedings.

Charges against Bonin include attending a fund raising even when knowing some of the proceeds were to be used indirectly for the defense of men indicted on sex charges, lying under oath in denying that knowledge, and trying to persuade an aide to cover up for him about that knowledge.

Robert W. Meserve, special counsel to the Judicial Responsibility Committee, told the Supreme Court yesterday that committee members were willing to conduct hearings on the charges, but "they authorized me to say they recommend the matter be taken by the full bench.

"The issues in the case, in some aspects, may be issues of credibility, and they ought to be determined once and for all," he said.

Both sides agree the hearings should be open to the public and completed as swiftly as possible.

"I said.... Bonin in this instance will want a public hearing to deny the charges," Sugarman said.

But, he suggested the matter could be handled as quickly by a hearing officer to be named by the justices after both sides submitted names. This would be following the committee hearing route.

Meserve said it might take until August to resolve the matter if it were given to a hearing officer, while it could be resolved the week following the start of hearings before the high court.

Police officer sentenced

NORTHAMPTON [AP] — Luke Scanlan, a Northampton police officer for 10 years, has been sentenced to serve six to nine years in prison for some $50,000 worth of burglaries committed while on duty and in uniform.

As he imposed the prison term yesterday, Hampshire Superior Court Judge John M. Greaney called Scanlan, "a rogue cop, a thief and burglar." Saying that a former policeman faces "a great risk of personal harm" at Walpole state prison, Greaney recommended that the sentence be served at the Franklin County House of Correction in Greenfield.

Scanlan was found guilty in March of a three-year string of 13 break-ins at Northampton businesses. Patrolman Donald Roy, who testified against Scanlan, admitted also taking part.

House members' holdings

WASHINGTON [AP] — About one-third of House members have $100,000 or more in outside financial interests and several have portfolios so diversified that many votes they cast could affect their finances, House records show.

Only 22 members reported they had no significant income outside their basic $57,500 congressional salary.

Several reported they were heavily in debt. Rep. Fermand St. Germain, who heads a House subcommittee that oversees banking practices, disclosed debts of more than $500,000. The debts apparently are secured by five commercial properties which he owns and rents.

The first detailed look at the financial holdings of the 435 House members showed than 153 had financial interests of more than $100,000, excluding personal residences.

It did not, however, show which members of Congress were millionaires. Members were required only to state whether their holdings in any one company exceeded certain limits. There was no requirement that they state how much those holdings actually were.

As a result, Rep. Frederick Richmond, R-N.Y., who has said previously that he is a millionaire, was shown only as having more than a $100,000 interest in Walco National Corp., in which he owns 750,0?2 shares, and more than a $100,000 interest in Walco-Linck Corp., in which he holds 87½ shares.

The financial statements of several members read like a blue chip index of the stock exchange. Several congressmen held such diverse financial interests that many of their votes were on issues that could affect their finances.

Several others who held only limited stocks also had legislative responsibilities that placed them in a position of voting on matters in which they held an interest.

Rep. Richard Bollings, D-Mo., a senior member of the House Energy Committee, reported that he had between $15,000 and $50,000 in Standard Oil of California stock and between $50,000 and $100,000 in Texaco stock.

He also reported between $15,000 and $50,000 in General Motors Corp. stock. General Motors has a large stake in the outcome of any energy legislation since its products use a sizable portion of the nation's gasoline supply.

Several congressmen listed large debts. Chairman Jack Brooks, D-Texas, of the House Government Organizations Committee, listed debts of at least $365,000 and holdings approaching $1 million.

VP promises Thais planes

BANGKOK, Thailand [AP] — Vice President Walter F. Mondale promised new warplanes and reaffirmed an American commitment to defend Southeast Asia in talks with Thailand's leader yesterday.

Mondale also said the United States would accept tens of thousands more Indochina refugees.

"Our own peace depends on the Pacific area," Mondale declared in a champagne toast at a state dinner.

Prime Minister Kriangsak Chomanan, in his toast, praised the U.S. decision to take in more refugees, saying it reflects President Carter's "concern for human rights and high standard of morality."

After a two-hour meeting with the vice president, Kriangsak said Mondale told him Washington would honor the 1954 Manila Pact and its protocols,

In public opinion poll

Carter's job rating plummets

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans think President Carter is an honest, hard-working man, but they don't think he has gotten much done as a president.

That's the finding of the latest Associated Press—NBC News poll, taken this week.

Moreover, Carter's job rating has plummeted once again, with Americans' judgment of his performance at levels touched only by Richard Nixon among recent occupants of the Oval Office.

Only 29 per cent of those questioned said Carter has done a good or excellent job in office, compared with 69 per cent who rated his work as fair or poor.

Two per cent were undecided in the telephone interviews conducted Monday and Tuesday.

That is down four points since the last AP—NBC News poll in March.

A question similar to the AP—NBC News wording has been asked in recent years by pollster Louis Harris. The current AP—NBC News rating on Carter is lower than the lowest point found by Harris on either Lyndon Johnson or Gerald Ford. Only Nixon's 71-26 negative rating in March 1974 is lower than Carter's current rating.

Asked about specific areas, the public's rating of Carter dropped in foreign affairs, energy and the economy.

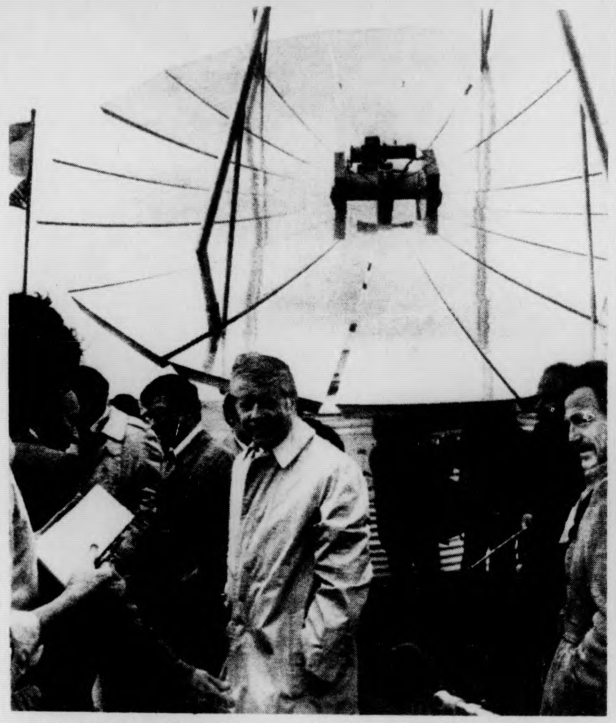
The poll was taken before the government released its latest finding of a major jump in wholesale prices and before Carter began his fence-mending tour to Western states.

And these declines came despite Carter's first major foreign policy victory — Senate approval of the Panama Canal treaties — and despite settlement of the coal strike and announcement of his anti-inflation program.

About 80 per cent of the 1,600 adults interviewed agreed with statements that Carter is honest and that he is hard-working. Only about 14 per cent disagreed with either statement.

But 63 per cent disagreed with the statement: "As president, Jimmy Carter has shown that he can get things done." Thirty-one per cent agreed with the statement and 6 per cent were undecided.

Fighting inflation was one major area where the poll found public sentiment that Carter has not done enough.



GOLDEN, Colo. (UPI) — President Jimmy Carter views various solar energy displays atop South Table Mesa Wednesday, the site of the Solar Research Institute. Behind Carter is a large solar collector. It rained during the president's Sun Day visit.

'Party weekend' taken advantage of

To the Editor:

Last Saturday there were a number of incidences of violence and disruption. Occurrences of sexual assault, including two rapes, took place at UMass. A bonfire was set in the quad at the Northeast dormitory area and several incidents of vandalism occurred at the Southwest residential area.

It is apparent that many people from all over the state flock to the campus, drawn by the opportunity to drink for 8-12 hours, and are left to devise their own entertainment in a very loosely structured environment.

It is unfortunate that the opportunity to relax, forget our studies and have a good time this weekend at a concert could, once again, be taken advantage of by some, and used as a time to inflict damage and harm the unsuspecting.

Therefore, we, the counselor-advocates of the UMass Rape Task Force, encourage all women to take added precaution in being alert for themselves and each other for potentially harmful situations developing around these party weekends.

UMass Rape Task Force

Oppression does not exist in isolation

To the Editor:

I wish to strongly support the efforts now being made on behalf of men and women to acquire a women's section in the Collegian. Certainly no set of issues deserves greater attention than those pertaining to the relation of men and women. It is the quality of this relation, I believe, that most reflects our development as a species.

To deny an oppressed group a formal space for expression is to deny them the opportunity of public discourse and the chance to define and clarify their ideas and aspirations. It is to deny them that precious human power to become authors of their own project. And because such an act implicitly denies their oppression, it is wrong. But moreover, because it militates against their solidarity it is more than wrong, it is cruel.

It is easy to find fault with those who are disadvantaged. It is easy to give little consideration to women painfully struggling to explore their self-understanding or to make fun of if not dismiss a movement that is often divided. And surely it is easy to align oneself with those who find comfort in celebrating the dominant male or the "Cosmopolitan girl". But those engaged in such shallow celebration are constructing a chain which today may glitter and dazzle the eye but which tomorrow will constrain all our development. For even impoverished thought "weighs like a nightmare" when it is embodied in a shared set of practices. Our collective efforts would be more fruitful, although more difficult, if we too painfully explored our self-understanding and searched for those actions and beliefs, which give feminists, divided though they may be, a common cause.

A friend of mine explained to me that despite the subtle put-downs and over-threats that she frequently experiences, she has disciplined herself to preserve deep within her, above all else, a human identity. Such a posture is indeed admirable. She isn't captured by sexism, she is transcending it. She seems to be saying that the concept of man and woman move always in a half embrace, where one is unintelligible without the other. Is not the flip side machoism the "total woman?" If the concepts of man and woman constitute a relation, then the oppression of one cannot exist in isolation, and to castigate either men or women is to express self-contempt.

We all need to discipline ourselves to probe more deeply the ideas that we share, so as not to be captured by the forces of oppression that we are seeking to overcome, and to insure that our relation to the world is always a human one. Surely a women's section would contribute to these ends.

Jerry Fresia

Faculty ought to be valued

To the Editor:

One would think that the University's primary commitment would be to creative and original teaching and thought. One would think that the people in charge would take students preferences into consideration. If it has not been brought to your attention that this is absolutely not the truth, permit me to disabuse you of your naive trust.

John Marry, who I am taking a course with this semester, is a classics professor. He is an excellent, captivating, thought provoking teacher; the very opposite of a narrow minded, narrowly focused person. Ask anyone who is taking or has taken one of John's classes, and you will hear nothing but the highest praise for him. Look in the course description guide where three of his courses are reviewed. The degree and unanimity of approval is astonishing.

All this apparently means nothing to the people who fired John Marry. The provost fired him last year, ostensibly because he hadn't published [odd, I thought teaching was most important]. Then, the provost got fired himself! So, his decisions were "reconsidered." In the meantime, John had published. But lack of a reason didn't stop the reconsideration committee. In their infinite callousness, stupidity, and general incompetence, the committee merely reiterated the ex-provost's decision. John had published, so what justification for firing could they give now? That't right, none. They told him he was fired, without giving any reason whatsoever. Imagine yourself being told in a brief memo that you were expelled, with absolutely no explanation!

We pay for our education, and yet we have no official or even unofficial voice in the quality of it. Justice, democracy, and humane treatment are all very nice, just don't start bringing that garbage into the University.

David Brin

Feminists guilty of oppression?

To the Editor:

I read with interest that Black Affairs has suspended publication of their pages due to the recent occupation of Collegian and adjoining offices by the women's feminists' group.

Doesn't it seem that the feminists are oppressing the Black community of UMass by denying them the pages they deserve?

Paul Gusciora

Progress begins with awareness

To the Editor:

In regard to your recent rape report I would like to say that I think it is about time you've paid some attention to these happenings on our campus. The beginning of making some progress with this problem starts with public awareness not to mention the value of printing the artist's sketches. I would like to think that it was your own commitment to your obligation to report the news that is important that prompted you to publish that report but I can't help to feel that it is merely a by-product of the efforts of those people who are insisting the Collegian print the news and concerns of the women's movement. To me it only points out how much we really need some more "coverage" in this area. Want to get the office cleared out?... then give the people there what they're asking for.

David Sauer

Protesters: 'Start writing'

To the Editor:

More precisely, to the Collegian office occupants:

So, how has life been treating you, tucked inside the Collegian's chamber? Office still in order? Just wondering, since I, an objective Collegian reporter, have not roamed its interior for days.

I choose not to offer my opinion nor advice, but rather a recommendation. [In event that this letter reaches press after the occupation has passed, I offer it as a suggestion to future movements deciding to inhabit an organization's Campus Center space.]

Within the Collegian office lie scattered many typewriters [some even in workable order], numerous blank sheets of typing paper, several telephones, and other useful items, such as pens, pencils, dictionaries, and thesauruses. If your demands are met, then stories must be written to fill those precious inches every time they are allotted. So, you might as well set your fingers flying over those typewriter keys and bang out informative stories. Providing the stories are written and submitted in acceptable English grammar and style, I am certain they will be read, edited [a practice for all stories] and probably printed. If, perchance, your demands are not met, again follow this suggestion. You will obtain the same result — more printed news on women's issues.

Also, be eleemosynary, crop some photos for the Index and Stockbridge yearbook, and sort several orders for the Sporting Goods Co-op.

I better cut my letter here, rather than mention integration without segregation, or the administration's involvement [rather lack of] with this circumstance or the degree of sexism this newspaper prints, before I begin prating to the worthlessness of everyone. Whatever the outcome, be prepared to fulfill your demands with alacrity.

Martha A. Kimball

'Bastille no longer stands'

To the Editor:

I would like to respond to the letter submitted by Gary Winn on May 3, 1978.

Mr. Winn prided himself on taking the initiative in submitting a letter to editor — he remarked that this was an action the protesting women had never bothered to do. At this point, I beg to differ with Mr. Winn, asking specifically that reference be made to a letter co-written by this writer in the April 17th issue of the Collegian, which discusses the Collegian's ideas and coverage of women's news. This however has not been the only article submitted. In addition to several other letters to the editor from men and women throughout the community, the Collegian has included editorial columns from Women's Editor, Julie Melrose.

Secondly, it is important to clear up the common misconception [which Mr. Winn articulates] which conceives women to be a "special interest group." Women are not a special interest group. They are 51% of the population who only ask that they not be denied the information which directly affects their lives. Ideally topics such as rape, abortion laws, and contraception should be everybody's concern. At any rate the protesters are interested in such coverage, although the media apparently is not.

Anyone who takes the time to read any kind of alternative publication will realize that there is a whole other side of the world than that presented through the eyes of the "white middle-class male". And this other side is not necessarily sexist, racist, facist, or subversive. It's just another point of view. Before the prospective Women's Section can be labeled "sexist trash", it should be given a chance to prove itself otherwise.

My last point involves Mr. Winn's comparison of the Collegian occupation to the storming of the Bastille. This is the most valid thing he had to say. The Bastille was a symbolic measure carried out to destroy a symbol of oppression. The Collegian protesters feel that the media [specifically the Collegian] is an oppressive force. In either case, when the empowered institution refused to acknowledge the needs of those who complained, drastic action was the only solution. The Bastille no longer stands.....

Rita Zeidner

Priorities show lack of concern

To the Editor:

I recently sent the following grievance to Mr. Arthur Warren, Director of UMass Food Services.

This letter concerns the priorities of the University of Massachusetts Food Services. Is it your responsibility to provide students with sanitary working conditions? Is it your responsibility to provide students with a peaceful dining area? These are questions I recently asked myself, because it seems that they are not matters of prime concern to the Food Services Department.

This past March 17, the last day of school before spring vacation, I saw the Food Services Catering Department come into Franklin Dining Commons, and prepare the building for two banquets to be held in the next three days. These banquets were not for UMass students. What bothers me is that an immaculate cleaning job was undertaken, because "important" people would be using the building. Such a job, I was told by many full-time Franklin employees, would not have occurred if the banquets had not been scheduled. Claims by management that yes, such an operation would have been undertaken, cannot carry much weight. The building, whose dining area was so spotless for the banquets, had filthy dishrooms when students returned to school on March 27. These areas, where the majority of student employees work, were contaminated with garbage from the banquets. They smelled rather badly. It is obvious the efforts which were made to clean the building for Franklin's guests were not made for its primary users.

Furthermore, as another insult to students, the cleaning operation undertaken by the Catering Department began at mid-day on March 17, meaning that many students had their meals disrupted. While eating their lunch and dinner, students were forced to relocate amidst the noise of workers moving tables and chairs, and cleaning floors. I must ask you, Mr. Warren, what are your priorities?

It has been over three weeks since I sent this letter. Yet, I have not received a reply to it in any form. This negligence must truly show what Mr. Warren and the rest of the Food Service hierarchy think of UMass students and their concerns.

Sincerely,
Bill Henning

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Executive Editor, co-o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. on the day preceding that date.

Anatomy 106: Ear bending

By BILL EDELSTEIN

In a world of bad security risks, students are rated the clearance of a basketball to the eighteenth hole at Pebble Beach by administrators and faculty. The information which does finally trickle down to the rank and file undergraduate has been better filtered than Hugh Hefner's sauna pool.

During the past few days, a reverse trend has been apparent. University professors and bureaucrats alike seem to have taken a crash course in Anatomy 106: Elementary Ear-Bending. Yep, ever since the UMass faculty announced it would withhold grades, there has been an orgy of revelation within the university community.

Coming out of the Blue Wall on my way to some necessary relief, I was collared by Dr. Awekes Paye, Imperial Wizard of the Massachusetts Society of Perfessers.

"Hi," said Paye amiably, pinning me up against the wall. "Mind listening to my problems?"

"Be glad to," I smiled, shifting uncomfortably.

"Great! Great!" boomed Paye, loosening his grip just a tad. First off, the administration won't give in to my demands for increased benefits."

"That's horrible!" I gasped. "Everybody is entitled to increased benefits. What are you going to do?"

"Oh, I guess I won't turn in students' grades at the end of the semester," said Paye, his grip tightening.

"Fine," I choked. "Tell me more."

"Lately my back has been giving me trouble."

"There's a lot of that going around."

"Went to a chiropractor, but he said he was afraid to do anything. He said he never works on anybody with such a fragile backbone," lamented Paye.

"Did you try traction?" I offered.

"Too painful. I think I'll just tell the dining commons to dissolve Doane's Pills in the Garbanzo Bean Soup."

"I think they already do."

"My hemorrhoids have been acting up, too," moaned Doc Paye. "So I'm going to have to demand that the university begin preparations for a new core requirement."

" 'Preparation H' core?"

"Yep, I'm putting the squeeze on somebody else."

"Mercy."

"Moreover, I'm worried about the unemployment problem."

"Aren't we all."

"Luckily," smiled Paye, "there is a solution. I've discovered that work-study jobs are taking away work from more needy people. Work-study should be scrapped."

"But those jobs are menial labor," I pointed out. "Jobs like dorm security, dining commons dishwasher, library book-checker ... With students exempted, who'd accept a job like that?"

"Untenured professors," winced Paye.

"Sorry to hear that," I commiserated, my beer shifting uncomfortably.

"Then there's the Mideast crisis," shuddered Paye. "That's such a tense situation, it's been keeping me up nights."

I nodded. "I know the feeling, but there's nothing any of us at UMass can do."

"I wouldn't speak so quickly," chided Paye. "Recently I have found the answer."

"You have the answer to the crisis in the Mideast?!" I exclaimed, much impressed.

"Not in the strict sense of the word, no," Paye admitted. "But I figure that if the university were to establish a nine o'clock curfew, it would help me sleep nights."

"Is there anything else?" I asked, trying to wiggle free.

"Just one more item," said Paye offhandedly.

"Shoot," I cringed.

"The cost of living troubles me, as well," began the doctor. "And on a professor's salary, the situation will get worse before it gets better. So I'm asking the university for a pay raise that should keep the wife and kids in filet mignon for at least the next two or three years."

"Sounds great," I enthused. "But cash is tight all over. Who are you going to get the money from?"

Paye chuckled softly and took his hands from my throat. He straightened his tie, turned and walked away.

"Silly boy," he murmured, plunging into the crowded Blue Wall.

For the duration of the occupation, readers wishing to submit letters may leave them in the Collegian mailbox, at the Bus Ticket window in the lobby of the hotel, on the third floor of the Campus Center.

Protester responds

julie melrose

In response to Candy Carlon's 4-4-78 editorial, offensively entitled "More Feminist Rhetoric":

First of all, I must express my deep dismay at the fact that Candy and I, after struggling together for months to improve the quality of women's news in the Collegian, now find ourselves on "opposite sides of the fence", both literally and figuratively.

I believe Candy's editorial and her absence at the occupation are testimony to what happens to women who rebel and are then subject to campaigns of psychological warfare that make them retreat into passivity. Candy has struggled consistently and courageously to make women's news in the paper more than a token. Although she may not support our current actions, the women involved in the occupation recognize and appreciate the time and energy Candy has expended to help women gain access to the media.

Referring to specific points in the editorial:

Candy claims that the occupiers are a small group who do not represent many women. The women occupying the office advocate feminism as a healthier way of life for all women. We feel that many women who do not share our views might do so were it not for the refusal of white male-controlled media institutions to even present a feminist point of view for consideration.

The struggle at the Collegian is by no means an isolated one. It is one of many current attempts by women all over the country to gain a public voice and the opportunity to present news to women that has not been filtered through men's perceptions and priorities.

The Collegian occupiers have been receiving messages of support and solidarity from women all across the country; women who recognize the significance of their actions and know that if their struggle is successful, it will mean a victory for all women.

A national telegram campaign is underway to let Chancellor Bromery and Bill Sundstrom know that if any action is taken against the occupiers, or if the occupiers' demands are not met, the UMass administration and the Collegian staff will have to deal with an even greater force than they presently face.

Expressions of support from such respected feminists as Robin Morgan, Mary Daly, Elaine Noble and Andrea Dworkin confirm the occupiers' belief that their demands are reasonable and their actions an appropriate response to the political repression women suffer at the Collegian.

In response to the allegation that the occupiers are "alienating" themselves: it is not feminists who alienate women but those who would keep women from public expression which would help them recognize the commonality of their situations and join together to take control of their lives.

The two other editorials appearing in yesterday's paper also reflect a lack of understanding of the "real issue" here: that of the oppression of women. Mario Barros and Ken Shain claim that the women's protest is "racist" in that it has deprived Collegian readers of information about the Duke Ellington Spring Music Festival.

One of the women's demands is that no space to be allocated for women's news be taken from Black Affairs' space. This is a clear show of solidarity with the Third World community. Barros' and Shain's allegation is a blatant display of sexism in that it implies that entertainment of any kind should take precedence over womens' struggle for liberation.

The Collegian policy editorial, according to members of the women's negotiating team, incorporates suggestions they have made during negotiation sessions without giving them credit for their ideas.

The Collegian, which claims to be "objective", is clearly not an impartial recording device in this situation. One glance at the letters to the editor that have appeared this week should be enough to convince readers that the Collegian is using its public voice to promote anti-feminist propaganda, as most publications in the paper's situation would do. Such is the power of media.

The women occupying the Collegian offices hope that readers will realize that the Collegian's reporting of the occupation is in no way "objective" at this point. We hope that readers will at least speak with the picketers and supporters outside the Collegian offices and hear both sides of the story.

Mountaineering #5.

REGULATION GARB

You, a faithful follower of this space, have been a mountaineer for some time now. You've studied the fundamentals, selected your gear and experimented with methodology. In short, you are nobody's fool. Nonetheless, you also know a little knowledge is a dangerous thing. So you want to learn more. Smart thinking.

First, you must realize that once the basics of mountaineering are mastered, it is only nuance which distinguishes the true artists from the merely adequate. Therefore, attention to detail, especially in matters of clothing, is vital.

Always protect the head according to seasonal fluctuations. In winter, a warm hat is mandatory. (The head, after all, is the chimney of the body. Avoid cerebral heat loss – it diminishes your psycho-physio abilities.) In summertime, a sun visor or a billed cap will guarantee crucial visibility among the craggy peaks.

Pay particular regard to your footgear. Shoes should be sturdy and stable. A secure footing is of utmost importance. Without it, you're asking for trouble. Point of order: while mountaineering is pursued for fun, it is nevertheless serious business. If you are going to down the mountains, rather than vice versa, you must be confident of your standing.

Between the head and the feet lies the area known to pros as "the body." Mountaineering bodywear is usually based on personal preference. However, keep a keen eye out for one common criterion. Your clothes should be comfortable and flexible, allowing for open movement, specifically in the vicinity of the arms. A free and responsive arm is a mountaineer's best friend.

Certain accessories, of course, complement and complete the regulation garb. Expedition flags to mark your territory in public places, connecting ropes for those who prefer the security of mountaineering in tandem and backpacks filled with beer nuts, mugs, bottle openers and other paraphanalia. Beyond these standards, wardrobe styles range from the rustic to the refined. And well they might, for mountaineers are a rugged and individual lot, joined only by a common taste for excellence.

Mitwomen vs 'Cats; Eastern's next week

By MISSY GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

The UMass softball team anxiously awaits the Easterns to be played next week, but tomorrow's doubleheader at Vermont will bring the Minutewomen back down to earth.

The twinbill which starts at 1:30 should be the "finishing touch" in preparing for the double elimination tournament in Stratford, Connecticut, UMass coach Dianne Thompson said.

Sue Peters is looking for her sixth win against no loses in the opener The pitching ace is no slouch at the plate either. Peters leads the hitting department with a .485 average followed by Kathy Horrigan with .395. Kathy O'Connell is slated to pitch in the second game. The bullpen is set with Trish O'Conner.

A couple of wins will also help to change the momentum, noted Thompson. UMass' last contest was a nailbiter which saw the Minutewomen come up short, 5-4, to Southern Connecticut their first round foe in the Regionals.

The UMass mentor expects to test her depth as Fran Cornacchioli and Elaine Howle, who's usually covering third, will play at short stop.

Beth Collins is ready to enter the lineup. The sophomore broke two fingers on her throwing hand four weeks ago against Eastern Connecticut when she slid back to first.

Co-captain Sue DiRocco will miss the doubleheader, but pitcher Beth O'Connell is back after illness.

Women conquer current; beat Brown, Coast Guard

By LESLIE C. BELLOWS
Collegian Staff

The womens' crew team remains undefeated after last Saturday's race against Brown University and Coast Guard on the Seekonk River in Providence.

With the tide, the current, and a tail wind pushing them, the 1500 meter course was covered in record time.

The JV women raced first and were enjoying a two boat length lead on Brown until 100 meters before the finish when the stroke lost control of her oar in the rough water and could not regain a grip on it. The remaining seven women continued to row beating a formerly undefeated Brown crew with a time of 5:25.0 to Brown's 5:44.2 and Coast Guard's 5:52.5.

The varsity women were next and, like the JV, things went well as they enjoyed a one and a half boat length lead until half way through the course when the number two seat lost control of her oar as it was torn from her grip by the speed of the water going by. All eight oarswomen stopped to enable her to get her oar back as Brown blasted by taking the lead.

UMass then performed the impressive feat of regaining their composure, catching up to and passing Brown with a winning time of 5:06.4 to Brown's 5:11.1.

The men's and women's crew teams will be traveling to Worcester this Saturday to the New England Invitationals on Lake Quinsigamond. Last year, the varsity men won the Norton Cup, this year the women plan to bring home their trophy.

In his first year on the varsity, Collins has pitched much better than his record indicates. He has won three straight while allowing only three runs in those victories. He was a tough-luck, 2-1 loser to SMU in early April at that school's tourney.

Rankowitz, meanwhile, was absolutely magnificent in his only appearance of the year, a 4-0 shutout win over Bridgeport last Thursday. It was his first shutout ever in a Minuteman uniform after erratic freshman and sophomore seasons.

Both hurlers will have to be at their best, since Providence is supplied with mucho hitting at the plate. No less than five Friars are batting above .300, again according to latest ECAC stats.

Ray Fontaine (.409 and second to Doug Aylward among District I hitters), Ed Bessinter (.385), Peter Reppucci (.373), Ed Cahir (.346), and John Broadhurst (.322) provide most of the Providence punch. Bessinger and Reppucci have each driven in 16 runs.

Chuck Kwolek and Phil Supra are set to start for the Friars. Numbers on them are unavailable.

The twinbill should be a dandy. And, with only seven games remaining after tomorrow's action, it is a given that UMass needs all the wins it can get.

Stickwomen compete for NE title

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

Season play started with a 7-0 shut-out against Boston University for the UMass women's lacrosse team.

Eight games and 75 goals later, it remains undefeated (7-0-2), and is ranked second in the league as the New England College Women's Lacrosse Association Tournament begins Saturday at Bridgewater State College.

Tournament action for the UMass stickers will begin at 12 noon, Saturday, as they face Bates. The odds look to be in their favor for a win, but from there it is an uphill climb, hopefully to the finals.

The stickers have had a tough, busy month of competitive action, as they one-by-one defeated opposing teams. Their toughest competition was UNH, also undefeated, against whom the Minutewomen tied. It was a hard-played game, the best of their season, and almost a win for UMass. If things go as well as hoped, it seems likely that UNH will be UMass' final opponent to be defeated.

The team has been improving steadily since season's start. Robin Jennings will be in goal, with co-captain Gayle Hutchinson, Kelly Salls, Olivia Lovelace, and Joan Bulman working on close defense. Defense wings Grace Marinelli, Lisa Methfessel, and Laura O'Neill round off the squad.

On offense, there is a strong line-up of good, individual scorers. Led by co-captain Judy Kennedy at center, attack wings Cari Nickerson, Fiona McAllister, Julie McHugh and Sue Kibling, and close attack players Julie Hall, Debbie Hartley, Jean Hackett, Allyson Toney, and Kathy Gipps, the team hopes to outscore any and all competition.

Bruins win

Third period goals by Rick Middleton and Gregg Sheppard broke a 5-5 deadlock to give the Boston Bruins a 7-5 victory over the Philadelphia Flyers last night at the Boston Garden. The Bruins lead the Stanley Cup semifinal series 2-0.

Guy LaFleur scored two goals last night to lead the Montreal Canadiens to a 3-2 victory against the Toronto Maple Leafs at the Fourm. The Canadiens lead the series 2-0.

Dennis Eckersley picked up his first win in a Red Sox uniform yesterday as Boston defeated Minnesota 8-1 at Fenway Park.

Kuhn's administration: Nine years of baseball

By BILL EDELSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn is both witty and dull, brilliant and foolish, forgiving and vindictive. In short, he is a rare cross-breed between the likes of Earl Weaver and Don Zimmer.

At the outset of Kuhn's extemporaneous half-hour speech at Mahar Auditorium last night, the commissioner was presented a hand-held microphone with a healthy length of cord by a member of the sponsoring Sports Management program. Kuhn gazed down at the abundance of wire and quipped to the audience, "You'd better watch out, I've got range."

Although Kuhn seemed at a loss for words during portions of the rest of the speech, he did manage to address such key issues as the free agent system, television's purported control over baseball, the commissioner's dealing with Charlie Finley, and the economy of the National Pastime.

"The average salary in baseball today is $80,000," said Kuhn. "That's about a 60 per cent increase over the $50,000 average of two years ago, before the reserve system disappeared because of the Messersmith case. And you're going to see salaries rise in future years.

Yet the commissioner did not totally pan the free agent system.

"It's given baseball a lot of publicity," he said, "and it's helped teams such as Texas, California and Chicago — teams that were down-and-out — to become competitive.

"However," Kuhn added, "there is a danger of ticket prices increasing beyond the limits of the fans due to runaway salaries."

The commissioner, who earns an estimated $150,000 annual paycheck, said that limit has not yet been exceeded.

"Major League revenues have risen considerably during the same time," Kuhn counter-pointed. "But whether they will keep abreast of salaries, I don't know. I would say the economy of baseball isn't in balance."

Kuhn said television has not played too big a role in Abner Doubleday's brain child.

"Originally, NBC didn't like the idea of night World Series games, but they finally saw things our way," said Kuhn. "As a source of income, T.V. provides us 10-15 percent of our revenues. This will grow substantially in the next few years."

Charlie Finley, the volatile owner of the Oakland A's, has had his run-ins with the commissioner.

"The Charlie and Bowie show is not going away very soon," announced Kuhn. "He can be one of the most amusing people I've ever seen, but he can also be one of the most difficult. Crazy things have been happening in baseball this season, so I guess there have either been a lot of full moons, or Charlie may be coming out early this year."

Batmen face Providence and shot at playoff berth

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

It's as simple as this: survival.

For the UMass baseball team, that's exactly what tomorrow's doubleheader against Providence (1 p.m., Earl Lorden Field) represents.

The Minutemen, 16-17 (14-9 Northern), are currently engaged in a battle to make the ECAC District I playoffs. And the Friars, 15-6 before yesterday's game at Assumption, are one of the obstacles in their path.

In the latest ECAC standings, released Monday, Providence owned the second best record in the district. UMass, trying to make the playoffs with a desperate stretch drive, absolutely must win at least one of the games tomorrow or it'll be "nice try, kids" time.

UMass coach Dick Bergquist admitted that his troops are faced with a tough situation, and said a sweep would enhance their chances of making the elite four. Not insure the hopes, mind you, just help them out a great deal.

Taking the mound for the Minutemen will be a couple of pitchers who haven't had to face much pressure in their brief UMass careers. Sophomore Chris Collins (3-2, 2.81 ERA) and Peter Rankowitz (1-0, 0.00 ERA) will try to baffle the Friars.

Daze of apathy

Just as "activism" was synonomous with college of the '60's, so "apathy" has been the byword of the '70's. Although radical feminists and professors at UMass are doing their level best to end the apathy rap at the university, their efforts are not all-encompassing.

Activism in college sports is not only comprised of athletic participation, it is also represented by fan tournout, and, though the former has grown slightly, the latter has shrunk considerably.

For instance, when the football team played Lehigh at Alumni Stadium in the first round of the NCAA Division II playoffs, empty seats abounded. Yet, unsuccessful professional teams such as the Celtics packed 'em in this year with designated giveaway nights.

Clearly what is necessary to make UMass sports draw crowds is not success, but gimickry, such as ...

----------

SNEAKER DAY — A pair of Pro-Keds will be given each person who remembers Dwight Allen.

JACKET DAY — This caters to Psychology majors. The first 25 paranoid fans and the next 25 neurotic ones following them will be presented straight jackets bearing the UMass insignia.

IMMEMORIAL DAY — Any student who proves he possesses a putrid memory by displaying a certified academic warning will be escorted to the athletic competition clear across campus, since that's the one he probably meant to attend in the first place.

TWO-FOR-ONE DAY — Bring in one of anything, get two back. This is an ideal opportunity for those who desperately need to do a load of laundry to bring in their last pair of undergarments.

ONE-FOR-TWO DAY — Bring in two of anything, get one back. This is a superb chance for fans with two take-home exams due on the same day to lessen their workload.

EARTH DAY — This is strictly a baseball promotional. The first 75 people with upraised rakes and hoes to enter Earl Lorden Field will be required to accept a hundred-pound sack of fresh fertilizer.

FAMILY NIGHT — Aimed at getting sociology majors into the stands. The first 50 will receive bumper stickers imploring, "Down with nuclear energy, up with the nuclear family."

CAP NIGHT — Anybody bringing a flask into a late evening game for purposes of having a little nightcap will be given a free breathalyzer test before leaving the contest.

DAY FOR NIGHT — Any French-speaking students who wander into a sporting event will be presented a complimentary film directed by Francois Truffaut.

SCHUSS DAY — All those carrying a bent pole to a ski meet will be given permission to talk at the eighteenth green of any golf match they wish to attend. There they will be privy to a bent golf club, along with being told to shut their yaps.

HELMET DAY — A "must see" game for any student who tends to study. Surplus World War II combat helmets will be glued to the heads of any undergraduate entering the game with a hard cover book which costs over fifteen dollars. The helmet is suitable for walking within a ten yard radius of the world's tallest library.

WET SHEET DAY — A corollary to wet t-shirt day. Anybody bringing a sticky contour sheet to the game on this day will be awarded a year's supply of birth control devices.

GEORGE ALLEN DAY — Upon showing a suitcase at the gate, all exchange students will be divided up according to class year. Sophomores and juniors will then be re-exchanged for seniors from other schools.

GRADES DAY — The first hundred students presenting valid i.d.'s will receive their marks at the end of the semester.

GRADUATION DAY — The first 4,500 seniors to walk in with cap and gown will be awarded a high number in a prime unemployment line.

Gorillas vie for NE title vs Harvard

By RUSS SMITH
Collegian Staff

With the New England championship riding upon the outcome of the contest, the Crimson of Harvard will leave the friendly confines of their Ivy League world, to take on Garber's Gorillas in a Spring-Concert-Day game. Game is scheduled to begin at 2 p.m.

Coincidentally this will be the last home appearance for the seniors on the squad-Mike Lettera, Lennie Caffrey, Pit Martin, Rich Donovan, Fran Young, and Mike Gongas. The 'Crossers last two scheduled games are on the road — vs. Springfield and Dartmouth.

Ironically after having lost several players from the attack last year due to graduation, this time around the defense will feel the crunch. But that can be dealt with next season.

Harvard, which lost a close game last year to the Minutemen down in Cambridge, finished that '77 campaign with a dismal 4-8 record. But with only five players lost through graduation, they are enjoying one of their better seasons this year, and have put up a fight with most of their opponents.

According to the latest (prior to Army contest) national rankings, Harvard is in the eleventh spot (surprisingly Hofstra is ranked 12th) and UMass is holding down the fifteenth position. And at last count, Harvard and UMass were still holding down the top two spots in N.E. ratings.

What-to-expect-dept.... hitting by both sides, with the Ivies taking the bulk of the bruises... whatever happened to the Minute-Van which was supposed to announce the home games and keep the fans more up on the game?.... three Martins will be on the field — UMass' Dave and Pit Martin, with Dave's brother Steve suiting up for Harvard.... almost forgot first year senior Pete McCarty's last home game... can't remember if Billy Coke is a senior, sorry....

King asks rivals for support

SPRINGFIELD [AP] — The Republican state convention's choice for governor, conservative Edward F. King, has called upon his challengers not to "spill elephant blood" and to join his campaign.

But it appears unlikely that either of his rivals — House Minority Leader Francis W. Hatch, Mr., or Middlesex County Sheriff John J. Buckley — will end their fight to win the Republican nomination for governor in the Sept. 19 primary.

Although the convention endorsement is non-binding, it is expected to carry considerable weight with Republican voters at the polls.

King has promised Hatch and Buckley an "important part" in his administration if they help him unseat Democratic Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

But Hatch, who has served 15 years in the House, is relinquishing his seat to run in the primary.

"I feel very strongly that 450,000 registered Republicans should decide the outcome," Hatch told about delegates at Saturday's Republican state convention as their endorsement fell to the conservative King.

Hatch lost the endorsement to the 38-year-old Boston businessman on a second ballot vote of 979 to 869 after Buckley withdrew.

Buckley deadlocked the convention on the first ballot, but pulled out moments before it became evident his 200-vote strength would produce another stalemate. A majority was needed for endorsement.

Buckley, who had predicted victory on the second round, said he withdrew "in the interest of fairness and to preserve the unity of the Republican party.

"I have never been a spoiler," he said his voice thick with disappointment.

An aide to Buckley said the sheriff will evaluate his chances at the polls before deciding whether to continue his campaign.

At the convention, the liberal sheriff did not throw his support to either Hatch or King, but told his supporters to "vote your conscience."

King, the choice of delegates from a party that claims less than 15 percent of the state's registered voters, predicted he could win the November election "only through a unified effort.

"If we all spill elephant blood from now until September, it will only make our task that much more difficult in November," King said in his acceptance speech.

Few turn out for music festival

By CAROLYN MOONEY
Collegian Staff

A peak crowd of about 2,000 students attended the Duke Ellington Spring Music Festival held Saturday at Alumni Stadium, a substantial drop in turnout from last year's estimated crowd of 25,000.

The damp weather and the controversy about holding an all-black American music festival significantly contributed toward the small turnout, said festival coordinator Stanley Kinard.

The festival, which featured the talent of Buddy Guy and Junior Wells, the Duke Ellington Orchestra, Patti Labelle, McCoy Tyner, and Pharoah Sanders, was allocated $44,000 by the Undergraduate Student Senate. This sum paid for the performers, the production costs, the publicity, and the police.

Concert Review, page 5

Any money made on concessions and T-shirts will go toward the establishment of the Duke Ellington Center in New York City, which is currently under construction, said Kinard. But by the late afternoon, beers were given away and T-shirts were sold for $1, so actual profit is doubtful.

Revenue from outside ticket sales, lower than originally projected, will go toward production costs.

According to Student Government Association Speaker Brian DeLima, last year's rock-format concert which featured the music of Pousett Dart, Southside Johnny, Melanie, Richie Havens, Procol Harem, and Conjunto Libre, lost between $14,000 and $16,000 after subtracing money made on concessions.

Although finances for the festival have not yet been computed, this year's loss is expected to be substantially higher. Concerts have always operated at a loss in the past, and this year $14,000 was set aside to cover the loss, according to DeLima.

Newly-elected Student Association Treasurer Michael Doyle said the senate would decide how to handle further loss Wednesday night, when it will pass its new budget. Past losses have been covered by the budget's stabilization and deficit accounts.

Like all past concerts, the festival had its share of technical problems. Because of the rain, the sound company could not make equipment sound checks Friday night as contracted forcing the checks to be made Saturday morning. The result was a concert that ran behind schedule from the beginning.

Because the concert was under serious restraint from security, Tyner was forced to cut his performance to 20 minutes to insure that Pharoah Sanders, the last performer, would be on stage by 6:30.

DeLima attributed these and other problems to a lack of communication between the concert coordinators, security, and police.

Although the festival was a financial disappointment, Kinard felt that morally and spiritually it was a success.

The crowd was small but the enthusiam was there as approximately 2,000 people came to the Duke Ellington Spring Music Festival last Saturday in Alumni Stadium. (Staff photo by Dale Griswold)

Profs may hold grades ; vote scheduled for today

The Massachusetts Society of Professors today will vote whether to withhold grades as part of a contract-related protest contrary to a statement made last week by MSP President James E. Cathey stating they had already done so.

"I suppose I said that," Cathey said. "If I said that, I'm sincerely sorry. The reaction was quite severe to the Collegian story."

The MSP is the Amherst unit of the faculty union. The union is believed to have some 350-400 members, out of approximately 1,200 faculty members at UMass.

The union and the administration since last summer have been negotiating their first contract. Union members recently have become unhappy with administration conduct in the talks.

In its meeting today at 4 p.m., the MSP will hear a report from a committee appointed to study withholding the grades. The committee is headed by faculty member Alvin Winder, and is partially comprised of students, according to Cathey.

Cathey said the MSP membership is expected to take some action on the subject of withholding grades, either for or against.

"The Winder committee will make a report," Cathey said. "Open debate will follow. We want to do this with the full co-ordination of students."

Collegian relocates; business continues

The Collegian office has been relocated temporarily in room 608 of the Goodell building as a result of the ongoing occupation of the Campus Center newspaper offices. Protesters have barricaded the office since last Monday morning, denying staff members access

Classified ads can now be brought during the week to a table set up next to the elevators on the Campus Center concourse between 9 a.m and 5 p.m., and letters to the editor can be brought to the Campus Center Hotel bus ticket window.

Phone numbers at the new office location are 545-0363, 545-0364, and 545-0384.

Genius club provides meeting of like minds

By MARIA MESSITT
Collegian Staff

What am I doing spending two and a half hours on a warm, sunny Saturday morning taking I.Q. tests with three other people at a junior college in the middle of scenic Longmeadow?

The answer has to do with tables and trivia.

Mensa, the Latin word for table, is an international society of geniuses. The only membership qualification is to score in the top two per cent on any of a large number of accepted intelligence tests.

Qualifying exams for the non-profit organization were given last Saturday at Bay Path Junior College in Longmeadow at 10 a.m.

Mensa's primary purpose is to "provide contact between intelligent people," according to club officials. Dr. E. Allen Blair, Mensa secretary for North-Central New Jersey, says Mensa provides members with "a place where a high I.Q. is not a disability."

Speaking about Mensans, Blair says, "we have all been faced with significant social barriers because only two per cent of the world is as smart as we are."

Mensa has 28,000 members in 14 countries, drawn from a wide spectrum of occupations. Doctors, police officers, farm and factory workers, teachers, scientists, lawyers, students, and prisoners of every age belong to Mensa.

Over 150 local groups exist in the United States, more than a dozen in Canada, and over 50 in the United Kingdom. Many groups have their own publications.

The idea of a society of people with high intelligence was first suggested in a 1945 British Broadcasting Company talk, by the late Sir Cyril Burt, a London University psychology professor. Mensa was founded the same year by two English barristers, Mr. Roland Berrill, and Dr. L.L. Ware. Burt became Mensa's first president.

R. Buckminster Fuller, UMass Scholar in Residence, is Mensa's International Honorary President. Dr. Isaac Asimov, who spoke at UMass last Wednesday night, is a Mensa vice president.

Mensans see themselves as the "last stand against the encroachments of professionalism and sectional interest." They are more a group of Renaissance people knowing something about many areas, than a clique of specialists knowing more and more about less and less.

Mensa party conversations have been described as "well seasoned dictionary games." Mensans have discovered 101 ways to cheat at Monopoly, investigated a Russian machine replacing the need for sleep, and discussed in chemical terms Biblical accounts of fiery miracles.

"Intelligence is not synonomous with wisdom," says Eastern Regional Vice Chairman Jim Sprague. "A lot of Mensans are louder than they are bright. The people I like in Mensa are what make it an elite of the sensitive, not an elite of the smart."

Mensa's annual dues of 15 dollars include subscriptions to the society's national "Bulletin," and international "Journal." Dues also maintain membership records, support local groups, and cover the cost of the administrative staff.

Mensa applications can be obtained by writing to the American Mensa Selection Agency, 1701 West 3rd Street, Brooklyn, N.Y. 11223. A preliminary intelligence test to be taken at home will be sent. The cost for this test is 6 dollars. A 10 dollar fee is charged for the qualifying exam given at local centers.

UM police arrest two for sofa theft

UMass police arrested three men in motor vehicle related incidents, and two men on larceny charges this weekend.

Donald S. Bresnahan of 605 Field Dormitory and John F. Dowd of 14 Elm St. in Amherst were arrested on charges of larceny over $100 for the theft of a brown sofa from Grayson dormitory.

William Tortorella of 6C Brandywine Apartments in North Amherst was charged with driving to endanger, and driving without a license.

Kelly E. Atteridge of 143 Northampton Road in Amherst was also charged with driving with intent, driving without a license and driving without a registration and inspection sticker.

Augustine Ruiz of 19 Nursery Street in Springfield was charged with driving to endanger, and driving without a license (it had been revoked previously). Warrants were also out on Ruiz in Holyoke and Springfield.

Police are also investigating a forged twenty dollar bill which was passed at the Student Union candy counter Sunday morning.

Senator appointed to statewide committee

Senator John W. Olver, D-Amherst, has been appointed to the Massachusetts Mental Retardation Community Task Force, which will examine the unmet needs in the deinstitutionalization process of the mentally retarded.

The 43-member task force was appointed by Department of Mental Health Commissioner Robert L. Okin.

The task force," said Olver, "is made up of a tremendous cross-section of interested parties in the field of mental retardation including administrators, legislators and advocates. With such a diverse group represented on the task force, I have high hopes that we will be able to thoroughly examine some of the major issues surrounding care for the mentally retarded and develop some specific policy recommendations for the commissioner."

The task force is expected to file its first preliminary report in late July.

Fires discovered in student residences

A fire was discovered Saturday night in a Butterfield dormitory room with the assistance of the new smoke detectors installed in the cormitories, according to Amherst fire officials.

The origin of the fire is believed to be a candle that was left burning on a night table. The blaze was controlled by Alan Hock, a butterfield resident, and was checked out by Amherst fire officials.

A fire of undetermined origins also occurred in the apartment of four UMass students in Rolling Green Apartments. Although the fire was confined to a bedroom, there was heavy heat and smoke damage throughout the second floor and water damage on the first floor.

Noted feminists to attend rally

By FIFI BALL
and CANDY CARLON
Collegian Staff

Radical feminist authors Andrea Dworkin and Robin Morgan are scheduled to speak at a pro-Collegian-occupation rally, today at noon on the steps of the Student Union, according to Collegian Women's Editor Julie E. Melrose.

In an interview through a crack in the door of the Collegian office Melrose said, "Feminist groups and individuals from all over the country have telephoned and telegraphed messages of support and solidarity."

Melrose said these groups include the Women's Institute for Freedom of the Press, a national coalition of women in the media based in Washington, D.C., the New York City chapter of the National Organization for Women, and the Women's Rights Project of the Americans Civil Liberties Union's Boston office.

Representative Elaine Noble, D-Cambridge, has expressed support and said she would participate in the occupation if it was not currently necessary for her to be in legislative chambers, Melrose said.

Melrose said the national telegram campaign to UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and Collegian Editor-in-Chief William A. Sundstrom in support of the occupiers' demands will "let them know that if any action is taken against us or our demands are not met, the UMass administration and the Collegian staff will have to deal with an even greater force than they presently face."

Asked what form this greater force would take, Melrose replied, "This is a national feminist issue and feminists will be working against the repression that's been going on at the Collegian."

There are currently "at least 50" women in the office said occupation spokesperson Chris Decker. Decker and Melrose reported morale was very high in the office and the cooperation of the occupiers had made it into a "model feminist community."

Asked to comment on the women's news policy currently being implemented by the Collegian, which guarantees 40 inches of space a day under editorial control of the women's department, Melrose said, "It would leave me spending my time and energy dealing with the Collegian staff members' problems about women's problems.

"The Collegian claims to print what is most newsworthy, yet it daily takes up more space with comics, crossword puzzles, horoscopes and T.V. listings than we are asking for women's news. That makes a clear statement of Collegian priorities and lack of respect for women's lives," said Melrose.

"The fact that the women occupying the Collegian have had to put themselves in physical, legal, and academic danger to get three-quarters of a printed page per day for women's news, is a strong testimony to the extent to which male institutions will go to deny women access to the mass media," said Melrose.

In addition to Dworkin, author of Woman Hating and Our Blood and Morgan, author of Going Too Far, today's rally will include speeches by Janice Raymond, five college women's studies professor, Ann Ferguson, instructor in the UMass philosophy department and Kaymarion, an area feminist artist. There will also be an open letter read to the UMass community from Melrose.

Melrose said Morgan plans to stay with the occupiers and, if necessary, be arrested with them.

"The Collegian doesn't want to see anyone arrested," said Collegian Managing Editor Dorothy A. Clark. "We just want to have access to our offices in the most peaceful way possible. We have never even discussed having anyone arrested."

National feminists wire support

In the week since people demanding women's pages in the Collegian occupied and barricaded themselves inside the newspaper's offices, feminists have mounted a nationwide telegram campaign to express support for the protesters, and to urge Collegian Editor in Chief William A. Sundstrom and UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery to comply with their demands.

The occupiers have received messages from such nationally reknown feminists as Robin Morgan, Andrea Dworkin, and feminist author and philosopher Mary Daly.

The following is the test of a telegram sent to Sundstrom and Bromery by State Representative Elaine Noble, D Boston:

"I am currently "locked in" the house chambers debating the current fiscal budget that includes the University of Mass. budget as well. If my presence here were not required, I would join the women in the Collegian office. I whole-heartedly support their demands and strongly advocate that other political men and women do the same, not only here at the State House, but also on the federal level.

"Feminists, throughout the country are watching the University of Mass. I join them in extending an invitation to you for positive change.

"Please make every effort to comply to the needs of the women at the Collegian. I consider this a very personal and important issue. Your positive action will always be viewed by me as a great large personal favor."

Representative Noble is presently seeking election to Sen. Brooke's seat in the U.S. senate.

Dukakis says reorg ill-planned

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis Saturday said the reorganization of the Massachusetts public higher education system may be the single most important legislative issue in 1979.

Speaking to a press conference of 25 college journalists, the governor said he was dedicated to the idea of reorganizing the state's public higher education system, which he termed "disjointed and uncoordinated, as well as being ill-planned.

"There is very little sense to our present system of public higher education, especially in the state college and university level. The community college system is working okay by itself, but we have to begin to make some sense out of a system which grew like topsey in the sixties," the governor said.

Dukakis, who has been criticized severely for his cuts in education and other human services, said his proposed budget this year will contain "substantial increases in public higher education across the board.

"This state," he said "was broke in 1975 to the tune of a billion and a half dollars. This year's budget is the first one I have ever been able to recommend with some breathing room."

Dukakis said there will be selective increases, such as increased funding of the library services at Lowell University and Southeastern Massachusetts University.

Opponents of the governor's planned reorganization have argued the reorganization will only vocationalize the state's public higher education system, thereby lowering the academic standards. Dukakis disagreed with that contention.

"The reorganization will not diminish the academic standards of the state college system. I'm not a fan of swallowing up the entire system, so you get a megasystem. There will have to be a certain amount of autonomy and freedom in the system," he said.

Dukakis said he is awaiting the recommendations of the special commission on higher education, and he would not know his exact course for reorganization until he gets their report.

"I hope their recommendations will give us a sense of where the system is going, and where it should be going," he said.

He blamed the legislature for the slow pace at which plans for the reorganization have travelled.

"I've had a little difficulty around this place," he said."My legislature doesn't seem to want to get around to the idea of reorganization. If I had my druthers, I would have had a bill on reorganization on my desk two years ago."

Dukakis said he believed it would be a

Guerrillas fire rocket on Jerusalem on 30th anniversary of independence

JERUSALEM [AP] — Yasser Arafat's Palestinian guerrillas claimed responsibility yesterday for the first rocket attack in Jerusalem since 1976, and said it was timed to coincide with this week's 30th anniversary of Israeli independence.

Authorities here said one woman was insured in the explosion of a single Soviet-made Katyusha rocket. The Palestine Liberation Organization in Beirut, Lebanon said several persons were killed or injured in a "heavy rocket attack" and Israeli government buildings were damaged.

It was the first time in two years that Arab guerrillas had fired a Katyusha rocket into the holy city. Independence day celebrations have been traditional targets for Arab terrorism, and Israeli police and civilians were on alert against possible attacks.

Israeli authorities said the woman was cut by flying glass when the rocket exploded in the courtyard of an apartment house Saturday night, smashing windows and pocking the stone walls of the building.

"We heard the whistle, then this tremendous crash in our courtyard," said Yehudit Danilov, the injured woman.

Fearing more rockets might be fired, Israeli soldiers combed hills and villages around Jerusalem for the launcher of the rocket, one of the heaviest weapons in the Arab guerrilla arsenal. The last explosion of a Katyusha in Jerusalem was in April 1976, although rocket attacks are frequent along the Israel-Lebanese border.

Television and radio broadcasts were warning Israelis to watch for packages that might contain explosives.

Elsewhere 30th anniversary celebrations were held yesterday by Jewish communities in many countries with top Israeli officials as guests.

In New York, Prime Minister Menachem Begin wound up a week-long visit to the United States.

Grad Student Senate elections - Treasurer

Jose Trejo

Editor's note: This is the first in a three-part series of candidate profiles for Graduate Student Senate officers. Elections will be held Thursday.

By ROB STEIN
Collegian Staff

Jose Trejo is running for treasurer of the Graduate Student Senate. He has worked for various student organizations including the Credit Union and the Collegian. He teaches a management course in Southwest and has a civil engineering background. He is currently working toward a masters degree in business administration and once served as general manager developing the budget for a corporation in Mexico.

What do you see as the role of the finance committee in the Graduate Student Senate?

"To work very closely with the groups that are trying to get funds. To make certain those groups are really providing those services which they are supposed to."

Do you have a special idea or goal you would like to see accomplished as treasurer?

"To prove to the Graduate Student Senate that minorities are qualified enough and responsible enough to assume this kind of position. Also from that point of view to encourage other minorities in taking an interest in important issues instead of being isolated and putting the blame on the system. Also I have some disagreements with the way the senate has allocated funds. For instance the Credit Union, the senate cut their funding and I think that the Credit Union is important."

What are your views on the funding of the transit system?

"The transit system is a student-run organization; the students pay for it, they use it and they run it. The more we avoid the administration the better it would be for the students.

David Whitcomb

David Whitcomb is running for treasurer of the Graduate Student Senate. He served for one year as a graduate student senator from the political science department and was recording secretary for the Faculty Senate. He is currently working on his dissertation on political variation in Columbia, South America, utilizing Columbia's financial records. Whitcomb is employed in the Area Studies Program where part of his duties include budgeting of the program's funds.

What do you see as the role of the finance committee in the Graduate Student Senate?

"The role of the Finance Committee should be such that it preserves latitude for the full senate to make its decision. The Finance Committee should make sure all the money isn't spent right away on the first group that comes knocking on the door. I think it should be more of a reactive body to be there when constituents need it."

Do you have a special idea of goal you would like to see accomplished as treasurer?

"I don't think the treasurer can do more than issue an accurate picture as to the way things are going. I don't really have a world vision or a grad senate vision saying we should put all our money in one specific area."

What should the role of the Graduate Student Senate be in the overall University budget process?

"There is not much the Graduate Student Senate can do legally to affect change in university wide budgeting. The one thing the senate can do is orient graduate senate spending towards those things that affect graduate students, and within that group those things which effect academics rather than support.

What are your views on the funding of the transit system?

"Students, especially commuter students who own automobiles and have to pay for parking stickers also then have to pay a bus using fee; this is definitely unfair."

mistake for the reorganization to include planned closings of any of the state institutions of higher education. "We don't need closings," he said; "what we need is a closer fit between the pieces."

The governor also answered questions on off-shore drilling and employment outlook for those graduating from college this year.

He said Massachusetts would support the drilling for oil off of the state's coast, but only if it is done responsibly.

"The people in the oil business," he said, "are finding out the North Atlantic is not the Gulf of Mexico; it is a much angrier type of sea. We would support it, but first we will have to take a serious look at pipeline transmission of the oil to greatly mimimize the threat of spillage."

Dukakis also said the job picture seems to be getting better in the state. He pointed out the state's unemployment rate has dipped below the national level for the first time in seven years. He also said the outlook was especially good for those graduates with degrees in the field of computer sciences or other high technological fields.

Spring Concert in review

By K. STEPHEN SHAIN
Fine Arts Editor

Beneath ominous skies and before a sparse crowd, the Duke Ellington Spring Music Festival ended Saturday night in Alumni Stadium on a disappointing and controversial note.

Playing for a peak crowd of 2,000 that dwindled to several hundred before the day was over, Buddy Guy and Junior Wells, the Duke Ellington Orchestra, Patti Labelle, McCoy Tyner, and Pharoah Sanders delivered a series of short sets in what appeared to be a poorly planned and promoted event.

Taking the stage first, Buddy Guy and Junior Wells warmed up the crowd under sunny skies playing a tight and efficient blues set, reminding many at the stadium of the primal Black American music form and its roots in the tradition of American oppression.

After a short break allowing for the big band to set up, the Duke Ellington Orchestra came on led by the Duke's son, Mercer Ellington.

Graying but still youthful in enthusiasm, Mercer led the band through a variety of old favorites as well as some recent compositions, indicating the band's continued development during the last several years.

The biggest crowd pleaser of the afternoon and the last one on before the sun went in was, of course, Patti Labelle. Forsaking the "exo-skeletal" garb characteristic of her group singing days, Patti sang from inside a blousy black gold trimmed gown that gave her the queen-of-soul look her sound commanded. Delivering no less than three encores, Patti retired with the sun, leaving the sparse but peak-for-the-day crowd screaming for more.

Unfortunately for McCoy Tyner, when the sun went in and Patti went off, many of the half-drunk crowd went under and called it a day. Tyner, a devout Muslim who considers his piano playing more message-from-Allah than music-for-money, mounted the stage before a dwindling crowd of 10 to 12 hundred people and played for 20 minutes before leaving.

Midway through his set it was announced that the remaining beer was being offered away for free and program t-shirt packages were available for a dollar. At that point, about one third of the crowd became preoccupied with the consumptive delights of the festival and became distracted from McCoy's performance leaving the piano virutoso hurt before being rushed off-stage.

Running late and into trouble, the festival's pace accelerated and Pharoah Sanders took the stage quickly with guest vocalist Phyllis Hyman. Performing a series of tunes from albums past and present, Pharoah played in the cold to the remaining several hundred as they quaffed down the last of the free Schlitz dark. Trying their hardest to rekindle the spirit, Phyllis and Pharoah exited after realizing that the toast was already burnt and no amount of scraping could save it.

Though we can, for practical purposes, single out the planners and promoters of the festival as the cause behind the event's failure, it was the UMass community itself that showed disrespect, en masse, for the legendary performers who appeared in the stadium. Refusing to turn out for the event, the campus community's "great refusal" took on the appearance of a grand display of proud and proclamatory ignorance, demonstrating levels of intolerance on this campus that philosophers and radicals alike fail to address and miss completely in their verse and rhetoric.

Corrections on fee increases

To the Editor:

The article that headlined page one of the Collegian on Thursday, May 4, 1978 prompted the writing of this letter. The article was about the trustees meeting last week and spoke of tuition and fee increase for next year. I found the article both confusing and misinforming and at this time would like to submit the figures that the trustees actually acted on.

According to the Proposed Fee Schedule For Revenue Based Activities for fiscal year 1979 the figures read:

Category, Tuition, For Year '78, $480; For Year '79 $525; Increase $45. Room [avg.] $795; $805; $10. Board [avg.] $778; $826; $48. Health Services $108; $117; $9. Campus Center $79; $79; $0. Student Activities $64; $72; $8. Athletics $30; $30; $0. Fine Arts $6; $6; $0. Total increase $120.

The above figures do not include the meal tax or other fees. Some of those other fees are: Category Residence Hall Telephone; For Year '78 $47; For Year '79 $50; Increase $3. Family Housing $164.75; $183.75; $19. Orientation, freshman $30; $40; $10. Orientation, transfer $15; $22; $7. Graduate Student Senate $34; $40; $6. Horse Back Riding $100; $120; $20. Total Increase $65.

There are also other fees which are interesting at various rates. University Child Care and International Programs are two of these such rates.

Now if we take into account a 6% increase on Books and Miscellaneous, traveling costs on the average, last years figure of $580 jumps to $628. This is an increase of $48 which is felt by all students.

To add the figures up we have: Category On-Campus Mandatory Fees; Increase $120; With Books $168. Off-Campus Mandatory Fees; $62; $110.

From these figures we can see that the cost of attending The University of Massachusetts will go up at a great deal more than what the Collegian projected in its article.

Occupation 'energetically' supported

To the Editor:

We, the staff members of the Southwest Women's Center strongly advocate the implementation of women's news within the Collegian. We feel that it is necessary that the University acknowledge its responsibility to all students on campus. The Collegian has consistently failed to represent the needs of women. In light of this, we feel that the demands that the supporters of the women's news are making are the least of what should be provided for the women of this community. The evidenced inability of the Collegian to present a feminist view is just one of many reasons why women must have editorial control over these pages. Another reason is that, because the Collegian has consistently omitted news pertaining to women, this community has been kept in ignorance about issues such as health, rape, legal standing, and local community events.

We energetically support the occupation of the Collegian news room by women committed to opening the Collegian to women's news from women's perspectives. It must be acknowledged that previous actions such as negotiations and education have been ineffective in requesting the Collegian to maintain its responsibility to all students. As a center established to provide for women's needs within a University that has failed to place this as a priority, we will support the women's news until it is incorporated into the Collegian according to the demands of the women's editors.

Editorial called 'propaganda'

To the Editor:

This letter is in reply to an editorial called "Protest Challenges Festival Success," by Mario Barros and K. Stephen Shain.

First of all, the article lacks logical as well as emotive coherence. It also distorts the issues involved by trying to engender in people the idea that the women involved in the occupation are racists, thus implicitly invalidating their claims.

Barros' analysis of the occupation as an elitist, vanguard movement and thus invalid flies directly into his face. The Black American Music Festival was in essence, a vanguard concert. That does not invalidate its usefulness and purpose as far as educating people about contemporary Black music. Black Classical Music and Black Jazz are vanguard movements in music. This does not make the music elitist or oppressive. It is their vanguardness that makes them so valuable and precious. Similarly, the women occupying the Collegian are educating people in a vanguard way that must be respected by all progressive, open-minded people. History is full of vanguard movements: they usually strike at the heart of the truth; which is why they are often so unsettling to so many people.

So, how can you two justly claim oppression in this case? It seems two vanguard movements are colliding. In practice, contradicting your claims, the Collegian did print and highlight the show, thus educating its readers about the merits of the concerts.

There is nothing wrong in educating people; vanguard movements have an obligation to do this. This is exactly what the women are doing by graphically demonstrating and making people at least take notice and think about the nature of news and its male-ruling-class ideological bent.

The Authors are also overlooking the fact that the occupiers received a statement of support from a group of Third World Feminists, based in Cambridge, Mass. Could it be that you are hiding under the safe banner of racism and avoiding the underlying issues of sexism?

How did Black Affairs and Nummo News come about anyway? By a group of angry, militant Blacks who made demands on behalf of the Black community. Surely that was not an invalid or oppressive experience. It was, in fact, enlightening. Those people were leaders and were speaking TRUTH. So are these women.

As far as calling the occupation "untimely," you are showing yourself arrogant and insensitive to the history of the women's pages issue. If you took the time to investigate you would find out that the occupation only occurred after a lengthy discussion process, which proved futile. The occupation was spontaneous in relation to its historical development.

Your article was good Collegian propaganda. It fits into the paper as a whole very well; of that you can be proud.

Glen Goodnough

Women's news is everyone's news

To the Editor:

What is going on here? On the front page of the Collegian today [May 4] was "police seek two men for weekend rape," "Minutewomen rally fails." Isn't this "women's" news?

I have read the pamphlets handed out by the people who are trying to get separate women's pages into the Collegian. One phrase stands out in my mind;

> "Ideally, since women's news is everyone's news it shouldn't need separate pages. It should be integrated into the Collegian like all news. But this been tried."

First of all it should read "into the Collegian as all news." But that is neither here nor there.

I agree with this statement, women's news is everyone's news. If ideally it should be integrated into the paper then this is what should be fought for.

If integrating the news is the best way, why settle for second best and have a separate women's section?

These people say this hasn't worked in the past. Well, fight to have this work! Don't let the women's editor's desk be used for waste materials.

Get the Collegian to print women's news on equal priority. If the news is worthy of top billing for everyone', then give it top billing. If it's not, it should not get priority!!

If women think they should have a separate section, then men should have a separate section, Jews should have a separate section, Catholics should have a separate section, why not give everyone enrolled a separate section?

Women want to be united as one with men, but they change their minds and ask for a separate paper. All they're saying is that there is a difference, when there isn't!!!!

INTEGRATE DON'T SEPARATE

I would really appreciate it if someone would respond to this letter, and tell me exactly what "women's" news is.

Ann Mordecai

AHORA votes to support struggle

To the Editor:

The following motion has been proposed, duly seconded, and unanimously approved by the largest of the most recent General Assemblies of this organization:

Hereby we, AHORA, support your struggle against repression and for effective participation in all matters of the Collegian that pertain to women as an oppressed human beings; and in the way you have selected to make the protest evident.

The people united ... shall never be defeated!

AHORA
Jaime Pons
Present President

Attitude reflects immaturity

To the Editor:

It really annoys me at people's attitude toward the mentally retarded and the handicapped.

On Wednesday nights, I volunteer as part of the Community Awareness Program of the Belchertown-Boltwood Exchange. As a volunteer, I work with an individual from the Belchertown State School. We, myself and the other volunteers, take the individuals into the society by going shopping or to movies, etc. This is supposed to help give the individuals as normal a life as possible.

Last week, a group of us attended a movie at the CCA. People actually had the nerve to turn around and point at the friends we had brought with us and laugh at them.

This was actually quite embarrassing. First, one usually laughs at entertainment — these individuals are not hired to make those that are inconsiderate laugh. Second, one also usually points at an object or at someone who is quite a distance away, not at someone who is two seats behind him.

I was very surprised at these people's reactions and attitudes towards my friends. I call them friends because that is what I consider them to be.

I thought that at the ages most people are on this campus, that they would have learned by now how to react to other human beings. Instead they remain to act like children.

Pam Lacey

LETTERS

As a result of the current occupation of the Collegian offices, we do not have access to some letters submitted prior to the occupation and are thus unable to publish them.

For the duration of the occupation, readers wishing to submit letters may leave them in the Collegian mailbox, at the Bus Ticket window in the lobby of the hotel, on the third floor of the Campus Center.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Executive Editor, c/o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. on the day preceding that date.

In whose best interest?

jay martus

Recently the faculty union general membership voted to withhold the grades of undergraduates, to picket commencement exercises, and to picket Whitmore because the administration bargaining team allegedly walked out of contract negotiations. The union has asked for student understanding and support of their position and subsequent actions. Many students have said the faculty are our friends and the administration is our mutual adversary. It is true that the administration is often an adversary of both groups. That the faculty is our friend is in fact ridiculous. The faculty are seeking to see their own best interest served, and the record of their past actions show not only contempt of students but a general subjugation of students interests for their own self-interest.

Many students have individual relationships with faculty members that are constructive, mutually beneficial and very friendly. When speaking of the faculty, I am talking of them as a power group within the institution and not of individual relationships between a faculty member and some students.

Al Winder, an individual faculty member, admirably expressed opposition to the increase of tuition in 1975 at a Board of Trustee meeting. He is an active member of the faculty union. The faculty union has as its bargaining agent the M.T.A. (Massachusetts Teachers Association) which also lobbies on the local's behalf at the legislature. Year in and year out the M.T.A. has submitted and supported bills in the state legislature to raise tuition at schools of public higher education and to increase aid to private institutions.

Seventy percent of the faculty at UMass Amherst are tenured. While providing a stronger faculty, the effect of this inflexibility of academic resources can be acute in terms of meeting the academic demands and needs of the student body. Five year enrollment trends show that in general student needs are not being addressed except by the limiting of access or closing off of departments-schools to students. There are places in academic affairs budget where enrollment has significantly declined and where resources, desperately needed elsewhere, have remained fixed in place.

On the UMass Worcester campus course and teacher evaluations are kept on file and students are encouraged to review them to make the best possible choice in selecting courses. If the Amherst faculty had their way the course and teacher evaluations would disappear from the campus forever. They have resisted every effort to produce a constructive tool for choosing courses with the most accurate information possible. If they cooperated with course and teacher evaluation, the controversy would be minimized and the use value of such a tool would be maximized.

What do the faculty think of students as a population group? In the accreditation process the university is presently undertaking, questions concerning the direction of the Amherst campus in the next ten years were addressed by various schools. One report, written by the Social and Behavioral Sciences School, describes undergraduates as being provincial, a-intellectual, and having a dysfunctional culture. Robert Paul Wolff, speaking to a meeting of the general faculty last spring, summed up the faculty view: "We, the faculty, are the university," and was enthusiastically received.

At that same general faculty meeting students were prohibited from speaking. The faculty shouted down to the attempt of this author to challenge this hypocritical stance in a place where freedom of expression and thought is a universal right and not the exclusive domain of any special interest group. They voted to allow only faculty members of their chosen allies the right to speak.

The faculty as a group have several other double standards. While they have enjoyed a grievance procedure, they have never formalized any student academic grievance procedure. In issues such as the questioning of a grade received from a faculty member, students do not have an avenue to adjudicate any injustice. If a faculty member is questioned for political or substantive work in a tenure process, they can claim it is an infringement upon their academic freedom and can be judged in a grievance procedure by peers. As students we often have to modify our positions in papers, exams, etc. to meet faculty biases or perspectives, or suffer the consequences.

The withholding of grades being advocated by the faculty union will not only hurt the administrative machinery but will also have a significant negative impact on students. Students who are in the process of transferring need official transcripts, students leaving school for jobs need grades for employment, students bordering on dismissal need to know early to make new plans, and the withholding of grades will hurt them all. This lack of information will also affect services relying on accurate enrollment data to formulate their own plans. Financial aid awards will be held up, people waiting as transfer applicants will be delayed, housing assignments can't be finalized, scheduling of courses will be late, and who knows what else will hit upon students as a direct result of this action by the faculty?

A class action suit against the faculty union for advocating and facilitating the illegal withholding of grades is a distinct possibility of recourse by students.

The picketing of commencement will mar not an event of the administration but of the students. The faculty union's chance of success relies heavily on public and peer opinion. By impacting upon an occasion of celebration of the university's positive successes, they will go a long way in alienating the public and their peers.

In other faculty unions at other schools students have proven to be a decisive influence in the success or failure of the unions' activities. At UMass students can and will play a major role. Realizing that students don't represent pawns in an institutional chess game is one pre-requisite the faculty union has thus far failed to fulfill.

Staff to implement proposal

The Collegian has only seven more publishing days left in the semester. With this in mind, the Collegian staff has decided to implement the proposal for including women's news into the paper that was supported by the Board of Editors last Thursday. This does not mean the Collegian is closing the door to negotiations with the protesters in the Collegian office. It does mean the Collegian is trying to provide better coverage of women's news in the little time left us. A brief summary of the plan:

1. A guaranteed minimum of 40 inches a day for women's news generated in the women's department.

...the Collegian staff has decided to implement the proposal for including women's news into the paper supported by the Board of Editors...

2. Wire stories and stories generated from news services which are women related will be considered part of the news departments copy, with page positioning to be decided jointly by the women's editor and the news editor.

3. The news pages of the newspaper are now under the joint jurisdiction of the news and women's editros.

4. A nightly meeting of the women's editor, the news editor and the managing editor will determine space and placement of all stories.

5. The news and the women's departments will be responsible for the stories generated within their departments.

6. Editorial questions concerning sexual preference, rape, contraception, and similar issues should be referred to the women's editor.

7. Women's cultural events will be included in the fine arts magazine as all cultural events would be.

We feel this program can work. We recognize our past problems with women's news and think this program is a first big step in the direction of correcting them. We invite any individuals or groups who wish to get women's information out to the public to join the women's staff, and help us get on with the business of creating a newspaper that is responsible to the UMass community as a whole.

Mountaineering #4.

THE OPTIMUM MOMENT.

Mountaineering[1] is a skill of timing as well as technique. The wrong moment, like the wrong method, marks the gap between amateur and aficionado. So the key to successful mountaineering is to choose the occasions wisely and well. When, then, is it appropriate to slowly quaff the smooth, refreshing mountains of Busch Beer?

Celebrations, of course, are both expected and excellent opportunities to test your mountaineering mettle. Indeed, on major holidays it is virtually mandatory to do so. Imagine ushering in the fiscal new year or commemorating Calvin C. Coolidge's birthday or throwing caution to the wind during Take-A-Sorghum-To-Lunch-Week without the benefit of Busch. A disturbing prospect at best.

On the other hand, not every event need be as significant as those outlined above. Small victories like exams passed, papers completed or classes attended are equally acceptable. Remember the mountaineer's motto: matriculation is celebration.

Interpersonal relationships are also meaningful times. There are few things finer than taking your companion in hand and heading for the mountains, transcending the ho-hum and hum-drum in favor of a romantic R & R. Naturally, couples who share the pleasures of mountaineering run the risk of being labeled social climbers. But such cheap shots are to be ignored. They are the work of cynics, nay-sayers and chronic malcontents.

Similarly, the ambience of an athletic afternoon (e.g. The Big Game) is another ideal moment. Downing the mountains elevates the morale of the fan and, hence, the team. Therefore, if you care at all about the outcome, it is your duty to mountaineer.

When should one not enjoy the invigoration of the mountains? Here, you'll be happy to learn, the list is much briefer.

Mountaineering is considered declassé with dessert, improper during judicial proceedings and just plain foolish while crop dusting around power lines. Otherwise, as the hot-heads of the sixties used to say, "Seize the time!"

[1] Mountaineering is the science and art of drinking Busch. The term originates due to the snowy, icy peaks sported by the label outside and perpetuates due to the cold, naturally refreshing taste inside. (cf. lessons 1, 2 and 3.)

Torrez blanks Chisox, 5-0

BOSTON [AP] — Mike Torrez fashioned his first complete-game victory with Boston and Jim Rice and Carl Yastrzemski belted two-run homers, leading the Red Sox to a 5-0 decision over the Chicago White Sox yesterday.

Torrez, who signed for $2.5 million as a free agent after pitching the New York Yankees to the World Series championship last fall, allowed six hits and struck out four without issuing a walk in boosting his record to 4-1.

Rice, the 1977 American League home run champion, gave Torrez all the cushion he needed by drilling his ninth homer off Chicago starter Pablo Torrealba, 1-4, in the first inning.

Rice, extending his hitting streak to seven games, lined a single to left in the third and scored after Yastrzemski hit his first homer of the season and NO. 367 of his career.

Boston added another run in the third on a single by Carlton Fisk, an infield out and a single by Butch Hobson.

Torrez was helped by two double plays in handing the White Sox their second consecutive shutout. Chicago was blanked for the sixth time this season, compared with only two whitewash jobs during the entire 1977 campaign.

Torrez needed only 87 pitches in his masterpiece. He was given a standing ovation with two out in the ninth, and with the count two strikes, Bobby Bonds stepped out of the batter's box because of the thunderous noise.

Bonds refused to get back into the box for a full two minutes. When he finally did, he looked at a ball and then looked at a called third strike as the crowd roared its approval.

The victory was Boston's fifth in a row and sixth in seven games on the current home stand.

All six Chicago hits were singles, including a pair by Bonds. Chicago failed to advance a runner past second base.

The Red Sox managed just seven hits, only one after the third inning. Rice and Rick Burleson had two hits apiece.

Torrez had outstanding control in his finest effort of the season. He was a doubtful starter until a few hours before game time because of back muscle spasms which forced him to bow out of a scheduled assignment Saturday.

UMass started in the title match as she took a pass from Hackett and fired in a bounce shot. Kibling gave UMass a 2-0 lead minutes later from the same spot after taking a cross field pass from Hartley.

Yale, down 4-1 started a rally midway through the second half and tied the score with just two minutes left. In the overtime period, Kennedy picked up a loose ball, came in on the left side and let go a low shot which scored and bedlem took place.

Mitwomen sweep pair

By MELISSA GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

UMass softball coach Diane Thompson got just what she hoped for: a sweep over Vermont in a doubleheader to carry her squad into this week's action at Springfield and the Easterns.

The Minutewomen did it via a two-hit shutout, 14-0, and a decisive, 10-4, win. Sue Peters allowed two hits in the five innings pitched to capture her sixth win. Kathy O'Connell held Vermont hitless for the remainder.

Cheryl Meliones, the fiesty catcher, led the barrage with a grand slam homerun and a triple. Rhonda McManus banged three RBIs on three hits, while Peters scored two. Elaine Howle ripped two hits for two RBIs. Jen Parker, Pat Oski and Fran Cornacchioli had an RBI apiece.

"We played great, especially in the first game," summed up Howle.

Kathy O'Connell won the nightcap going five innings giving up five hits and two earned runs for her fourth victory. Beth O'Connell continued the sister act to gain the save.

With two outs in the first the Umies tallied four on Kathy Horrigan's single, Oski's mishandled rap and O'Connell's base hit.

The Minutewomen eruped for two more in the third keyed by Oski's single. The fourth frame was similar as UMass scored three aided by errors and McManus' hit.

The maroon and white completed the scoring with an unearned run in the final frame.

A sad note on the twin bill was learning Beth Collins broke her third finger of the season after contributing a hit.

Records fall at Easterns

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

Two school records for four personal best times were the result of six UMass trackwomen's trek to Slippery Rock, Pa. Saturday to compete in the Eastern Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women's Track and Field championships.

Junior Debbie Farmer set a school record in the 1500 meters and sophomore Cindi Martin did likewise in the 800 meters. Both were personal records, with Laurie Wolf's 800 meter time and Linda Welzel's 3000 meter run a P.R. also.

Martin won her semifinal heat with a time of 2:18.1, then came back in the final for a seventh place effort of 2:12.7. Her equivalent 880 yard time would have been 2:13.4, also a P.R. The race was won by Penn State's Penny Fales in 2:09.

"Cindi got a good start but faltered at the 660 mark, before coming on strong," said Coach Charlotte Lettis. "She said she didn't feel well, but that's understandable given her 61.9 first quarter."

Martin's time missed qualifying for the nationals by seven-tenths of a second.

Farmer won her heat of the metric mile and finished ninth in the East with a time of 4:45. Lettis said that would be the equivalent of a 5:05 or 5:06 mile. That mile time would also be a P.R., another in a string of consistent performances by next year's track and cross country captain.

Wolf's semifinal time of 2:18.1 missed by one place of getting her into the finals, as she was fouled twice, once coming into the stretch by the woman who beat her into the finals.

The decision was protested by Lettis, but her protest was disallowed. "She was knocked all over the track," said Lettis. "It's too bad, she looked so fresh. I think she was good for a 2:16, anyway, and Laurie said she felt ready for the best race of her life."

Freshman Linda Welzel was also ninth in the East in the 3000 meters, with a personal best in that event (10.36.7) and in the two mile (11:21).

Lettis said she was disappointed with the performances of the other two Minutewomen competitors, Nancy Cominoli and Karen Snow, but was quick to add, "the long trip was difficult on everyone, and the weather, cold and rainy, was horrible for the sprinters and field event people. Both Cominoli (hurdles) and Snow (javelin) were the last people not taken into the finals in their events.

Gazelles qualify for Nationals

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

BRIDGEWATER — Judy Kennedy's overtime goal yesterday gave the UMass women's lacrosse team a 5-4 win over Yale University in the finals for the New England Championships.

The win qualified UMass for the National Championships in Virginia in May.

Kennedy's goal, which came about two minutes in the overtime, capped a highly successful weekend in which the Gazelles beat Bates 18-2, Middlebury 13-3, and Brown 12-7 and Yale which also qualified for the Nationals.

UMass started the two day tournament on Saturday morning by easing past Bates, scoring nine straight opening goals before Bates could answer.

First period goals by Deb Hartley (three) Cari Nickerson, Jean Hackett, and Sue Kibling with two goals each helped boost UMass to an 11-2 halftime lead before coach Frank Garahan substituted using his bench.

The second half was much the same story as UMass outscored Bates 7-0. Fiona McAllister, Hackett, and Kathy Gipps had two goals each in the second period which showed UMass' bench strength.

The win advanced UMass to a game with Middlebury, who were awarded a first round victory when Tufts failed to show. UMass started the afternoon game slowly and were behind 3-2 after the first quarter.

But the UMass fast break started working and Hackett scored the tying goal, redirecting a pass from behind the net from Julie Hall. Kibling's high shot was the actual game winner as the Gazelles ran off ten straight goals, mostly off the fast break.

The 3-2 deficit was the only time UMass was behind the whole tournament but Garahan said after the game, he was not worried.

"I knew we'd get it going after a while," he said.

Deb Hartley was the leading scorer of the game with four goals and three assists. Hackett had three goals and an assist and Cari Nickerson had one goal, four assists.

It was the second game in a row that the defense of Kelly Salls, Gayle Hutchinson, Olivia Lovelae, and goalie Robin Jennings held the opponents scoreless in the second half. They were greatly aided by the fact that the offense was controlling the ball. It was also the second game which UMass hustled to more ground balls (37-21 in the first and 33-21 in the second).

After the Middlebury game, UMass was finally able to rest for its next day's game with Brown, a team UMass had beaten earlier in the season. But Garahan, who saw Brown play on Saturday (9-5 win over Dartmouth), said they were a much improved team since the earlier game.

The Gazelles handled Brown in much the same manner as they had their previous opponents by jumping to a quick lead. Hall scored the first goal unassisted as she broke down the right side all alone. Kibling and Hackett added scores before Hartley tallied three straight to give UMass an 8-4 halftime lead.

Laura O'Neil got the ninth goal as she raced half the field and put in a low shot. Brown battled back but UMass kept getting goals by Nickerson and Kibling. They kept UMass in control.

UMass won the game with the ground balls as they picked up 40 while Brown only 21. Goalie Robin Jennings made five saves total.

UMass then faced Yale, 3-2 upset winners over New Hampshire, the No. 1 seeded team in the tourney. Kibling got

Gorillas top Crimson

By RUSS SCHMIDT
Collegian Staff

Garber's Gorillas - 12 Harvard Univ. - 11. Super!!

The victory should nudge UMass back into the driver's seat of the New England rankings, where they belong. It also could move them up in the national rankings a couple notches — unfortunately not enough to make the playoff.

The Gorillas in two games (inclusive is the Army contest), have reinstated faith in those fans who got down on the lacrosse team — because of their record — or way they they playing — or whatever. Saturday's contest proved to those 'UMies on the Hill' that they still are a decent team; they put everything together — passing, defense and that ever-loving hitting; thrilled the fans and, more importantly, kept the pressure on Harvard.

In short, it was an EXCELLENT game!!!!

UMass broke on top 2-0 on the strength of goals by Norm Smith and Brooks Sweet (man-up) before Harvard fought its way back to a 3-2 lead. With thirty seconds remaining in the first quarter, UMass worked the ball around for the last shot. Pit Martin scored in the slot with :02 remaining on the clock to knot the score at 3's.

The UMass fastbreak was finished off in style when Sweet passed the ball across 'the lane' to Pit Martin, whose low drive from 10 feet put the good guys up 4-3. Harvard tied it at four, before Billy Anderson got together, with Peter Schmitz' shot, just making it inside the post-once again UMass was up by one, 5-4. Yet Harvard tied it again.

Super passing between Sweet and Dave Martin led to a score: Martin gave it to Sweet-who returned the favor, and Martin tossed it in - with the crowd going nuts in appreciation of the play. Naturally, Harvard had to tie it up with eighteen seconds remaining in the half, as a deflected shot found its way past Don Goldstein.

Each team missed chances in the nearly goings of the third period-with men in close somehow missing sure scores. Goldstein went down to make a couple great saves, resembling a hockey goalie somewhat. Harvard goalie Ken First made a kick save on a Pit Martin shot.

Harry Conforti broke a seven-all tie with a long range bullet — only to have Harvard score seven seconds later from the faceoff to make it 8-8.

The UMass passing attack took over the net the next three scores-putting UMass up 11-8, their biggest lead of the game. Eddie Murray hit Skip Vosburgh for the first one. Mike Lettera, whose field presence seems to ignite the team, handed off to Smith, who unselfishly gave it to Martin (Dave) who scored. The third quarter ended following the Sweet-to Martin-to Pit Martin goal; and the crowd gave the team a standing ovation as the horn sounded.

In the final period, UMass was up 11-9 when Sweet was attempting to get free around the Harvard goal crease. After four changes in direction, he passed off to Martin (Dave again) who fired in what turned out to be the winner.

The UMass defense held off Harvard and the offense controlled the ball most of the final two minutes to preserve the victory.

'Crosse check.... UMass at Springfield today (3 p.m.) .... great background sounds for the game; horns, bells, etc.....

Batmen gain split with Providence

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Against the background music supplied by McCoy Tyner, whose tunes wafted down from the Stadium, two teams Saturday played one of the ultimate in baseball games.

In the first contest of the doubleheader against Providence College at Earl Lorden Field, the UMass baseball team overcame everything from a super-wild pitcher to unfortunate luck and fought from behind to beat the Friars, 8-7. It marked the fourth one-run win for the Minutemen this season, and leaves them still in the running for a playoff spot.

The nightcap was a totally different scene, however, as PC completely overpowered the Minutemen and went home with a 12-1 victory.

The split gives UMass a 17-18 record heading into today's game at UConn (3 p.m. start), while the Friars are 16-8 and end their season today.

But baseball purists and dilettantes alike derived satisfaction from the simply superb lid-lifter.

When Mike McEvilly lined a seventh inning, bases loaded two-out single into the gap in right-center with the score 7-6, PC, to plate the winning runs, it was merely the culmination of a fascinating exercise in baseball strategy, skill, and just plain power.

This game has everything, and somewhat overshadowed by the feats in the opener was Phil Reppucci's four home run afternoon. PC's leftfielder hit two in each game to double his season's production. The two teams hit a total of nine in the twinbill.

It appeared, for a time, that the Minutemen were destined to lose. Entering the seventh, UMass had stranded nine baserunners — including two men twice — while the Friars had been much more economical with their offense and left a mere five aboard.

Had it not been for a tremendous catch by leftfielder Mark Sullivan, the Minutemen may have needed more than McEvilly's hit to win. With two runners on and two out in the top of the inning, Sullivan extended himself to the limit and made a diving catch in the gap of a John Broadhurst liner. Both runners, off with the crack of the bat, would have come home to make the score 9-6.

But then again, had Sullivan's line drive eluded shortstop Steve O'Neill's glove and not been turned into an inning ending double play with the bases loaded in the fifth, the great grab might not have meant so much.

Just prior to Sullivan's DP, PC rightfielder Ed Cahir missed an easy fly ball with the bases full. Leo Kalinowski's good luck turned into an RBI single.

Sullivan had been a hero earlier when he smacked a three-run, 400-foot homer over the right center field fence in the first inning. It was his second round tripper of the season.

The stage was thusly set for McEvilly's game-winner: Mike Walsh reached on a walk and was sacrificed to second by Mike Stockley (only one of two perfect UMass sacs in the game).

Charlie Ciccone then drew another free pass. Ed Skribiski subsequently grounded to short, but pinch runner George Kelley's textbook take-out slide prevented a double play. After another walk to Doug Aylward, McEvilly jumped on a 2-2, down the middle fastball and won this thing, finally

On the subject of great catches, Aylward almost made one himself in the eventful fifth. He dove for an O'Neill liner in right and had it tick off his glove. Although Aylward later said he should have had it, the drive went for a ground rule double and drove starter Chris Collins from the mound. Jim Lewis came on for two and one third innings — and gave up two homers — before Dave Tewhill pitched two thirds of an inning and got credit for his first win of the season.

The Minutemen rapped out 11 hits and received eight walks, and were vastly relieved to see starter Chuck Kwolek leave the mound after two were somewhat out in the first. The PC starter had shown he was vying for honorary membership in the Steve Dalkowski Hall of Fame by throwing 28 pitches — two of which hit batters, two of which were wild, and one of which Sullivan ripped bye-bye. Kwolek also walked three.

UM 2nd in YanCons

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

The 1978 edition of the Yankee Conference Track Championships retained the same outline of the '75, '76 and '77 meets, as the parade consisting of UConn first and UMass second marched into another year.

If not for the heroics of the Minutemen freshmen and seniors, Boston University would have upset the routine of the past four years. UConn finished the sunny afternoon at Burlington, Vermont with 200.5 points, while UMass survived the predicted battle for second place as it edged out BU, 128.5 to 121.

The first spark of the day occurred during the first track event when the 440 relay men utilized excellent hand offs en route to a third place showing. The quartet consisted of freshmen Rich Cady, John Cremmen and Dom Trunfio, as well as junior veteran Gerry Herman, finished with season best time of 43.3.

Coach Ken O'Brien cited the performance of co-captain John Richards as the second turning point that guided the tide in the Minutemen's favor. Richards, competing in his last conference meet, won his heat of the 440 intermediate hurdles in a race that best described his talents this spring. Freshman Dan Kelley, by virtue of a better time in his heat, defeated teammate Richards by .5 second place time of 54.0 Richards finished third.

First year man Mike Dorion represented one half of the UMass winners in Vermont, as Kevin McCusker in the steeple chase represented the other. Dorion's authority in the 3 mile hammered the final nail into BU's chances for runner up recognition. His time of 14:08.6 was six seconds better than the efforts of the next finisher, Pat O'Neil of UConn. Senior Bob Neil demonstrated veteran form for fifth place at 14:24.1.

The Minutemen youth struck paydirt in the 120 high hurdles, as the second through fourth positions were owned by the maroon and white. The freshman wave of Paul King, Dan Kelley, and Paul Enis finished with times of 14.7, 14.9 and 15.1 respectively.

For the umpteenth time in as many meetings, the clash between the two mile relay teams, and subsequently the matchup between anchormen Joe Martens and Glen Cohen, took the gold star for the programs most exciting race.

After Mickey Baugh, Rich Thompson and Fran O'Keefe ran legs as fast or faster than they have all year, the baton was given to Martens.

What the musicians had to say about the late Duke Ellington: And The Festival.

(photo by Edward Cohen)

Ellington Orchestra: It's quite an honor to be a participant in the festival. Duke Ellington in my opinion is probably the greatest American composer. It would be nice if it could be an annual affair.

Mercer Ellington

(Photo by Miriam Carter)

Pharoh Sanders: I loved the festival. I love him through his music and as a man. He was a great leader of all time.

Buddy Guy: Duke Ellington was one of the greatest musicians I ever heard and its an honor to be mentioned in anything connected with his name.

Junior Wells: We really and truly appreciate being here and he hope to be back. We know that the rest of the show is going to be excellent.

(photo by Bill Harris)

Patti LaBelle: Duke Ellington was born on April 29, my husband's birthday and died on May 24, my birthday. This has always meant something to me and I'm glad to be a part of this. I'll do it again.

McCoy Tyner: He was certainly a master and a major contributor to this art form. He's truly a representative. I wish I could have played a little longer. I enjoyed it. (Photo by Miriam Carter)

A TRIBUTE TO HON. ELIJAH MUHAMMAD, SIS. CLARA MUHAMMAD

The following excerpts on the contributions of The Honorable Elijah Muhammad and Sister Clara Muhammad are taken from the Ethnic Survival Day address delivered by John Omar, vice-president of the Sallam International Corporation.

His remarks were part of a total presentation he prepared on the work of great contributors to Bilalian heritage and history.

One of the great heroines of our age about whom the general public knows so little was Sister Clara Muhammad. Emam Wallace D. Muhammad has given to us some vivid highlights that perfectly describe the excellence of her moral character.

During the early 40s, it was an extremely difficult period for the baby Nation of Islam. The Honorable Master Elijah Muhammad had been incarcerated because of his refusal to serve in the Armed Forces.

Sister Clara Muhammad, with the inspiration of Allah, took hold of the reins and actually ran the community in the Master's absence. She was correspondent, consultant and adviser to all the leaders in matters of duty and responsibility.

You must understand that certain forces in high places were determined that this would be the end of the growth of Al-Islam in America. They simply underestimated, as they were prone to do, the vast reserves of determination and support embodied in the familyhood and motherhood of Al-Islam. The movement survived.

Sister Clara Muhammad was a woman full of grace and heart. She felt it was her personal duty to visit the sick and support the education of our children. During graduations, she always gave gifts and flowers out of her personal money to the children. Her strong stand kept the school open during difficult times.

She raised all of her children to accept the spiritual leadership of her husband and practice the faith as he preached it. Most of her children feel that because of her strong and relentless insistence, they all grew up in the faith and remained to this very day.

She did not only convert her children to the Honorable Master Elijah Muhammad and his teachings, but also her father, brother and sisters, and many others from the broader community.

She never was seen or found presenting any image or exhibiting any behavior that would discredit the leadership of the Honorable Elijah Muhammad. She exemplified the ideal Muslim woman.

She practiced the faith to the end and showed genuine concern for the health, protection and general welfare of all members. Several of the leading figures in the following of the Honorable Elijah Muhammad called her mother, and she called them son. She was not liked by all, but all certainly admired her and credited her with the tributes here made.

She was outspoken and sometimes hurting with her frankness but it was all well-meaning and in the defense of the Muslim life that she lived so devoutly and so completely.

Heaven Is Under Our Feet —
Let's Dig It Out!

Let's look now at the physical contributions of the Honorable Elijah Muhammad, which as you know are unique in Bilalian history in America. He was more successful in more different areas of manufacturing, trade and commerce than any other Bilalian leader.

The Honorable Elijah Muhammad was the first Bilalian to bring jobs into our community from overseas trade.

From Peru, South America he imported millions of pounds of Whiting H&G Fish.

From Japan in the Far East, he imported a shipload of household goods.

From Morocco in Africa, the now famous Salaam Sardines are marketed nationwide.

He was responsible for the development of many other businesses in our community, i.e., supermarkets, bakeries, cleaners, restaurants (including the famous Salaam Restaurant). Also:

—The Muhammad Speaks newspaper and warehouse.

—The Chicago Lamb Packers plant.

—Rich farmland [North and South].

—The present Masjid and school complex.

—Many apartment and small home dwellings.

In the transportation field, Master Elijah Muhammad was second to none with a massive fleet of Kenworth tractors and trailers and many smaller in-city trucks. Later, transport planes and a modern jet were added to the system.

One of the greatest and most humanitarian goals of the Master was to build a hospital to service the South Side of Chicago. This project has never died; it has evolved into a great new institution called:....

—"The Honorable Elijah Muhammad Health Care Facilities," presently headquartered with offices and clinics in the modern Pioneer's Building, another monument to the business creativity of this great man.

Eman Wallace D. Muhammad has reminded us of a very important original concept of his father.

"Unlike Marcus Garvey and Dr. Fard Muhammad, the Honorable Elijah Muhammad came to advocate the establishment of a separate territory consisting of several states for the independent development of the Bilalian people as an alternative to segregation and bitter racist rejection.

"In his last national address he invited his followers to bury the hatchet of racial bitterness and show the same respect to Caucasians that they received. With a gesture more than any words can say, he pointed to a Caucasian guest on the platform saying: "This is my brother — one of the scientists of Islam!"

The Chief Emam considers that the greatest contribution of the Honorable Elijah Muhammad was his courage-building, mind-expanding, economic, moral, political, social and race pride demands.

STILL FIGHTING FOR FREEDOM

The Gary Tyler Defense Committee held a conference and rally in New Orleans April 8 to work on continuing efforts to free Black frame-up victim Gary Tyler.

Committee leader Juanita Tyler, Gary's mother, said, "The most important thing is to mobilize people around the country to do something bigger than we've done so far. We have to do this kind of thing to let the system know we haven't given up, we're still fighting for Gary Tyler's freedom."

Tyler is currently serving a life sentence in Angola State Penetentiary in Louisiana after being framed on murder charges stemming from an anti-"busing" rally in New Orleans in 1975. Legal efforts to free 19-year-old Tyler have been nearly exhausted, with the racist judiciary, rejecting every move made by his supporters.

The defense committee has called for a national July demonstration to demand his release. For information: Gary Tyler Defense Fund, 344 Camp St., Suite 301, New Orleans, La. 70130, tel. 504-568-9890.

SOWETO ELECTIONS BOYCOTTED

With only 6% of eligible voters participating in the election, it appears that the Community Council recently inaugurated in Soweto will continue to be known as a "Useless Boys Club."

Of 60,000 eligible voters in 14 wards, only 3600 voted April 16, a small percentage rise from the 500 who participated in the Feb. 18 elections in two wards. The Safasonke Party, headed by millionnaire Ephraim Tshabalala, occupies six of the Council's 28 seats.

The government claims that the new council will be given increased executive power, and will continue as well to advise the all-white board that administers Soweto. But the Minister of Plural Relations and Development, Dr. Mulder, warned that the council would have no say over influx control and hopsital services.

PAUL ROBESON BIRTHDAY MARKED

The many contributions of Black leader Paul Robeson were recalled at several recent actions marking the later performer's 80th birthday this month.

In Detroit, residents observed the occasion with a special city-designated week of events April 10-16. In New York City, a special UN meeting paid tribute to Robeson's lifetime of struggle for oppressed peoples.

The Detroit week was kicked off by a cultural celebration of Robeson's life. Mayor Coleman Young, a former labor activist, told the crowd of 800: "Paul Robeson meant a lot to us in the labor movement and the freedom movement here in Detroit. I'm proud that we in Detroit are beginning the restoration of Robeson's name to its place in history."

Robeson, who died in 1976, worked relentlessly as singer, actor, lawyer and athlete in progressive cause. At a special "Labor and Robeson" meeting in Detroit's Robeson Auditorium, his close ties with the trade union movement were noted, including his aid in founding the National Negro Labor Council in 1952. A third major event was held at Hartford Avenue Baptist Church, where Robeson frequently performed.

At the UN, activists from the Black and trade union movements joined with international UN delegates. One of the program's highlights was the reading of a special tribute from Cuban President Fidel Castro.

The meeting, sponsored by the UN Special Committee on Apartheid, focused on Robeson's efforts for African liberation and against racist oppression. Robeson dedicated his work to teaching people to "reject the prejudices inculcated by the racists and to respect the Black people, their culture and their dignity," committee chairman Leslie O. Harriman of Nigeria said.

"Throughout those difficult years when Paul Robeson was a central target of the reactionary forces, he never wavered from his stand as a militant anti-imperialist," recalled Lloyd Brown, who collaborated on Robeson's autobiography "Here I Stand". "In 1953, recalling how he had once been told by some so-called 'scholarly authorities' that the African people would not be ready for independence for a thousand years, Robeson said this to an audience of Black Americans:

"'A thousand years? No, Africa's time is now! We must see that and realize what it means to us, we American brothers and sisters of the Africans. We must see that we have a part to play in helping to pry loose the robbers' hold on Africa. For if we take a close look at the hands that are at Africa's throat, we will understand it all. We know those hands'."

Among other speakers at the UN meeting were Paul Robeson Jr., African National Congress representative Johnny Makatini and Freedomways magazine editor Esther Jackson. •

SPINKS BLASTS HARASSMENT

The racist tactics of local policemen, the world newsmedia and professional sports officials all came together last month with the arrest of world boxing champion Leon Spinks.

Spinks, who won the heavyweight title from Muhammed Ali last February, was arrested on charges of driving without a license and narcotics possession in his native St. Louis.

Following the April 21 arrest, the broadcast news reports and newspaper and magazine dispatches were filled with sensational details of the "drug bust" and attacks on Spinks' character.

Spinks, however, has vigorously denied that he uses drugs and charges that the arrest was part of a campaign to discredit him. He was also arrested last month on traffic violations and in both incidents he was handcuffed. The "evidence" against him this time consisted of minuscule amounts of marijuana and cocaine, which he says were planted in his hat.

His brother Michael Spinks, a light heavyweight boxing champ, told reporters that he is "not going around with my head hanging down, feeling ashamed, because that's what they want." He said that aside from police harassment, figures in the boxing world are working to drive a wedge between Leon Spinks and his family and friends. This tactic is routinely employed by promoters of Black athletes in order to portry them as worldly stud characters.

SUDANESE LEADER IN DAMASCUS TO IMPROVE SYRIA-EGYPT TIES

DAMASCUS, Syria, May 5 [UPI] — President Gaafar al-Nimeiry of the Sudan arrived here today in an effort to improve strained relations between Syria and Egypt.

General Nimeiry traveled from Egypt, where he held long talks with President Anwar el-Sadat. He was accompanied by Secretary General Mahmoud Riad of the Arab League. Despite General Nimeiry's denials, speculation was rif in Cairo that the Sudanese President would seek to arrange a meeting between Mr. Sadat and President Hafez al-Assad of Syria. Syrian officials, however, have said the mission cannot succeed as long as Egypt maintains its peace initiative with Israel.

Should Third World Students Register to Vote in Amherst?

By MIKE THELWELL

Should [Third World] students register to vote in Amherst?

The case of Brown and Gethers says you should.

For students most political activity consists of responding to crisis, or demonstrating for or against some event or issue that just seems to crop up. Mostly student political activity is responsive, a reaction to issues that someone else created.

There is no reason why this has to be so, simply because it has been the cast in the past. There are excellent reasons for the students at this university becoming a force in the political life of the area and thus playing a role in dinfining what the political issues are. If this sounds abstract let us look at a very concrete example.

For some three years the student community of this university, and particularly the Third World community has had to devote a great deal of time, energy and resources to organizing support for two of our members convicted of a felony on unbelievably flimsy evidence and in spite of what seemed to us a prosecution case so nebulous as to be laughable.

More important than the time and effort the community has had to devote to the case is the real and irreparable damage it has done to the lives, careers, education of two innocent students who just happen to be black men. Nothing can compensate Earl Brown and Graemon Sethers for the time taken from their lives, the suffering to themselves and families, the public embarassment and mental anguish. But we can act to try to ensure that similar miscarriages of justice do not befall other students. Quite simply this means registering and voting in local elections.

All of what happened to Brown and Gethers could have been prevented or stopped at any point in the protracted process by the action of one official — the District Attorney or Hampshire-Franklin county. This single, public or official has discretion over which cases are brought to trial and which cases are not. He could have said to the police this case doesn't seem very strong lets not prosecute. Or the case if falling apart I'm gonna drop the charges. Maybe if he felt any political responsibility to the student community he might have acted with more restraint. In any case that is history.

What is real right now is that the office of District Attorney is vacant and this time there is a candidate for that office with a demonstrated interest in issues affecting students and the poor and powerless.

Joathan Souweine, is a former student at the university (in fact I can remember him as a studnet in one of my courses) and the former director of the Public Interest Research Group in Western Mass. He has just resigned from a job as an attorney in the consumer protection dept of the Attorney General's office in Springfield to run. He is young and represents a far more enlightened approach to the law and politics than any candidate for that office..

In view of the way that students tend to be treated by the law enforcement agencies — not only minority students — it would seem clear that there is a clear student interest in the result of his candidacy. Wouldn't it be nice to have a District Attorney who didn't think students were the class enemy? It can happen come next November if enough of you took the trouble to register and vote here in Amherst. But to vote in the primaries you would have to register before you leave for the summer. Think about it.

REPRESSION OF BLACK ACTIVIST EXPOSES U.S. JUSTICE

HARRIS FACES ALABAMA ELECTRIC CHAIR

By JERRY HORNSBY

Alabama's electric chair is being readied for use again after a decade of collecting dust.

Alabama authorities have selected its first victim. And they couldn't have picked a better symbol of what capital punishment in the U.S. is all about. The man chosen is Black and poor, a political activist and prison rebel who was convicted by an all-white jury of murdering a guard during an uprising at one of Alabama's most notorious prison camps.

Johnny Harris, 32, is sentenced to die May 9 in the electric chair. But unlike Gary Gilmore, the Utah convict who made a spectacle of his death, Harris will not die willingly.

Harris was sentenced to die under a seldom used 1864 Alabama law providing the death penalty for persons convicted of murder while serving a life sentence. The state did not try to prove that Harris actually did the killing. It merely demonstrated to the all-white jury that Harris had participated in a prison rebellion in which a white guard was killed. Under Alabama's aiding and abetting statute, in conjunction with the 114-year-old law relating to life-term inmates, this was enough to send Harris to the chair.

The Harris case has recently attracted the interest of Soviet television, radio and press. Both Tass, the official press agency, and Pravda, the newspaper of the Communist Party, have portrayed him as a symbol of the denial of human rights in the U.S.

RACIST JUSTICE

While the Soviets clearly chose to popularize the case to further their propaganda rivalry with the Carter administration over "human rights," the Soviets chose well. The Harris case does indeed expose the essence of racist justice in the U.S.

The background of the case demonstrates that racism was at work in each of Harris' encounters with the Alabama courts and the police leading up to his death sentence last year.

In 1970 Harris' family became the first to move into a previously all-white Birmingham neighborhood. A systematic pattern of racial harassment soon began, according to Ed Rudd of the Montgomery, Alabama, Prison Project. William Allison of Louisville, one of Harris' attorneys, contends the move into the white neighborhood triggered many of Harris' subsequent encounters with the police.

That same year, 1970, Johnny Harris was charged with rape and four counts of robbery, all capital offenses in Alabama at that time. The amount of the alleged robberies ranged from $11 to $205 and the rape allegations was shaky. According to Rudd, the white victim described her assailant as 6'2", heavyset with a moustache. Harris is 5'8", is not especially heavyset, and was clean-shaven when arrested not long after the rape.

Harris later said he wanted to plead not guilty to all of the charges, but explains that his two court-appointed lawyers persuaded him to admit guilt to the rape count as part of a deal wlth the district attorney that would allow him to escape a death sentence.

Harris thought that the other four counts would be dropped. Instead, after pleading guilty to one count, he was given five consecutive life sentences on the rape and robbery charges and jailed at the maximum security Holman Prison.

There, Harris became active in Inmates for Action (IFA), a prisoners survival group, organized in September 1972. In the judgment of many, IFA had an impact stretching to other prisons across the country.

IFA demanded better prison conditions at Holman and initiated a broad range of programs for the prison population ranging from literacy classes to drug counseling. The programs also included sessions on political consciousness-raising, Black history, constitutional law and social and economic conditions. The IFA also succeeded in overcoming some of the racism deliberately sown to divide the Black and white inmates.

The prison authorities' response to the IFA left no doubt in the minds of those who led the group that they were marked for suppression by any means that jailers felt necessary.

On Jan. 17, 1974, IFA member Jesse Clanzy was beaten unmercifully by prison guards. The following day, one of Holman's white guards, observing an IFA session in progress, told a fellow guard, "Why don't you stop these 'niggers'? Do them like we did Clanzy last night. Kill them."

The attack on Clanzy ignited a powder keg of grievances. The next day a group of IFA members took two white guards hostage and asked to see the warden. The warden heard the demands, left, returned and ordered the cellblock stormed.

Inmate Oscar Lee Johnson described the scene: "They came on down the hallway from cell to cell, shooting as they came, yelling 'kill them, kill them.'" Johnson said inmates were made to pile on top of each other in the hallway while guards beat them, and some cut them with pocket knives.

MYSTERIOUS INMATE DEATHS

A white guard was fatally stabbed during the melee. And shortly afterward a Black IFA member, George Dobbins, died under mysterious circumstances. He was taken from his cell bleeding but with no marks on his face and put in an ambulance with guards for an hour-long ride to the nearest hospital. The official cause of death cited minor gunshot wounds and massive stab wounds and blows to the head and face. IFA supporters are virtually unanimous in believing Dobbins was murdered on the way to the hospital.

Less than two months later a second IFA member, Tommy Lee Dotson, was killed while being led naked and handcuffed to a prison shower. Officials maintained that Dotson attacked his guards with a knife.

The following month a third IFA leader, Frank X. Moore, was foun hanging in his cell. While prison authorities labeled this a suicide, the suspicion remains widespread that Moore too was murdered.

And those IFA members who weren't killed were indicted in connection with the uprising. They became known as the Atmore-Holman Brothers. Harris was the only one of the 11 to be charged with a capital offense. The others were convicted of lesser charges.

The Harris case was personally prosecuted by Alabama Attorney General Bill Baxley. Politically ambitious — he is now running for governor — Baxley captured headlines for convicting the instigators of "Alabama's Attica."

Harris, duly convicted, was sentenced to die in Holman's electric chair March 10 this year. A 60-day stay was issued 59 hours before the scheduled execution, prompting Harris' present defense team to predict that another stay from May 9 would not easily be obtained, even though many aspects of Harris' case are on appeal in both state and federal courts. Says attorney Allison: "On May 9 it is still a very live thing. I can't say it won't happen. Alabama can do anything."

WOMEN MARCH TO END RAPE, ABUSE

In response to the rising incidence of rape, "battering" by husbands and other forms of violence against women, activists in Washington, D.C., and Columbus, Ohio, organized several activities during "anti-rape week" April 23-29.

The highlight of the week was a march "to take back the night" April 29. A total of 1000 women in both cities marched through the streets after dark, calling for an end to rape and other anti-woman crimes. Demonstrators also expressed support for women's right to self-defense and demanded the right to control their own bodies and lives.

The largest action was in Washington, where over 600 marched through a high-rape neighborhood to a rally at Dupont Circle, according to a Guardian Washington Bureau report. Organized by the Rape Crisis Center (RCC), the D.C. Area Feminist Alliance and the Task Force on Abused Women, the march also drew a show of support from sympathetic bystanders.

At the rally, RCC director Nkenge Toure encouragingly noted the presence of a small number of men and third world women among the predominantly white female crowd. "We must make people aware that we intend to end batter and rape," she said, "and we must unite the community to do that."

A speaker from the Dessie Woods Defense Committee demanded immediate freedom for Woods, a Black woman imprisoned in Georgia for killing a white man who tried to rape her.

Other demands raised at the Washington rally touched on other essential needs of area women. Calls were issued for establishing 24-hour police service, better treatment of rape victims and improved police response and attitudes to crimes against women. Women who turn to the police Complaint Center "get no help and no choice as to what will happen to them," charged Valle Jones of the Task Force. She cited a study showing that 11 women who had asked the center for help in a 1-year period ultimately were killed in violent attacks.

Demonstrators also called for creation of a shelter for battered women and their children, changes in the rape and self-defense laws, better standards for street and housing security and free medical care for victims of sexual assault. The Washington, D.C., General Hospital is the only facility to offer no-cost care for rape victims.

Finally, the Washington women demanded ongoing city funding for the RCC, a nonprofit organization. Founded in 1972 primarily as a 24-hour hotline service for rape victims, the center now includes referral and crisis counseling, self-defense classes, rape prevention and a speakers' bureau among its services to the community. It is also planning for a fall program to educate elementary school children on how to deal with child abuse and incest. Yet the organization depends mostly on donations and

FRANCE AIDS CHAD JUNTA

As guerrilla forces in Chad close in on the capital, France is coming to the rescue of the neocolonial military regime.

Heightened French intervention in its former central Africa colony was underscored last week with the official announcement that a 1100-member force would augment French troops already fighting against Frolinat, the Front for the Liberation of Chad.

The announcement, made by French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, came as a new contingent of French foreign legionnaires arrived in N'djamena, the Chadian capital, now defended by French paratroopers and 10 Jaguar fighter-bombers. The reinforcements joined 650 French soldiers flown to Chad April 20 following the breakdown of a ceasefire signed last month by the government of President Felix Malloum and Frolinat.

A continuing aggressive French military presence in the country reportedly led to the renewed fighting. During talks in Libya leading to the ceasefire agreement, Frolinat had demanded a complete French pullout. There was instead a pledge that representatives of neighboring Sudan and Niger would closely monitor any foreign military presence in Chad. The procedure was apparently inadequate, providing a French lifeline to Malloum, whose government was near military defeat when the ceasefire pact was made.

As a column of over 100 guerrilla military vehicles was reported within 200 miles of the capital last week, pro-Frolinat demonstrations erupted throughout the country, targeting the French intervention. French civilians hurriedly evacuated from N'djamena meanwhile told reporters that the Chadian government was "in panic" with "real tension" mounting in the capital. •

Indian struggle makes political gains

by ABE WEISBURD

Five years after Wounded Knee, the struggle for freedom and self-determination by Native Americans has become international in scope and deeper in its political perspective.

Linking up with liberation movements around the world, making ties with other fights against racial and class oppression, fending off continued FBI infiltration and moving strategically on fronts as diverse as international law and local fishing rights, a broad-based movement has gained wide support and sharpened its anti-imperialist focus.

To help in assessing the developments since the Wounded Knee defense, the Guardian interviewed Jimmy Durham, UN representative of the International Indian Treaty Council (IITC). Asked what he saw as the major advance of the Native American struggle he answered without hesitation: "The political understanding that we did not have five years ago."

"Our struggle and our political advances have taken us out of isolation and into an understanding of the nature of the world struggle against imperialism," he continued. "We have developed a deeper commitment and understanding that it is absolutely essential to conduct the struggles for liberation on every front at many levels.

"Not just running out and occupying a piece of land or filing a lawsuit for fishing rights, as important as these things are. But making alliances and working with other victims of U.S. imperialism, nationally and internationally. And finding a way of working with other forces willing to cooperate with us."

These gains in perspective and ties have not come easily, but have been accompanied by losses — casulaties due to the extensive government drive against American Indian Movement (AIM) militants. "The repression of Native Americans in the past five years has been absolutely incredible," Durham said. "It has taken a terrible toll.

"Over 1000 Indians were killed by government forces in South Dakota alone since the Wounded Knee confrontation. Thousands of others, whom we missed at our February Wounded Knee celebration, have been either killed or jailed."

Durham had just returned from the 34th session of the UN Human Rights Commission held in Geneva, Switzerland, where he had presented statements outlining the violations of Indian human rights and the right to self-determination by the U.S. and other American countries.

"Internationally we have made tremendous gains," Durham explained. "Just the fact that we have UN consultative status is a major achievement. The U.S. fought against our admission to the UN since we applied in 1974, and we had to fight and fight and use international friends, until we finally got in in April 1977."

The IITC was instrumental in getting the UN to set up a conference on Discrimination Against the Indigenous Population of the Americas in Geneva in September 1977. Durham explained how the IITC used the term self-determination, a key issue at the conference.

"In Bolivia, Nicaragua, Peru and other American countries, it means majority rule. In the U.S., we demand political and economic control of our land and recognition of the treaties that the U.S. entered into with the Indians. We are nations. The fact that the U.S. entered into treaty relations with the Indian nations is de facto recognition by the U.S. that those nations are capable of acting as nations."

AIM activist Russell Means, also present at the interview, said, "In short, self-determination for Native Americans in the U.S. means that the U.S. should live up to its own laws." Means then added: "But we realize that the U.S. won't just grant us our rights. We have to fight to win them. Our membership in the UN helps that fight."

Asked about the variety of local struggles that center on issues of land and resource control, Durham specifically targeted the "energy ripoffs" by mining companies in the West and Southwest.

"In New Mexico, Arizona and Utah," Durham said, "millions of acres of Indian land have already been coal strip-mined by the energy corporations against the wishes of the Indian people. The companies, who have the support of the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs and the U.S. Department of the Interior, refuse to use the available techniques for getting the coal out of the ground without strip-mining because it would cost somewhat more.

"That drive for profits, which is endemic to the capitalist system, destroys the land," he continued. "It can't be reclaimed. So what happens to the Indian people? Their lives and cultures are forever destroyed."

The struggle against the energy companies are "a struggle for survival," Durham said. And on these and other issues, Indian activists are uniting with other forces: "We made good beginnings of alliances and working ties with Black and Chicano organizations, union people, working people no matter what race they are. And because of the deep-seated racism in this country, we couldn't have made those alliances without the most dedicated political struggle to achieve them."

Asked what supported of AIM and IITC could do, Durham replied, "First and foremost, free Leonard Peltier. The issue involved, besides his life, is FBI repression. Everybody should also join the struggle against the forced sterilization of now over 35% of Indian women."

Police Abuse:

Witness convicted on perjury

A Mt. Vernon, N.Y., Black man faces up to seven years in prison after being convicted for lying about a police murder of an unarmed Black.

Allan Nero was convicted April 12 of lying to a grand jury investigating the death of Walter Williams. Observers contend that the conviction stems from a full-fledged effort to cover up police department crimes.

Williams was shot Feb. 19, 1977, by a white Mt. Vernon cop in front of a number of people, three of whom were ready to testify that it was murder.

After the killing, policeman Ronald DeVito was suspended from the force for a month. A grand jury was convened at the insistence of the local Black community. Despite testimony from a number of eyewitnesses, - however, the grand jury exonerated DeVito.

The police department then carried the injustice one step further and jailed the witnesses on perjury charges based on slight discrepancies in testimony. Charges against two of the witnesses were dropped, but Nero was prosecuted.

"The grand jury room (where Nero was indicted) is the real crime scene here," defense attorney Alton Maddox of the National Conference of Black Lawyers told the Guardian. Maddox said the case "points up abuse of the grand jury system and how it can be used to threaten and intimidate folks."

While Nero's version of the events varied only slightly from that given by other witnesses, there were several discrepancies in accounts given by police officers, none of whom were prosecuted for perjury.

The members of the State Supreme, Court petty jury which convicted Nero, Maddox said, "felt that if they would have acquitted Nero they would have been indicting the police department. They saw their job as protecting the police department."

The cops needed the conviction, he charged, in order to mar the credibility of potential witnesses in a possible further investigation of the killing. The perjury charge was intended to convey the message, "Keep your mouth shut or go to jail," Maddox told the Guardian. As a result, "a lot of folks who saw what happened are scared now."

The racism of the Mount Vernon judicial system was an important factor in the conviction, Nero's supporters charge. "The grand jury was all-white, the petty jury was all-white," pointed out John Harmon of the Walter Williams Defense Committee. "That speaks for itself."

Nero, free on bail, will be sentenced May 19. He plans to appeal the conviction.

Black Defends Family Stands Trial

Liberation News Service

Since the election of Jimmy Carter, the U.S. press has been full of reports on the "New South" — a sunny land where Blacks and whites live in peace and lynchings and cross-burnings are nothing but a bitter memory.

Yet it is in the "New South" that a Black man, Charles Smith, was scheduled to stand before an Alabama court May 1 to face charges of first degree murder stemming from his defense on himself and family against a white man who attacked them with a machete.

Smith's story, as told to LNS by his attorney Michael Figures and by Charles Carter, a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) legal defense project working on his case, is as follows:

Smith and his family had moved into an all-white neighborhood in Mobile, Ala. last July. Immediately after they arrived, harassment began. Bricks were thrown through the front window of the Smith's home and the family was repeatedly subjected to verbal abuse and threatening phone calls.

Smith called the police several times. He was told that they could do nothing. He was told that they could do nothing. In August, when the Smith's fence was firebombed, the police insisted they could find no evidence indicating who had thrown the bomb. Nevertheless, they assured Smith that the firebombings was not the work of the Ku Klux Klan. The Klan, the police stated, was more "thorough in its work."

The white woman who sold the house to the Smiths, Lulu Byrd, also received threatening phone calls. Byrd finally was able to divert all phone calls to the police station, where the numbers and names of phone callers were taken. But the police have not followed up these calls. Harassment of the Smiths and Byrd continued.

On Labor Day, Smith and his family held a reunion in their backyard. During the cook-out, some of the older children went for a short drive to a neighborhood store. The children had been gone only five minutes, according to Carter, when they returned speeding into the driveway. Before could get out of the car, another car roared in behind them. Two white men jumped out and started chasing the children around the yard, one wielding a lug-wrench and the other brandishing a machete.

Smith, in the backyard with the other adults, heard the children screaming. He ran into the house and grabbed his pistol out of a drawer.

As he came through a side door, Smith saw his father-in-law, Leo Robinson, talking to one of the white men, 19-year-old JImmy Westley Hatcher. Hatcher was holding the machete in his hand. But after repeated pleas from Robinson, he dropped it on the ground. His companion, Daniel Neal, allegedly picked up the machete, stated that he was going to "kill up some of these 'niggers'" and started advancing toward the house.

Smith was standing on the porch talking to his son, with his back to Neal, when he heard someone scream, "Watch out, Charles!" He turned, saw Neal with the machete, took a step back and pulled out his pistol.

"I fired one shot," Smith stated, "I just wanted to warn him to stay away. But he kept on coming toward me." As his assailant advanced, swinging the machete, Smith retreated until his back was against the screen door. Then he fired two more shots, killing Neal.

SELF-DEFENSE

"I can't see why they returned a first degree indictment," Carter told LNS, "for what was obviously a self-defense situation."

"The community has supported Charles, all along," Figures told LNS in a telephone interview. "Ever since it happened we have had community meetings every night."

Smith's case is not unusual, according to Diana Hicks, an activist lawyer in Mobile.

"The situation with police here is very bad," Hicks asserted.

"There have been many incidents in which cops have picked Black people up, taken them to the Mississippi border 60 miles away and let them there with instructions to 'get back the best way you can.' And one Black man here was taken to an empty house and beaten up. They regularly plant evidence on people, lie in court, and throw out evidence."

The police department has also been implicated in racial attacks on Blacks working on the force. Two weeks after the Charles Smith incident, an off-duty Black police officer, Donald Pickney, was watching a counterdemonstration against the Ku Klux Klan when a white policeman approached and clubbed him on the head.

Pickney was then arrested and brought to trial on a number of charges, including refusal to obey the orders of a fellow officer. The judge dismissed the other charges, asserting that Pickney should have left the area even if he had only received a hand signal from the white officer. A few weeks ago, Hicks stated, a photography store run by Pickney and his wife was firebombed.

sales of its own publications to raise money for operating expenses, and receives only a trickle of funding from the D.C. Department of Human Resources.

The April 29 antirape demonstration in Columbus drew over 300 women. Its focus was more restricted, however, and did not link the abuse of women to general social, economic and political conditions, reports the Guardian's Ohio bureau.

The march was organized by Women Against Rape, the Black Women's Leadership Caucus (BWLC) and the Women's Action Collective (WAC). Demonstrators marched through Ohio State University campus and up crowded, bar-lined High Street.

"We are sisters united," said Leila Baker of the BWLC, "under the common cause of safety on the streets. We must demand, fight for and get protection for ourselves at night."

A more sophisticated political understanding was displayed at the rally by the Ad Hoc Committee of Women Against Imperialism. Their banners include demands for "Equal protection for poor and minority women" and "Stop using women in frameups of Blacks."

Women's Takeover of the Collegian

This Article Was Compiled After An Interview With One Of The Women Involved In The Takeover Of The Collegian.

This article was compiled after an interview with one of the women involved in the takeover of the Collegian.

At the present time about 70 people have been barricaded for over a week in the Collegian's office. The confrontation stems from the Collegian's refusal to allow for a special section of the paper to be devoted to women's news.

According to one of the women involved in the takeover, "The Collegian is presenting a very distorted picture of what's going on. "The Collegian is trying to suggest that we are trying to separate all groups." The women, however feel a common bond with other oppressed groups on campus and want to assure the Third World community that their demands for space will not affect the space allocated for Black affairs.

The women feel that the Collegian is the oppressive force trying to separate all the oppressed groups on campus. "They're trying to divide us and make us seem racist (in reference to an article entitled Protest Challenges Festival Success that appeared on 5-4-78), while they're the ones who are racist and sexist.

The women have gotten support from on campus groups such as Ahora, Black affairs, Nummo News, Third World Women's Center and the Office of Third World Affairs. They are seeking more support from the Third World community because they understand and have gone through the same harassments that led to the Collegian takeover for a separate Black affairs section. The women don't see themselves as a special interest group, because women make up half the population.

The issue concerning the Collegian and the women's news has gained national recognition with the women receiving calls and telegrams from feminist across the country.

The Daily Behind the Barricade Press

Good Morning! It is early in the morning, the sun soon to come up (we assume) and we continue to work late into the night with creative and inspiring energy.

It is of vital importance that we continue to try and keep everyone on the outside posted on the news from within, and work actively to contradict Collegian propaganda, which is in relation to the women's pages and is nothing short of manipulative journalism. Their most recent tactics have been both predictable and deceptive, and of the most insidious sort. The slant they are taking and the articles they choose to print continue to attempt to trivialize the issues involved and the severity of the situation they are facing. They have chosen to portray us as "hysterical" and continue to attempt to regard our power in sexrole stereotypic, mythological ways. The are aware that our behavior is not "socially acceptable" — we are being active, thoughtful, and persistent; all characteristics which have in the past and are still labeled as deviant in women. They are attempting to divide us from others who would otherwise be allies, ie. implying that the women's occupation is somehow blocking Nummo News. The fact is that our original proposal and our current demands have clear statements of our committment to see that all Third World news remain unaffected by our access to space and that members of the Black community have supported us from the beginning. The dividing of oppressed people has long been used as a tactic to keep the status quo maintained; and it is the internalization of oppression that makes us turn on each other instead of acting as a unified force.

—We currently have a table set up displaying all of our printed materials from this historic week in the Student Union. Posted above the table is a list of our current supporters on a local and national level —We are currently distributing a sheet addressing what seems to be the most prevalent myths surrounding our demands and the occupation. (Available at our main information table)

—Supports in Franklin County began, picketing the Greenfield Recorder yesterday afternoon, protesting the aid they are giving the Collegian. They have received subscription cancellations.

—We are currently working out an agreement whereby the Index would have limited access to their necessary equipment.

—We are willing to, in an open forum, debate and discuss with the Collegian negotiators and accept all well intentioned questions.

The evolution of this experience is gratifying and exhilerating. We hope there is a day soon when it can be openly shared with all!

Again — Thank you to all of our supporters — your continued efforts inspire us to do the same!

A rally at noon on Monday!!! (place to be determined)

Guerrilla Forces Sign Unity Pact

Eritrea Struggle Enters Crucial Stage

Mike Wells

EPLF guerrilla outside Massawa during fighting last winter.

By DAN CONNELL

The next few months may prove decisive in the 16-year liberation war in Eritrea.

On the one hand, Ethiopia is intensifying preparations for an all-out offensive — a move expected since the Mengistu regime regained control of the Ogaden region.

But there are apparently rumblings of discontent among Ethiopia's international supporters over the junta's unwavering insistence on a military solution. Eritrea is not the same question as the Ogaden, where international opinion largely backed the junta against the Somali invaders.

And inside Eritrea, the two major liberation fronts signed a formal unity pact April 28, an important step that will bring full military and political coordination to the defense of Eritrea.

With Ethiopia poised for a full-scale military onslaught and with the Eritrean guerrillas now joining forces, it is clear both sides are preparing for a military showdown. And on the diplomatic level, both Eritrean and Ethiopian leaders are on the move across the world, meeting with leaders of a half-dozen involved and interested countries in efforts to win support.

At the heart of the controversy is Cuba, with the question: will Cuban troops join Ethiopia's spring offensive Eritrea?

The answer is not yet in, but time is running out on the debate with the approach of the summer rain which will seriously handicap Ethiopian military movement, and with the July opening of the annual summit meeting of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in neighboring Sudan.

The achievement of a viable united front between the EPLF and the ELF has strengthened the movement's military and diplomatic positions. The joint announcement on unity came on April 28 after a week of meetings held in the town of Hagaz in western Eritrea.

Under the terms of the pact, a 6-member coordinating committee made up of three leaders from each front will represent the movement and oversee long-term plans to merge fully the rival organizations.

Subcommittees on military, economic, cultural, foreign and political affairs will also be formed with two leaders from each front to integrate departmental programs.

Military coordination between fighting units of the two fronts is expected to come first due to the imminent threat of invasion from across the Ethiopian border.

Substantial political differences are likely to take longer to overcome. "We have to struggle politically," pointed out Ermias Debessai, EPLF central committee members and foreign mission spokesperson in Rome. "We are independent in our political line, so for a common political program, it will take some time," Ermias explained. "We have to study the whole situation."

The EPLF program is one of national democratic revolution. Lacking major external support, the EPLF has concentrated its efforts on civilian organizations to forge an alliance between Eritrean workers, peasants and other progressive individuals under the leadership of Eritrea's proletariat.

The alliance takes concrete form through a network of separate highly politicized mass associations of peasants, workers, youth, women and petty bourgeois elements. These in turn are the basis for civilian self-rule and the mobilization of material support for the war.

The implementation of sweeping land reform in the liberated zones, price controls in the markets and shops, democratic administrative reorganization and the setting up of cooperative farming projects, shops and mills along with a national system of schools, clinics and hospitals has won the EPLF broad mass support.

The short-term EPLF goal has been to win the war for independence. But, in the words of the front's political manual, "If you fight against imperialism as a united people, led by the workers, you step toward socialism."

The ELF, on the other hand, while putting forward a similar political program has in practice emphasized the need to win a military victory over Ethiopia before proceeding with extensive social or economic changes.

ELF insistence on a rapid and complete merger of the two leaderships without struggling through deeper political differences has blocked unity between the two fronts since the initial division of the movement in 1970. In recent years, several abortive announcements of intent to unify were never followed through.

"We were strongly against the complete merger that the ELF wanted," said EPLF's Emias in Rome this week, "but this agreement in very different. We now have an agreement based on general political principles which are very progressive," Ermias pointed out.

The current accord recognizes unity on the following points:

(1) Full independence for Eritrea; (2) opposition to all forces which intervene against the Eritrean struggle; (3) the safeguarding of the democratic rights of the Eritrean people, and (4) the establishment of good relations with all progressive forces in the world.

"We needed this kind of agreement, and we were struggling to get it for a long time," Ermias added. "It is a great advance for us and for the whole Eritrean people."

A further component of the ELF-EPLE agreement is a call to the small right-wing splinter group known as the "ELF-PLF" to dissolve itself within 30 days or be crushed.

The achievement of unity inside Eritrea has been paralleled by rumblings of opposition to Ethiopia's refusal to enter into negotiations with the Eritreans from within circles once thought to be solidly behind Ethiopia's uncompromising military leadership.

Representatives of the EPLF this week traveled to the Malagasy Republic, Mozambique and Algeria to present their case. Unconfirmed rumors also suggested the presence of Eritrean delegations in Tanzania, China and even Cuba, although EPLF's Ermias Debessai denied that such meetings had yet taken place.

"We are touring East Africa to inform the frontline countries of current developments in our movement," said Ermias.

According to a correspondent for the British Observer, Algeria and Sudan have been playing a leading role in the effort to achieve a negotiated, rather than military, solution. In an April 30 report Robert Stephens states that "in the conflict in the Horn of Africa, Algeria was initially inclinced to back Ethiopia, but it consideres the Eritrean issue quite different from that of the Ogaden."

A visit to Cuba by Ethiopian leader Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam aimed at getting a full Cuban commitment to join the military campaign, in Eritrea meanwhile appeared to fall short of success. Leaders of the EPLE and the ELP have at the same time continued to express confidence in their people's ability to withstand the impending Ethiopian offensive.

Against such a backdrop, the likelihood of moves to open negotiations has improved slightly, but most observers believe the results of the next two months of fighting in Eritrea will prove most decisive in bringing the two sides to the conference table.

Campus Speaks

Campus Speaks:
What actions should be taken against the increased violence against women on campus?

Donna Epps: I think that stepped up security measures should be taken all over campus, especially in the residential areas. Personally I have stopped going out at night because of what has happened. We should have more bus service on campus during the weekend because that's when most of the incidents have taken place. Among third world people, we should make an effort to get to know each other so as to call and insure one anothers safety when we have to go out at night.

Todd Bausley: There should be some type of system where males can escort females and check on them to ensure their safety.

Carol Williams: Women have to do something about it themselves. They can't depend upon the campus police. Women should not travel alone. As far as the university goes, they should make the campus police patrol the major roads in the residential areas. The only time the police are ever around is when there is some kind of distrurbance.

Mr. "B": I think women should carry some type of weapon for protection or mace because the incidents are too unpredictable. I think they should incorporate a service like the one at Brown University where women are taken to various places by a taxi.

Val Scott: Women should never walk alone. We should always have another woman or male to walk with. Some type of escort service that will be reliable should be developed.

Debbie McCulloch: I guess I would like to see more communication among women about the problem areas are on campus. Descriptions of people known as problem people should be given. More police protection too, though I don't think thats the answer. Perhaps the answer would be for women to fight back and stay together. Women shouldn't depend on men but, rather they should depend on themselves.

Eric Nelson: Police patrol should be increased and police escort for women late at night should be developed. Its a real problem though and something should definitely be done.

The U.S. Role in South Africa's Military Build-up

The following article is a slightly-edited version of testimony presented before the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee, July 24, 1975 at hearings on southern Africa sponsored by the Sub-committee on Africa, and reprinted in SOUTHERN AFRICA magazine. Ms. Davis is Research Director of The Africa Fund [associated with the American Committee on Africa].

Hunting Reality — the myth of current change

One of the major problems for anyone trying to understand United States South Africa policy and relationships is the long established tradition of double talking. To find the truth it is necessary to penetrate behind the coded language and recognize a series of myths which cloak a far more unpleasant reality.

The primary myth perpetuated by South Africa is that it is changing. Critics who call for radical international responses to South African racial oppression and exploitation have for many years been met by the "but things are changing" argument. The initial myth-maker is of course South Africa... but the device is most useful because it is so eagerly seized upon by powerful forces such as the United States government, seeking to justify a policy of perpetual tolerance for what is in fact, for those who suffer under it, an intolerable situation. Secretary Newsom articulated such a view very precisely in a 1971 speech:

> "We believe change will come in southern Africa. Economic and demographic pressures make this inevitable. In South Africa itself there is a lessening of rigidity. Change is a central theme of discussion; there is psychological and intellectual ferment within the Afrikaner community; there have been isolated instances of acceptance of multi-racial activities; there is a growing realism among businessmen that Africans are important to them as skilled workers and as a market. They are beginning to focus on the need for improvement of working conditions for non-whites. We cannot expect change to come quickly or easily. Our hope is that it will come peacefully."

The system has indeed shown itself capable of considerable flexibility in the past decade. Ten years ago Prime Minister Verwoerd was proud to think of himself as a man of granite. Today's pragmatic South African leaders recognize that building in rock does not meet the needs of a rapidly expanding industrial economy.

At issue is not whether some changes are occurring both inside South Africa, and in that country's attitudes to Africa and the world. The argument revolves around the nature and purpose of those changes and at this core level that there seems to be dangerous confusion. Perhaps it would be useful to re-state, at this point, the basic situation that calls for change.

The 'problem' in South Africa is that of the dispossession of a majority black population and the total unsurpation of all economic, political and social power by a white minority. The 'problem' is a system — the apartheid system — deliberately designed to use blacks for the creation of wealth and then guarantee the exclusive benefits of that wealth to the whites. The primary purpose of the whole network of South African law and administration is the protection of this system, which produces for the whites, who benefit from it, the highest average standard of living in the world and for the blacks, who suffer under it, a life of perpetual poverty, violence and humiliation.

The changes that are presently being made are not intended to alter the pyramidal structure in which blacks, the majority, stand always at the bottom, supporting the whole society on their backs. They are designed to help white South Africa deal with internal pressures generated by continued economic expansion.

The increasing sophistication of the economy has for instance shifted the nature of the demand for labor — and so there are announcements that black workers are to be upgraded — what this means is that the pool of unskilled black labor is no longer useful and is to be replaced by a pool of semi-skilled black labor. The landless, voteless, rightless non-person status of the Blacks remains unchanged. Changing labor demands may even bring in their wake some measure of unionization and more permanent urbanization — but the rate and direction of all such changes will be controlled by the whites — who will move cautiously to avoid generating dangerously irreversible trends. There are daily reminders of the truth in the South African press. The Cape Times of June 13 reports Deputy Minister of Bantu Education, Mr. T.N.H. Janson as saying, "The Government would train the Blacks, but it would not train them to be destroyers of the way of life in South Africa... one thing that was sure was that nobody wanted a recurrence of an Angola or Mozambique in South Africa."

Internal economic development has brought with it also a need for change in relationships to the world outside. South Africa now seeks external markets for its manufactured goods as well as for the vast stream of raw materials which still continue to flow to major industrial countries, making it a valuable member of the "Western World." The rational place to find such markets is close by, in Africa.

Foreign Policy — a design to protect apartheid's future

This thrust coincides with a second important set of South African priorities which devolve on its politico-strategic requirements. For the last ten years South Africa has been carefully developing a four-pronged external policy designed to consolidate and protect its stability.

While working hard to build powerful friendships in the world South Africa has also sought to achieve three ends in Africa: Firstly, the extension of almost complete control over the so-called captive states — e.g. Lesotho, Swaziland. Secondly, neutralization of the independent African States, using where possible, the economic inducements associated with what was once Dialogue and is now Detente. (Where neutralization could not be achieved in a 'friendly' manner South Africa was prepared to use the tougher techniques of economic strangulation and political subversion.) Thirdly, there was the attempt to construct a solid Southern Bloc, involving a close-knit alliance with Portugal and Rhodesia. In this way South Africa attempted to ring itself with a series of buffer states, hoping that the combination of a ruthlessly efficient internal security police and border buffers would prevent successful black organization or guerrilla incursion.

Now the buffer states are vanishing rapidly. Indeed Mozambique is not just a country with an independent black government, but one with a very directed political philosophy which is likely soon to be translated into a living model of an alternative society.

In the face of such far reaching upheavals South Africa has already shown signs of considerable re-thinking. It seems clear that the coming period will see attempts to win by political and economic activity what can not be won militarily. Hence the pressure on Rhodesia's Ian Smith to move towards some sort of 'settlement'; hence the generally very 'correct' attitude towards the new Mozambique, with great restraint placed on those who might normally have been expected to fulminate about black savages, red perils and the need for intervention; hence also the tremendous drive towards Detente in Africa.

At the same time, looking realistically into the future South Africa has also embarked on a crash program to double and re-double its military strength, and to cement its international alliances.

In fact this dual response is more closely interconnected than might first appear. In attempting to project a new image of increasing reasonableness and flexibility, coupled with a constant emphasis on its potential role as a bulwark against communism, South Africa seeks to provide the major powers of Europe and America with greater incentives (and justification) for a continued policy of overt where possible, covert where necessary, alliances.

South Africa's Military Build-up — who are the enemies?

South Africa has doubled the size of its direct military budget in two years, expenditure rising dramatically from R470m ($658m) in 1973-4 to R700m ($980m) in 74-75 and a planned R948m ($1,327m) for 75-76. In fact a decision was made in 1974 to complete the ten-year plan in five years. This expenditure now represents something of the order of 18% of the entire budget, 3.7% of GNP and an estimated per capita expenditure of $28, according to P.W. Botha, Minister of Defense.

Minister Botha's arithmetic seems alarmingly weak. Total South African population in 1974 was just under 25 million; this would mean a per capita expenditure of R37.90 ($53.00). In fact, a far more realistic way of looking at this expenditure is in terms of white per capita expenditure, because this money is obviously being spent to defend a privileged white society against its black members. On that basis per capita expenditure reaches R237.00 ($331.80) — a figure higher than that for the United States during the Vietnam years.

According to the Defence White Paper tabled in Parliament in March 1975, the main reasons for the increase in expenditure are the need to counter all forms of insurgency and to maintain "a credible and balanced conventional force." Land forces are to be re-organized into a counter-insurgency force and a conventional force, and the Air Force is to be similarly restructured. The budget reflects this pattern, indicating particularly big jumps in expenditure on arms for land defense.

South Africa is not only spending much more on its defense, but is also pushing very hard to develop self-sufficiency in the production of weapons, aircraft and ships. Using much imported technology, via licensing arrangements and specialized personnel, as well as internal "know-how", the South Africans now claim to be practically self-sufficient in the production of ammunition and rifles. Aircraft, armored personnel carriers and radio equipment are all being made internally, and Minister Botha recently announced that South Africa is to begin building tanks, and six corvettes for the navy. This self sufficiency, which gives South Africa considerable independence and a great tactical advantage, has been deliberately fostered via the ten year old Armaments Board and the state-controlled Corporation — Armscor — which is responsible for over-seeing the production of all military equipment. South Africa has long sought to make itself relatively safe against the consequences of possible international actions such as an effective arms embargo, and has apparently succeeded to some extent.

South Africa's Defense Philosophy

It seems relevant to speculate at this juncture on the purpose of this continuing escalation of military might. South Africa already has a military force vastly superior to the combined force of most Sub-Saharan Africa. (The Military Balance 1974-1975, published by The International Institute for Strategic Studies, London).

According to the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute's handbook for 1974, South Africa is the only country in Africa to have an indigenously designed missile system. The system is described as being air to air, with a solid propellant power plant and high explosive war head. The design was begun in 1966 and production began in 1972. According to the same source, South Africa is also the only country in Africa which manufactures, under license, foreign designed major weapons, including both aircraft and armored vehicles.

Under license from Italy, South Africa produces the MB-326 M (Impala) trainer, a light strike aircraft, jet powered, with a speed of 800 km-hr; production was begun in 1967, the craft is 70% indigenous manufacture and by 1973 South Africa had 200 of these planes. A second license obtained from Italy in 1973 will enable South Africa first to assemble and later produce the light strike, jet powered MB-326 K, with a speed of 890 km-hr; production is reported to have begun in 1974. Licenses have also been obtained from France for the assembly and subsequent manufacture of the jet powered Mirage F1 fighters, with initial plans for a run of 100, and the SA 330 Puma utility helicopter, of which 20 had been produced by 1973.

There are other significant areas in which South Africa is building a military capacity that seems either greatly in excess of any African threat, or totally irrelevant to countering such a threat. The increasing South African interest in nuclear development is one such area, other striking examples include the development of a complex communications center at Silvermine, in the Cape — designed to maintain surveillance of a vast area stretching from the Indian Ocean to the southern Atlantic — and finally the expansion of facilities and construction of a submarine base at Simonstown, decided on despite the recent cancellation of the U.K. agreement involving the use of that port.

South African military strategy is in fact aimed at two fronts — an internal and an external one. Internally and on its borders the South African government is facing an increasingly threatening situation. Thus much military expenditure is designed to enable greater internal control and South Africa is concentrating on developing counter-insurgency capabilities very rapidly. There are numerous reports of regular 'COIN' (counter-insurgency) practice operations, and as has already been indicated there is growing expenditure on equipment suitable for such operations — armored cars, light aircraft, helicopters, etc. Growing pressure from SWAPO, the Namibian liberation movement has forced South Africa to replace the police that were defending the Caprivi strip with army units. A special volunteer corp is being established to take over the increasingly serious task of guarding the borders — and such border units will be paid special bonuses!

It seems likely that South Africa sees independent Africa as threatening primarily in this context — i.e. insofar as it provides a base for "internal disorder". It is also probably true that South Africa fears a peasant rebellion in Pondoland more than it does a Chinese or Russian invasion.

Cape Town — a new Gilbralter?

If it is not to be used for repelling an 'All African Army or Liberation' of Russian invaders, what then is the purpose of the rest of South Africa's military capacity? It is at this point that we see the coalescence of South African and Western interests — and must pause for a moment to consider a second myth.

The official U.S. position has long been that it "abhors apartheid" and has no common military or other interests with the white minority regime. In fact of course the reality has been very different. The wide publication last year of the NSSM 39 document (See Southern Africa, February, 1975) served only to confirm the observations of those who had warned that the U.S. was in fact closely linked economically, politically, and strategically to the white racists and colonialists in Southern Africa.

The South Africans themselves have used their knowledge and understanding of Western strategy to push for alliances, and are now concentrating heavily on their potentially crucial role as defender of the gateway to the Indian Ocean, and watchdog of the Southern Atlantic.

They have been quick to recognize the implications of America's Vietnam experience, realizing that U.S. strategic planners will have to rely on building strong regional alliances for the maintenance of U.S. interests, rather than on direct intervention. In particular South Africa seems eager to capitalize on U.S. interest in the Indian Ocean, seeing the Pentagon eagerness to fortify Diego Gracia as a hopeful sign for future joint working arrangements.

In this context the current direction of U.S. policy, particulary as it relates to military linkages and the arms embargo, is cause for considerable alarm.

NATO and South Africa

In May 1975 the South African press reported the eruption of a storm in the NATO defense and planning committee over American Defense Secretary Schlesinger's proposal that a major monitoring installation be established in South Africa for NATO intelligence purposes. The proposal that such an installation be used to monitor all Soviet fleet movements in the Indian Ocean met with a violent reaction from the Dutch Defense Minister, who threatened to pull Holland out of NATO if there was any cooperation with the South African Government.

Already in 1974 work done by Sean Gervasi and others had made it clear that the Defense Planning Committee of NATO had issued a secret instruction in June 1973 to the Supreme Allied Command, Atlantic (SACLANT) to undertake contingency planning for the defense of the southern African region and the Indian Ocean, although this was outside the NATO area. The justification for such a decision was the need to protect the southern entrance to the Persian Gulf, and the sea routes used by the oil tankers serving

Keeping the lid on

The government of President Anwar el-Sadat, disappointed in its dramatic initiative for peace with Israel, is managing to keep the potential cauldron of domestic discontent from boiling over with the help of Saudi money and with reminders to the politically active that there are strict limits to dissent.

Over $2 billion in aid from Saudi Arabia and other Gulf oil states has sustained the Egyptian balance of payments and prevented a recurrence of the January 1977 uprising that followed a government move to cut subsidies for food prices.

The International Monetary Fund and other Egyptian creditors, which pressed for the tough measures, have been pacified by the flow of Saudi funds and an increase in Egyptian exports.

Agricultural output, however, increased only 3% from 1976 to 1977, and prices of uncontrolled food products, such as vegetables and fruit, have soared this spring. For basic commodities, Egypt's minister of industry pledged last month, prices will be held down, in spite of the $700 million annual cost to the government.

Meanwhile, Sadat's political "liberalization" is being put to the test by a variety of critics. Headlines last week spotlighted the arrest of some 20 people charged with being part of an international terrorist group planning attacks on Egypt. And, a month earlier, a popular poet and a parliamentarian each suffered the results of too much outspokenness.

On March 25, Ahmed Fouad Negm, poet and songwriter for singer Sheikh Inam, was sentenced to a year in prison with hard labor, for having shown disrespect for the authorities in one of his songs. Negm, who was arrested late last year along with hundreds of other opponents of Sadat's policies, combines traditional and colloquial style in his poems with a radical critique of Egyptian society. In 1977, he spent eight months in prison, for alleged inspiration of the January food protests. This time he was charged with insulting the military, and was tried in a military court.

Sheikh Achour, a legislative deputy of the New Wafd party, was expelled from the Assembly for calling it a "puppet theater" during debate. Egypt has three officially sponsored parties, but the Wafd, newly formed in February, has won away the allegiance of 28 Assembly members.

The New Wafd is a revival of the nationalist party dominant before the days of Nasser, and it is picking up support among many opponents of Sadat. The party calls for expanding Sadat's "open door" policies toward foreign investment and private enterprise, as well as limitations on presidential power and on the state sector in general.

U.S. retains authority

The U.S. reached a tentative agreement April 9 with officials of the Pacific Trust Territory, Micronesia, for an independence which grants the U.S. "full authority and responsibility for security and defense matters" for 15 years. The final agreement may be signed this year, followed by a UN-supervised plebiscite in 1981.

The tentative agreement, signed in Hilo, Hawaii, provides that the arrangement can be reversed at any time by either side. It covers the two archipelagoes of the Caroline and Marshall Islands with a population of about 120,000. The third archipelago, the Mariana Islands, is on the way to becoming a U.S. commonwealth—the same official status as Puerto Rico—following a vote by the Marianas people in 1975 and approval by the U.S. Senate in 1976.

The Micronesia Trust Territory, taken from Japan by the U.S. after World War 2, consists of over 2000 islands, spanning an area of about 3 million square miles. They lie some 1500 miles east of the Philippines. Japan had taken control of Micronesia after World War 1. Before the war, the islands had belonged to imperial Germany, which had in turn wrenched them from Spain.

Under the UN trusteeship, the islands were designated a "strategic trust" where military bases were permitted. The U.S. has since used the Bikini and Eniwetok islands as nuclear test sites. They were then opened for human habitation in 1976.

The independence negotiations started in 1967 when the Micronesian Congress requested self-governing status in free association with the U.S., or full independence if that was denied. The U.S. refused self-government and proposed instead a commonwealth which was rejected by the islands' congress in 1970. However, five years later, the Marianas separately voted for a commonwealth.

Peasants confront junta

Salvadorean peasants and church groups have reported a series of confrontations between government and opposition forces.

The unrest coincides with a general upsurge in Central America. And in early April, El Salvadorean head Gen. Carlos Romero and Nicaraguan President Anastasio Somoza met to discuss joint strategy for putting down the domestic disturbances. Somoza reportedly promised to send military specialists to El Salvador.

The meeting of the two dictators follows clashes in El Salvador at the end of March. At least 100 people were reportedly killed and thousands left homeless in fighting between peasants and government troops in Cuzcatlan Province, near the capital.

Fighting centered around San Pedro Perulupan, where the government accused church-supported peasant and left groups of plotting an uprising. Government accounts also claimed that national guard and police forces moved in to carry out a "clean-up operation" of leftists in the area, aided by the semi-official paramilitary group ORDEN (National Democratic Organization).

Church and peasant sources, however, described a 2-week military occupation of the zone, resulting in killings, destruction of crops and atrocities against the inhabitants. The Red Cross reported that 2000 peasants had fled, afraid to return to their homes.

Conditions for the people have worsened and conflict between left and right forces has increased steadily since Gen. Romero appointed himself President in February 1977. Five families continue to own 25% of the land, while the number of landless families has jumped 400% in 10 years. In November, the government-controlled Assembly banned strikes, demonstrations and any criticism of the government or the land-owning oligarchy.

The U.S. Role in South Africa's Military Build Up Continued

European and American ports. The secret plans reportedly concentrated on the development of air-naval task forces which would operate in the Indian Ocean and around the Cape and would stand ready to assist South Africa in case of need.

Most recently in June 1975, the British Anti-Apartheid Movement released information alleging that several NATO members including the United States, the United Kingdom, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Holland and Denmark had been engaged in the planning and development of Project Advokaat, a naval surveillance system established by South Africa at Silvermine, which allows South Africa to keep under surveillance an area stretching from South America to Bangladesh. According to the Anti-Apartheid Movement, Advokaat has permanent channels linking it in with the United Kingdom admiralty and the United States Navy. The Anti-Apartheid Movement released documents showing that orders for parts of the system had been placed with companies in all the above mentioned countries, including the United States. Apart from any implications relating to NATO's role in this matter, it seems to us that the provision of electronic equipment for such a military communications system is a clear violation of the arms embargo. Yet apparently at least ten United States firms have been allowed to supply highly specialized devices to this project. The names of some of the Corporations involved in supplying equipment for Advokaat from the United States are now known.

A brief reference to a few of the other many indications of a growing American network of sympathetic contacts and linkages with the minority power in South Africa should be made. There have been high ranking South African military and Government leaders visiting Washington with increasing frequency. 1975 has seen both Democratic and Republican Congressmen, (several perhaps "co-incidentally" on the House Armed Service Committee) visiting South Africa, its Simonstown naval base, Silvermine Communications Center and Atlas Aircraft Corporation. Melvyn Laird, former United States Secretary of Defense, also went to South Africa this year. One might even play with other, more sinister connections — such as the growing collaboration between the United States, Iran and South Africa.

U.S. Planes in South African Skies

Finally, it is important to be aware of what is probably the simplest — and perhaps also the most disturbing — evidence of the long range direction of United States policy in South Africa. Despite all assurances to the contrary the United States has allowed a situation to develop in which American aircraft, supplied to South Africa after the imposition of the 1963 embargo, are being used by the military for purposes that cannot, by any stretch of the most bureaucratic imagination, be described as non-military.

In 1971 ACOA testimony before the House Subcommittee on Africa on the question of the arms embargo indicated that one of the major items of trade between South Africa and the US was an increasing number of light aircraft. Commenting on such sales in that year Secretary Newsom explained US policy as follows:

> "There has been no change in the arms embargo which we have maintained since 1963 on the sale of military equipment to South Africa.... and which, among other things, precludes the sale of any aircraft to South Africa for military purposes, including military training and reconnaissance. However, normal trade with South Africa in civilian-type goods for non-military purposes continues, and we are prepared to consider licensing for VIP transport purposes limited numbers of small un-armed executive civilian-type aircraft which will not strengthen South Africa's military or internal security capacity."

ACOA pointed out then that such sales of "civilian" aircraft to South Africa showed the fallacy of the licensing system under which aircraft are sold for "non-military purposes." This is little more than a polite legal fiction; any aircraft can be easily converted for military use and in South Africa the existence of a para-military group such as the Air Commandos makes it possible for the military to use civilian aircraft while maintaining the legal fiction.

The Air Commandos

The all white Air Commandos, established in 1964, can best be described as a flying militia, made of volunteers using their own planes. These men are not members of the regular military forces but are paid by the government when they fly in times of emergency or war. The establishment of 12 squadrons was authorized in 1964. The Commandos attend an annual two-week training camp, during which all their expenses are paid by the government. Their training entails radio co-operation with army and mobile police striking forces, reconnaissance, practice in bombing and general cooperation in maintaining the internal security of both South Africa and South West Africa. Many of these Commando members fly U.S. light planes, such as Pipers and Cessnas. Thus, even if the licensing procedures were adhered to technically in the sense that no planes were sold to the military, such planes would become available to the military, and most important of all, form part of the "security planning" of the government. Recent reports from various South African sources, including the military journal, Paratus, indicate that the South Africans are now concentrating very seriously on training their military forces to cope with what they term "anti-insurgent" operations so that the importance of the Commando role is increasing. One such recent operation, held In the Kwa Zulu Bantustan in 1974 went on for eight days, involving the Army, Air Force, Navy and Police. The exercise covered the following aspects of counter-insurgency operations.

Integration of Citizen Force, Commando, SAAF.

SA Navy and SA Police elements in operations. Intelligence processing at unit and group HQ level.

Co-operation with local authorities and other departments. At unit level:

1. Employment of armored cars.
2. Employment of light fixed wing aircraft.
3. Road movement.
4. Search and destroy operations.
5. Patrolling, road blocks, ambushes, counter penetration operations along a coastline. Follow-up operations.

According to the Paratus report the air arm was provided by a squadron of Citizen Force volunteer pilots with their own aircraft. They were used for visual recce, contact recce, evaluation of casualties, communication flights and special operations.

It is now increasingly clear that there have been even more serious erosions in the formal arms embargo, and that both light aircraft such as Cessnas and heavy transport planes, such as the Lockheed Hercules C 130 have been provided directly to the South African Government for military use, long after the supposed imposition of an embargo in 1963. According to the International Institute for Strategic Airforce. Cessnas are used in a squadron assigned to the army, and in both the Reserve squadrons and the Air Commando squadrons.

These aircraft play a direct military role in operations quite openly described by the South Africans in their publications. Thus, in an article depicting the role of Aircraft on the Border, Paratus refers to both to the usefulness of the C 130s, and to the invaluable role played by the Cessna, commenting that "without these aircraft, the helicopter, Cessna and Dakota, problems of supplies and communication would be insurmountable." Among the tasks performed by these planes are:

> "Reconnaissance: Low-level visual reconnaissance with a pilot and observer is done with the Cessna because of its manoeuverability and low fuel consumption. These small aircraft keep the one thousand mile border under constant surveillance."
> "Aerial observation post: Cessnas can be used to control ground fire onto specific targets and to report subsequent enemy movement."

Thus US aircraft are being built into South Africa's system of military repression in the most direct way possible. It is these aircraft that will be in the forefront of the inevitably bloody suppression of any Black attempt to oppose continued white minority rule. It should be remembered that in South Africa a terrorist is defined, by law, as anyone who attempts to embarrass the affairs of state. Therefore, even peaceful demonstrators or striking workers might find themselves the targets of these US built airplanes, and it is certain that in any development of a liberation war such as that just ended in Mozambique, American planes would be used to search out and destroy African freedom fighters.

NAMIBIA: U.N. BACKS SWAPO

Windhoek demonstrators support the South-West Africa People's Organization.

Pretoria's latest ploy Namibia isn't working.

The UN General Assembly voted this week to stand with the Namibian people and the SWAPO liberation forces in pressing for genuine independence in the South African-occupied territory.

The Assembly demanded May 3 that the UN Security Council impose mandatory sanctions against South Africa — action vetoed last fall by the Western powers, including the U.S. The 80-0 vote (with most Western capitalist states abstaining) was a direct exposure of South African Prime Minister John Vorster's sudden "acceptance" of the Western powers' Namibia settlement plan.

The plan itself, and particularly the version of it Vorster says he will agree to, is built on a foundation meant to guarantee that mineral-rich, strategically placed Namibia will be ripe for imperialist picking for years to come. During the current Special General Assembly Session on Namibia, country after country rose to denounce aspects of the "big five" plan — authored by the U.S., Britain, France, West Germany and Canada — that render it unacceptable to SWAPO.

SWAPO president Sam Nujoma also twice addressed the Assembly with a well-documented and firm refutation of the Western media blitz of the past two weeks portraying the liberation movement as "intransigent" in the face of Vorster's "statesmanship." Nujoma spelled out in considerable detail SWAPO's settlement proposals, stressing that they constitute the minimal guarantees SWAPO could accept without committing "the crime of national suicide."

The Western powers had first tried to derail the special Assembly session altogether, by pressing the Security Council to meet first, with the plan formulated by the five as the basic agenda item. Such a move would have violated negotiating ground rules established with SWAPO stipulating that only a settlement plan agreeable to both sides would be brought before the Council for ratification.

When the diversionary maneuver failed, the dramatic Vorster acceptance was unveiled on April 25. The "big five" have not yet acknowledged what Vorster and informed leaks in the Western press say is so: that the apartheid leader was given off-the-record "assurances" that would further gut any semblance of Namibian independence.

"We are certainly interested to know what these assurances and clarifications are," Nujoma told the UN body. Reportedly, they include Western agreement that an "independent" Namibian gove.nment could, without international interference, invite South African troops back into the country. And the Namibian puppet figures leading the Pretoria-sponsored Democratic Turnhalle Alliance have already stated they would proffer the invitation.

South Africa meanwhile has been creating what it considers optimum conditions for elections in Namibia by fomenting tribal antagonisms and brutally cracking down on SWAPO leaders and supporters. The "neutral" administrator general Pretoria assigned to Namibia, Judge Marthinus Steyn, assumed emergency powers April 18, and has arrested 31 SWAPO leaders, including four members of the movement's central committee. Hundreds of SWAPO members have been killed or seriously wounded in the ostensibly tribal fighting, Nujoma reported and in each incident, only pro-SWAPO Namibians have been detained.

At the same time, the SWAPO leader told the UN that SWAPO has "gathered irrefutable evidence through our own sources inside Namibia and from the combatants in the People's Liberation Army of Namibia of extensive enemy military build-up and activities in Namibia." But these racist moves have simultaneously strengthened international support for SWAPO's settlement proposals, which would provide an indusputably fair context for elections leading to independence.

SWAPO'S 10-POINT PLAN

In summary, SWAPO has placed a 10-point plan on the table, backed up by this week's renewed General Assembly call for sweeping economic sanctions against Pretoria. The 10 points are:

- SWAPO will sign a ceasefire when all UN-mandated conditions for "free, fair and democratic elections" have been agreed upon.
- The UN presence during the transition period must include at least 1000 civilians and a 5000-member military peacekeeping force, all under the sole authority of the UN official in charge. This is to insure that the UN, and not Pretoria, will administer the elections.
- The UN-appointed special representative's authority must supersede that of the highest South African official in Namibia. And the job of the Pretoria official should involve "among other things, the handing over of Namibia's files, treasury and other public property."
- The UN special representative must insure the release of all political prisoners within two weeks.
- SWAPO forces will submit to "confinement, surveillance and monitoring" by the UN force.
- Of the 50,000 South African troops now occupying Namibia, all but 1500 must be withdrawn within three months after the ceasefire.
- These 1500 soldiers must be confined to a base in southern Namibia, near the South African border during the transition period. They are to be withdrawn into South Africa within one week after the certification of election results.
- The South African troop withdrawal, with the exception of the remaining 1500, must include the dismantling of the racist security apparatus, including "bantustan tribal authorities, security forces, citizen forces, tribal armies, commandos and shooting clubs."
- A disarmed South African police force will be under the operational control of the UN special representative.
- "Namibia's territorial integrity and national unity, including Walvis Bay, is inviolable and non-negotiable. Therefore, our concession that a so-called token force of 1500 South African soldiers could remain in Namibia during the transitional period includes all South African troops presently stationed at Walvis Bay and its environs."

With the mask of Pretoria's "concession" torn off before the world body, the SWAPO president urged the Western powers to continue the negotiation process.

At the same time, Nujoma told the General Assembly, "I should like to reaffirm that so long as racist South Africa continues to entrench and perpetuate its colonial military occupation, and so long as the plundering and exploitation of our natural and human resources continue, for so long will SWAPO persist in the intensification of the armed struggle. We are confident that our victory in this is certain."

Mozambique Cabinet Changes

The first major cabinet reshuffle in the government of Mozambique was announced by President Samora Machel last week. The cabinet changes and the new ministries established are mostly in the area of economic planning, trade and industry.

Two new ministries for external and internal trade have been created while the Ministry of Industry and Trade is subdivided into departments of industry and energy, internal and external trade. The Ministry of Planning and Economic Development, headed by Vice President Marcelino dos Santos, is to become the National Commission of the Plan, with central planning as its main responsibility.

The reshuffle, according to a government statement, is to reinforce the state's economic organs and enhance the realization of production targets in industry and mining. The fishing industry, a major foreign exchange earner, will be headed by a state secretary with a seat in the ruling Council of Ministers.

While four provincial governors have been replaced to "reinforce the defense of public order and repression of crime," there were no dismissals or demotions in the Council of Ministers. The changes come at a time when devastating floods in the northern provinces and incessant Rhodesian military aggression have burdened the country's economy.

Mozambique's closure of the Rhodesian rail line to the ports of Beira and Maputo two years ago in solidarity with the Zimbabwean liberation struggle has cut off one source of the country's income. Last year, Mozambique had a trade deficit of about $280 million, and the reshuffle, aimed at streamlining economic planning and management, is expected to aid growth and development.

Chile attempts to liberalize image

by JUDY BUTLER

A flurry of concessions to "liberalize" the repressive conditions in Chile have been announced by Gen. Augusto Pinochet during April 8 earning him the official praise of the U.S. State Department.

Pinochet's announcements included an end to the 5-year state of siege, the early release of some 220 prisoners convicted of political crimes, the selection of a new cabinet in which the majority of ministers are civilians, the formulation of a new constitution to be published at the end of 1978 and finally, what Pinochet referred to as an "amnesty" for political prisoners and exiles.

During this same period liberals within the U.S. administration have confidently predicted that Pinochet is on his way out. "His days are numbered," according to one State Department source. But last week department spokesman Tom Reston referred to Pinochet's recent announcements as "a positive contribution by the government of Chile to improvement of the human rights situation in that country." Such contradictory statements are indicative of the divisions within the State Department over the administration's "human rights policy." The debate led to the departure of Terence Todman, Assistant Secretary for Latin America, early this month, reportedly because of his uncritical support of repressive Latin American regimes. It has also included divisions over Pinochet himself.

Pinochet's new measures, while welcome, are no more than a concession made to undercut his critics and buy time. The "state of emergency" which replaces the "state of siege" restricts somewhat the absolute powers of the executive. For example, detainees can only be legally held five days without due process instead of indefinitely.

INTIMIDATION REMAINS

However, unacknowledged detention for five days is long enough to maintain a high level of intimidation among the general population. And according to the Washington Post, the National Information Center (CNI) — the new name for DINA, the hated secret police organization which answered directly to Pinochet — "has been operating in much the same way as its predecessor, albeit less extensively."

Under the new state of emergency, all political parties are still outlawed, and any form of political activity; gathering and distribution of propaganda; workers' strikes; union elections; travel at night other than on foot.

Some 112 political prisoners released early from their sentences by Pinochet were sent into exile two weeks ago. According to one report, one group of prisoners exited singing the Internationale. The following week Pinochet announced his general amnesty.

The general amnesty applies to 109 "political detainees" — prisoners held without trial under the state of siege provisions in effect the past four and a half years — although early last year, Pinochet released what he said at the time was the last detainee. Included in the amnesty are those imprisoned before the coup took place, according to one report. This would mean the release of a group of sailors from Valparaiso who actively opposed the intentions of procoup naval officers.

Not included in this amnesty are "common criminals," a category used increasingly the past two years to lower the number of acknowledged political prisoners. Exiles eligible to return to Chile — about 1500, according to one source — will have to sign a declaration agreeing to refrain from any political activity.

The cabinet reshuffle — an increasingly frequent occurrence in the Pinochet regime — added three more civilians to the 16-seat cabinet, so they now outnumber the military 11 to five. It is far from a liberalizing measure, however, and is designed to bolster Pinochet's control of the cabinet. It also removes from the limelight one of his chief critics within the army hierarchy — Gen. Herman Brady. Formerly defense minister, Brady is now in the nonpublic post of defense adviser to Pinochet.

Gen. Raul Benavides, loyal to Pinochet and formerly Interior Minister, will fill Brady's position, while Sergio Fernandez, also a Pinochet loyalist, will become Minister of the Interior, the first civilian to fill the post. Fernandez, who supervised the sham plebiscite in Chile last January, is expected to continue overseeing the step-by-step process now underway to institutionalize military control in Chile with a democratic facade.

In line with this strategy, although somewhat before schedule, Pinochet announced that a draft constitution would be released by December 31.

Pinochet's survival to date reflects both his support by the Chilean army chiefs of staff and the continuing paucity of alternatives acceptable to the army. Despite divisions within the Chilean ruling class over his rule, Pinochet has shown a remarkable ability to coopt or stonewall repeated demands for a more acceptable facade of democracy.

That the ruling-class split is to be reflected in a face-change in the junta itself is a definite possibility, but hard to predict with certainty.

U.S. Military Involvement In Southern Africa Conference

By CARLOS M. MORALES

AMHERST — U.S. Military involvement in Southern Africa was the topic addressed by the Assoc. of Concerned African scholars Friday night at 8:00 p.m. in Thompson 104. The speakers, addressing particular topics in which they specialize, are to collaborate on a book dealing with U.S. Military involvement in S. Africa which will be published in Amherst. Prof. Dovi Afesi of the UMass Afro-Am. Studies dept. introduced the various speakers and opened the session with the theme that set the stage for the speeches to follow.

"Oppression, dehumanization, brutalization and racism are all realities to the Black Man's way of life," Prof. Afesi stated in his opening comments, "and the media is just recently giving coverage to this area", he said.

Apartheid, the S.A. gov't.s publicly stated policy of oppressing and maintaining oppressed the Black majority, is aided and maintained by U.S. Military involvement and our very own native capitalists who directly fund and support Apartheid.

General Motors and Ford are selling automobiles and trucks to aid southern Africa police and Army, IBM is selling computers to the S.A. govt. and Mobil in Namibia, in direct violation of the oil embargo, is selling oil to the Rhodesian govt. Building corporate nuclear plants are G.E. and Westinghouse. Neva Seidman of Howard University stated these facts in her speech on Transnational Corporate Military Involvement.

Cynthia Enlow of Clark Univ. spoke on Mercenerization in Southern Africa, Sean Gevasi of the Namibia Committee, spoke on violations of the U.S. Arms embargo, Courtland Cox and John Southern spoke on Western Strategy and covert operations in S.A. Pol. Sci. Prof. Ronald Walters of Howard Univ. spoke on Nuclear Involvement in Southern Africa and Robert Sylvester, a lawyer and aid to congressman Colin Curtis, spoke about possibilities of Congressional Action to stop military intervention.

Prof. Ronald Walters stated "there is a 10 billion dollars investment by the U.S. in sales of nuclear weapons to Southern Africa, $450,00C was paid to the U.S. for Safari I, a nuclear reactor." South Africa accounts for one - third of the world supply of uranium and it is predicted that by 1982-4, S.A. will be producing 100 nuclear bombs per year.

Eric Prokosch, a staff member of the National Action-Research on the military Industrial complex, a project of the American Friends Service Committee, was the unscheduled speaker of the evening who provided some very enlightening facts. Mr. Prokosch along with Michael T. Klare, director of the Militarism & Disarmament Project of the Institute for Policy Studies, collaborated on stories published by a newspaper, The Sun (Balt. Md.), Nov. 22, 77 & Feb. 19, 78. The research compiled indicates the U.S. is heavily supplying aircraft to Southern Africa despite the U.N. Arms Embargo of Nov. 14, 1977. "The fact is that despite a 1963 executive order banning deliveries to South Africa of arms, ammunition, military vehicles and equipment, para-military gear, and spare parts for previously supplied weaponry, the U.S. continues to be one of S. A.'s leading arms suppliers." Lockheed, Cessna and Teledyne, all american companies are violators of the embargo who have directly or indirectly supplied Southern Africa with reconnisance, transport and fighter aircraft. The U.S. State Dept. which must approve sales of items on the U.S. States Munitions list, stated that a request must be submitted for sales of any aircraft on its list. None of the above companies put in such a request. The State Dept. has stated any such request would be turned down and if any sales have been made, they would be clandestine.

Robert Sylvester speaking on congressional action to stop military intervention summed up the Congress' power and influence to stop military intervention by stating, "the Congress is not capable of dealing with foreign policy," and that to end or stop nuclear sales requires "intervening at the proper point."

The question we must all ask ourselves is who do we turn to to affect change, and just what can we do to aid our brothers and sisters in their struggle for human rights.

At the conclusion of John Southern's speech on Western Covert Operations he added his personal note, "I feel that we are gathered together more to raise consciousness than to write a book and I only hope we are more successful in making people aware of the struggles taking place in Southern Africa than in compiling data for our book."

In closing the lectures given, Prof. Afesi thanked all 50 people in attendance for their "concern and interest" in attending and hearing the many problems facing this troubled African area. Prof. Afesi left the crowd on a note that sums up the desperation and dehumanization the 85% Black pop. face daily, quoting Prime Minister Ian Smith's public statement on Black's treatment "They (Blacks) work for us and they must not now or ever attain political or any other power." Professors Max Roach and Archie Shepp also sum up the Black experience in Southern Africa in a piece they jointly composed, South Africa, Godamm!

GRUPO MONCADA

By BILAL TARIQ ABDUL-HAQQ

On May 4, 1978 a spectacular group from Cuba marvelled the audience with contemporary Cuban thought which included Latin America, as well as the Caribbean.

The group consisted of eight people, all of which were masters of their own particular instruments. This was a Benefit Show to sponsor the Eleventh World Youth Festival which is to be held this summer in Cuba. There were songs that outlined the ideology of Cuba.

The show lasted three hours and the group was received with a standing ovation which, was accompanied by the audience and called for an encore.

We would sincerely like to thank all groups and organizations who made into a reality, the concept of bringing Grupo Moncada to the Student Union Ballroom (The People United will Never Be Divided).

Nigeria Student Strikes

Following nationwide clashes between the police and students, leaving at least eight people dead, the Nigerian government closed three major universities and banned the National Union of Nigerian Students (NUNS) April 21. The country's three major daily newspapers accused the police of brutality and excessive use of force.

At an emergency meeting in Calabar, NUNS had called for a student strike at all universities beginning April 17 to protest increases in fees for board and lodging. The students favored education for the masses and opposed the increased charges as elitist, according to the publication West Africa.

Despite a police ban on off-campus demonstrations, the students at the University of Lagos in the capital city attempted to stage a protest march to government headquarters in the Dodan Barracks April 18. The police cordoned off the campus, used tear gas to break up the demonstration and hauled off students for questioning.

Students at Benin University threatened an indefinite hunger strike and boycott of classes unless the governments National Universities Commission called off the price increases.

In an evening TV broadcast April 21, the education commissioner Col. Ahamdu Ali, accused the students of provoking the police and announced the ban on NUNS and university closings.

The Trips To The East

By JAMES LEWIS

The United States is sending vice-president Walter Mondale and National Security advosor Zbignew Brzezski to parts of Asia now for very important reasons. Mainland China has recently rejected the Soviet initiative for normalizing relations. The Soviets are concerned with China's immense man-power and they are concerned with all the efforts of China to create an international focusing of the Soviet Union in their roles in Africa, the European economic markets, and the potential nuclear threat.

Mondales' trip to Asia will include the Phillipines, Thailand, Indonesia, Australia, and New Zealand. His return to Washington May 10, Wednesday. National Security Advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski will visit China as an act to continue China-U.S. relations. China has shown a concern for Carter's lack of strengthen Nixon's friendly initiative.

The U.S. economic ties with Japan have been consistant. China is backing down from old rivalries with Japan and has offered to meet with Japan for military contracts and economic support. The population of Asia is 2,391,200,000 persons; thats in billions. This population represents 58.6 per cent of the world population. China maintains political and economic ties with everyone in Asia now, except with non-communist China. China also has ties with countries in Africa, who has only 423 million people but vast unexplored territorial potential.

About Brzenski going to China, the Boston Globe stated: "The secret order, say officials who saw it, was duly drafted during the week of Jan. 24, 1977, and sent on to the appropriate bureaucracies by National Security Advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski."

Apparently the plan must have been left over until now.

China has shown only hostility to the Soviets. There is much to back this up. Frederic Moritiz of the Christian Science Monitor did state from other sources "On the other hand, they (the Chinese) they have been telling European visitors for more than a year now that war with the Soviet Union is inevitable. On the other hand they (China) have been telling European visitors for more than a year now that the major Soviet military threat is against Western Europe, and not against China." This would pull more concern from the Soviets to support its western boarder. China and the Soviet Union share a 3,000 mile common border. There are 800,000 Soviets on one side, and 1,000,000 Chinese on the other.

China has also recently urged the United States to build the nutron bomb, and this would escalate the U.S.-Soviet buildup of arms. China also encourages the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, (NATO). The strengthing NATO would help encircle the Soviet Union, according to an analyst quoted by Moritz.

Meanwhile, China continues its efforts to learn the latest in military techniques and technology by exchanging delegations with countries such as Japan, Britain, France, and West Germany.

Harvard Students Press Southern Africa Support

Students and their supporters at Harvard University last week stepped up their demands that the school sell its holdings in corporations linked to racist South Africa.

The action at Harvard occurred as other opponents of South Africa's apartheid system staged demonstrations in Ann Arbor, Mich.; New York City; Swarthmore, Pa., and Exeter, N.H.

More than 3500 Harvard students and supporters marched in a torchlight parade through Cambridge April 27 in protest against a university policy statement on retaining its stockholdings. The march was preceded by an antiapartheid demonstration by 1500 students April 24, and was followed by an all-night vigil and an 8-hour blockade of the Harvard administration building by 300 students.

In the policy statement, the Harvard trustees refused to meet the students' demands, saying: "We oppose divestiture under normal circumstances.... because it is a relatively ineffectual means of pursuing ethical ends." The statement ended with a list of recommended actions for all U.S. companies in South Africa, including the establishment of "a generally acceptable living wage."

Three days later, more than 750 people rallied in Boston in another of a series of large local actions aimed at South Africa. The rally was called by a new regional coalition, the New England Committee on South Africa (NECSA).

Speakers included representatives from the African National Congress (ANC), the Pan Africanist Congress, the Boston Coalition for the Liberation of Southern Africa (BCLSA) and others.

ANC spokesman Mosundi Vundla called on the multinational crowd to continue its efforts to force banks and corporations to stop doing business in South Africa. He warned, however, that the growing pressure to end the racist Vorster regime would be met with attempts by the U.S. government to reach an illegal settlement favorable to U.S. imperialism. And he emphasized that: "The only concrete way to insure the liberation of South Africa is to support the liberation struggle now being waged."

COLUMBIA AND OTHER ACTIONS

At Columbia University in New York City, a May Day demonstration linking oppressive university policies at home with divestiture brought some 700 people onto the streets.

The protest began with a rally by a group of youngsters from a Free School threatened with eviction because of Columbia plans to build a dormitory on the site. It ended with an 8-hour sit-in by more than 275 students at the business school.

Organized by a broad coalition of groups, the demonstration emphasized Columbia's support of apartheid through its $80 million of stocks and bonds in corporations doing business in South Africa. And it linked such support to the university's racist housing policies in neighboring Harlem and its employment discrimination against women, third world and gay people.

In other action:

—Some 100 students joined a picketline and march through the dining hall at Swarthmore College in Pennsylvania. The protesters, organized by the Swarthmore Anti-Apartheid Committee, picketed the hall April 22 as members of the school's board of trustee met inside.

—Vice President Walter Mondale was interrupted four times in his 20-minute speech to the graduating class at the University of Michigan April 29 as sign-bearing students jeered him in protest against U.S. imperialism in South Africa.

—At Phillips Exeter Academy preparatory school in New Hampshire, 200 students staged a protest and demanded the school divest.

Attica Brother charged in Murder

by ABE WEISBURD

Former Attica Brother Eric Thompson, involved in a controversial Brooklyn, N.Y. shooting last month, pleaded not guilty April 19 to triple murder charges.

At the same time, people who know Thompson as a respected prison organizer and militant, were casting doubt on the police account of the April 2 shooting.

"So far we know only the police version, and as with the stories of slashed throats at Attica in 1971, time will show that the accounts are self-serving and untrue," Akil Al-Jundi of the Attica Committee to Free Dacajeweiah told the Guardian after the shootings.

During the April 2 incident, two policemen and one former Attica inmate were killed. Thompson was wounded, beaten and charged with triple murder.

Pro-death penalty forces have also seized upon the deaths of the two cops to push for the restoration of capital punishment in New York State.

New York City Mayor Edward Koch, the police commissioner, state police officials and the media have chided New York Gov. Hugh Carey for turning loose "cop killers," referring to Carey's pardons of 16 Attica inmates in 1976. They have demanded that the state legislature override Carey's recent veto of a death penalty measure.

The April 2 incident involved former Attica inmates Mariane (Dalou) Gonzales, 26, who was shot to death, and Thompson, 35.

"Dalou and Jomo were leading political organizers inside the prisons of New York," explained Akil Al-Jundi. "The police and the press have seized upon that incident to unleash a flood of vicious racist and reactionary propaganda."

According to the police version of the disputed shootings, the two officers were patroling in a prowl car at 1:30 a.m. when one exited and ordered Gonzales to raise his hands. Gonzales allegedly grabbed the cop around the waist and wrestled him to the ground. Thompson, according to the police account, pulled out a gun and shot the cop, while accidentally hitting Gonzales.

Police say that after this occurred, the second cop exchanged shots with Thompson. The cop was killed and Thompson wounded. Thompson then allegedly threw his gun into an alley and sped off in his own car, crashing eight blocks away.

Police further charge that they found .22-caliber pistols in the pockets of Thompson and Gonzalez, and found PLO literature and the magazine Zimbabwe Review in Thompson's car.

"The police version is rubbish," Thompson's attorney, Robert Bloom, told the Guardian. "It bears no resemblance to what happened."

Bloom stated that Thompson is "not guilty of any of the three killings — unequivocally and emphatically."

The lawyer charged that Thompson's arresting officer, James Kennedy, beat the wounded Thompson unmercifully on the route to the hospital — breaking his nose and jaw, cracking his skull in two places and badly injuring his eyes.

Meanwhile, police have harassed members of Thompson's and Gonzales' family. Police refused to let Gonzales' father see any part of the body other than the face when he went to identify it at the morgue. And Elizabeth Gaynes, Thompson's 8-months pregnant wife and co-counsel in his defense, was held at Rikers Island prison hospital April 17 without food and water for several hours and without charges lodged against her. The guards refused to permit her to see Thompson.

"It seems that I was being held because three bullets were allegedly found somewhere on a table near where I was seated," she said later. "It's ridiculous to believe that I would place my life and that of my unborn child and my career in jeopardy to bring Jomo three bullets that he couldn't use."

Shah's visit provokes Indian protests

By RAVAN
Special to the Guardian
Bombay

Police in India have arrested several hundred Iranian and Indian students protesting against the corruption and brutality of the Shah of Iran's government.

Demonstrations in many cities in recent months followed the outbreak of mass protests in Iran this winter and were touched off by the shah's visit to India in February.

In the biggest of the demonstrations, about 1000 students in Delhi tried to stop the shah's motorcade Feb. 2. Mounted police charged into the students, beating them and arresting 17 Iranians and about 250 others. When the police tried to separate the arrested Iranians from their Indian friends to identify them, women students joined hands to keep them all together.

In the next four days, students at all the major universities in India struck in protest against the police beatings and the threat to deport Iranians. On Feb. 4, for instance, students took to the streets in the northern city of Jaipur, where more than 50 students were injured by the police and nine were arrested. And on the same day, students struck here in this port city, where police picked up 23.

Since then there have been protests in other cities —in Bangalore in the south, for example, and in Poona, where 100 masked Iranian students and Indian supporters demonstrated April 2.

TOUGH LINE

The Indian government's tough line against the student strikers has been conditioned by its desire to stay on good terms with the shah to protect the aid-to-India programs and counterrevolutionary unity that he promotes.

Although the Indian government came to power pledging "restoration of democracy," Home Minister Charan Singh has stated that foreigners in India "have no rights they don't have in their own country." Prime Minister Morarji Desai claims that foreign students, as "guests of the country," have no political rights. Even though the government is well aware that Indian demonstrations in the U.S., Britain and elsewhere during the State of Emergency declared by then Prime Minister Indira Gandhi played an important role in the mobilization against Gandhi's dictatorial regime, the Desai government now wants to deny these same rights to Iranians in India.

There are nearly 3000 Iranian students in India, mostly concentrated in cities like Poona and Bangalore, and in Ludhiana in the Punjab in the north. They have faced continual harassment, including spying by SAVAK, the Iranian secret police organization, and they are ordered to stay in their homes or dormitories whenever Iranian officials visit India.

Since 1974 Iranian student demonstrations have been followed by deportations. The biggest outbreak came during the State of Emergency when 117 Iranians were arrested for protesting the deportation of a student. Political prisoners in the Delhi jail—including communist, socialist and Muslim organizations—joined them in a protest hunger strike.

Now such support is also being expressed in militant demonstrations in the streets of India's cities.

Music is a Way of Life.

When Elton's pretty protégé Kiki Dee sang "I Got the Music in Me" in 1975, you knew just how she felt. Music is an important part of your life, too. You wake up to music, study to it, relax to it, dance to it, party to it. Some of you even make your own music, while others philosophize about what it all means.

Music Comes Alive: The Seventies' Sounds celebrates the excitement of music today—and provides an entertaining guide to the variety of popular sounds.

"Different Notes, Different Folks" takes a look at five best-selling musical trends: jazz, country, disco, electronic studio creations and songs with a personal message. The background of each trend is presented, along with capsule descriptions of several guiding stars and a list of recommended albums. "A Hit Is Born" takes you behind the scenes of the billion-dollar record industry. An easy question-answer format gives you the business lowdown, from recording studio costs to Top 40 chart-making. "The Big Events" recaps landmark musical happenings of the Seventies. From The Who at the Met to Fleetwood Mac at the Grammies, rock's movers and shakers are presented along with their hefty achievements. And a tongue-in-cheek article outlines how you can win acclaim for your discerning taste and influence fellow music lovers by discovering musical stars-to-be before they hit it big.

Different Notes, Different Folks

A Guide to the Many Faces of Music Today

by DAVID EPSTEIN

Call it rock. Call it pop. Or call it just plain music. Whatever your pleasure, singer Don McLean shocked us all by declaring it dead in his 1971 hit "American Pie." Three million mourners rushed to buy the record that told about "the day the music died." And why not. If McLean was right, "American Pie" would be our last lively purchase. Would we spend the Seventies snuggling up with golden oldies to keep warm?

Fortunately, Don McLean was dead wrong. Instead of playing corpse, our music came alive with new passion in the Seventies. The angry teenage music of the Fifties grew up with a stunning sophistication. The acid rock of the Sixties turned into a celebration of electronic wizardry and new technology. The adventurous pop of the Seventies opened itself to influences from all forms of music, from bluegrass to classical. A free-wheelin' creativity inspired different notes for different folks, no matter what your wavelength. When these new sounds came rolling out of the rock arena, their variety was staggering.

The music of the Seventies is loud (Led Zeppelin, Deep Purple, Grand Funk Railroad) and soft (Melissa Manchester, Neil Diamond, Barry Manilow). It can make you dance (Bee Gees) or go into a trance (Pink Floyd). There are urban sounds (Odyssey's "Native New Yorker") and rural sounds (Jesse Winchester's "Mississippi, You're On My Mind"). Campy nostalgia (Bette Midler, Dr. Buzzard) and glittery shock rock (Kiss, Alice Cooper).

The Seventies is a harmonious time, with English harmony (Queen), black harmony (Pointer Sisters), country harmony (Starland Vocal Band) and Swedish harmony (Abba).

The Seventies goes underground with energetic punk music from the Sex Pistols, Talking Heads, the Ramones, and into outer space with the themes from Star Wars and Close Encounters.

Jamaican reggae is big in the Seventies, in pure form with Bob Marley and the Wailers, and with an Anglo-flavor, like Paul Simon's "Mother and Child Reunion."

We listen to silly music ("Disco Duck," "Junk Food Junkie"), weird music (Tangerine Dream, Kraftwerk) and classical music (Walter Murphy's "A Fifth of Beethoven," Deodato's "2001—Also Sprach Zarathustra"). There's symphonic rock (Emerson Lake & Palmer), lounge rock (Billy Joel) and ragtime pop (Marvin Hamlisch).

The Seventies is a time for comebacks (Neil Sedaka, Frankie Valli, Paul Anka) and the spinoffs (Nat King Cole's daughter, Pat Boone's daughter and David Cassidy's younger brother). There are albums that say music was alive (Stevie Wonder's Songs in the Key of Life) and songs that say music is dead (Don McLean's "American Pie").

The Seventies proves that music indeed can be the "food of life." During the economic disaster of 1974, we bought more than two billion dollars worth of records, tapes and concert tickets. In a decade when a President failed to "bring us together," good ol' music succeeds with something for everyone, as you'll see in the following five pages.

JAZZ

The Success

For 10 years George Benson was a highly respected but not highly paid jazz guitarist known for a technical perfection delivered so delicately as to sound almost effortless. With his hit vocal "This Masquerade" and two million sales of Breezin' (the first and so far only album by a pure jazz artist to break the one million barrier), Benson went pop to acquire new fans. In the process, he has also acquired two Mercedes, a Peugeot and a comfortable mansion in New Jersey.

Benson learned to play guitar from his stepfather and recorded his first record, as Little Georgie Benson, at age 10. In addition to jazz, his influences have been such rhythm and blues artists as Ray Charles, Sam Cooke and the former Little Stevie Wonder.

The Jazzy Rockers

Steely Dan is songwriting duo Walter Becker and Donald Fagen, who say they don't try to write Top 40 hits. In spite of themselves, they've had a few: "Do It Again," "Reelin' in the Years" and "Rikki Don't Lose That Number." Becker and Fagen use jazz-inspired riffs and chord schemes and Latin rhythms but weave them into tight, rock-inspired packages. This jazzy brew is both a critical and commercial success. Five of their six albums have gone gold, and their latest, Aja, is well on its way.

Jazz is on fire again, with new electronic sparks and smokin' beat. Not since the heyday of New Orleans in the Twenties has such mass excitement flamed around this native American sound. Keyboard stars Chick Corea and Herbie Hancock top the pop charts with electrifying blends of traditional jazz virtuousity and futuristic electronics. Their goal, says Corea, is to bring new jazz awareness "to as many people as possible." It's working. Jazz albums are selling 10 times more than in 1970, pop record stores have doubled or tripled their number of jazz bins, and colleges report a run on elective jazz courses.

Stevie Wonder and other high-rolling rock stars have caught the jazz fever, too. On his blockbuster album, Songs in the Key of Life, Wonder bares a jazz-inspired soul. One of his hottest cuts, "Sir Duke," shouts the praises of Duke Ellington and the everlasting joys of the jazz greats. Roll over Duke Ellington and tell Louis Armstrong the news.

Miles Davis: His horn announced a new jazz age

SOUND SAMPLER

George Benson: Breezin' • Blood, Sweat & Tears: Blood, Sweat & Tears • Chicago: Chicago X • Chick Corea: Hymn of the Seventh Galaxy • The Crusaders: Free as the Wind • Miles Davis: Bitches Brew • Herbie Hancock: Headhunters • Bob James: Heads • Al Jarreau: Look to the Rainbow • Ronnie Laws: Pressure Sensitive • John McLaughlin: Birds of Fire • Flora Purim: Open Your Eyes You Can Fly • Steely Dan: Aja • Grover Washington, Jr.: Mister Magic • Weather Report: Mysterious Traveller

The Songbird

Open Your Eyes You Can Fly, the 1975 solo album by Flora Purim, is an apt title for the songbird who has unseated Ella Fitzgerald and Roberta Flack in most jazz polls as top female vocalist. Purim spices jazz with the African-based samba rhythms of her native Rio de Janeiro streets—and a spectacular, wide-ranging voice.

The Dance Sound

Jazz pianist Herbie Hancock won new listeners in 1973 with a pioneering jazz-rock album, Headhunters, that has sold close to one million copies. On that album and the more recent Man-Child, Hancock takes jazz improvisation on the synthesizer and electric piano and makes it danceable with rhythms influenced both by early Africa and latter-day funk.

Roots

A blast of horns announced the marriage of rock and jazz in the late Sixties. In 1968 two rock groups—Blood, Sweat & Tears and Chicago—appeared with horn sections added to the usual stable of hard rock instruments. When their gold-record brass wailed, it was in a jazz style popularized 20 years earlier during the big band rages of Count Basie and Stan Kenton. In 1969 trumpeter Miles Davis and disciples Herbie Hancock, John McLaughlin and Chick Corea plugged their jazz instruments into rock's electric amps and steady beats. Their Bitches Brew album became the first jazz hit on the pop charts, and set the tone of jazz rock for the Seventies.

COUNTRY

Three Women

The pioneers of "new country" include three women who sound even better than they look (if that's possible).

Linda Ronstadt has been the premier female vocalist in rock music since her 1974 album Heart Like a Wheel became the top-selling LP of the year, and her fans include a large dose of basic country listeners. With songs ranging from the pure country of Willie Nelson's "Crazy" to Rolling Stone rockers like "Tumbling Dice." Arizona-born Ronstadt has mastered (or mistressed) both forms.

Emmylou Harris's hit singles have all been made on the country charts, but her influences and aspirations are on the rock side of country-rock. She was discovered singing in Washington, D.C. lounges in 1970 by the late Gram Parsons (of Byrds fame), and went on to build capital hits from progressive country songs as well as old country classics like "Together Again."

Dolly Parton, a buxom blonde singer from the Tennessee hills, rose to the top of the country field and then declared her musical independence in 1976 by firing her country band and breaking into the lucrative pop arena with an album she produced herself. This year she swept the pop, country and easy-listening charts with the single "Here You Come Again." No dumb blonde, this Dolly.

Ronstadt, Parton and Harris are all good friends. After years of backing each other on their albums, they've finally gotten together for a "trio" album. Move over, Crosby, Stills & Nash.

If skyrocketing sales of jazz albums have rock 'n rollers doing double takes at the pop charts, a glance at box office receipts sends them reelin'. Country sounds served up with a rock beat fill concert halls in the Seventies. Southern boogie groups like the Marshall Tucker Band can whip audiences into foot-stomping rapture with hard-driving rhythms on down-home tunes, while a mellow John Denver can convince laid-back crowds that West Virginia is "almost heaven." The Eagles, those good ol' boys from Los Angeles, plan to take their newfangled music out of the concert halls and into the movie theaters. They're hard at work on a film version of their landmark country-rock album, Desperado.

The successful sounds of these "new-comers" have not gone unnoticed by traditional country performers. Bluegrass king Earl Scruggs gained new fans by opening his acoustic band to electric instruments and strong rock rhythms. Nashville's Loretta Lynn opened the door for mass acceptance of the country singer, and sister Crystal Gayle walked right in without blinking her brown eyes. (Or are they blue?)

The Outlaw

Waylon Jennings was a standard country singer until he bucked the Nashville establishment and crossed over into the pop music mainstream. He grew a beard, made his songs more thoughtful, and in the process founded an "outlaw" contingent of progressive country performers including Austin-based Willie Nelson and Jerry Jeff Walker. His most successful album is called, naturally, The Outlaws.

Laid-Back Sound

Until his recent hit, "Margaritaville," Jimmy Buffett's reputation was based on his live performances. The concerts feel more like living room gatherings than shows, and Buffett's Gulf Coast roots inject his mellow country tunes with a unique Caribbean flavor. This laid-back sound is winning over a large portion of the expanding country-rock audience.

Roots

The king of rock 'n roll was a country boy. Elvis Presley's earth-shattering music in 1956 combined the country sound of the Memphis "rockabillies" with a strong hit of black rhythm and blues. Country's pivotal role in this revolution quickly got lost in the shuffle. Rockers stuck it with a "hick music" tag. It took over 10 years for major performers to bring country back into the rock world. In 1968, Bob Dylan released John Wesley Harding and the Byrds followed with Sweetheart of the Rodeo. These popular albums were true to the spirit of traditional country, and stimulated the rendezvous of modern rock with its country roots.

DISCO

The Queen

Donna Summer became the queen of the discos with her heavy breathing on "Love to Love You Baby," a song that spins moans, groans, cries and whispers into dance music. She keeps her crown by creating what she calls "fantasy": a surrealistic mixture of her hot-blooded vocals with the detached coolness of electronic music. Her latest album, Once Upon a Time, is a modern-day Cinderella fable done as "disco opera." Cinderella/Summer will take a stage version on the road in late spring.

Summer obviously has more ambition in life than being a stereophonic sex kitten. A Boston native, she went to Europe nine years ago to perform in the German cast of Hair, then joined the Vienna Folk Opera productions of Porgy and Bess and Showboat. She appears in a new disco flick, Thank God It's Friday, she co-wrote and sang the disco theme from The Deep, and her album material, especially on I Remember Yesterday, shows her considerable vocal skills with blues, gospel and soul.

Platinum Blue Eyes

Boz Scaggs' switch from folksy blue-eyed soul to slick dance tunes was perfect timing in 1976. The disco boom shot his Silk Degrees album to triple platinum (three million sales) and yielded four good disco/dance hits: "Lowdown," "It's Over," "What Can I Say" and "Lido Shuffle."

Disco's driving "thump thump" beat is meant to knock you onto your feet and get you dancing. The lyrics? Short and sweet (or simple-minded, to disco detractors). "They're mantras for the dance floor," insists Grace Jones, a Jamaican-born disco star. On her hit single, "I Need a Man," Jones belts out the same four words (the song's title) a staggering 42 times. The hammering repetition of simple beat and simple lyric inspires a frenzied liberation, say disco fans.

The place to get caught up in this new excitement is the "disco" itself. These pleasure domes mix tightly packed dance floors with a heavy dose of Seventies technology: sophisticated sound systems deliver the beat with carefully crafted intensity and intricate lighting effects aim to suspend time. It's a high-energy, superspacey environ that gives new meaning to "future shock."

The Big Comeback

Disco's biggest success is also the decade's big comeback story: the Bee Gees. The high British harmonies of the Brothers Gibb earned one gold album in the Beatles' Sixties, then fell from hit range. The Australian trio came back in the mid-Seventies with a new disco passion and a strong string of gold-selling dance tunes like "You Should Be Dancing," "Jive Talkin'" and "Nights on Broadway." Their superstar status was clinched by the highly successful, disco-inspired film, Saturday Night Fever. The Bee Gees wrote seven and perform six of the movie's hit songs. The soundtrack album broke the eight-month stranglehold that Fleetwood Mac's Rumours had on the Number One spot.

Roots

The disco beat is an outgrowth of the rhythm and blues music of pop's past. In the smoky clubs of Chicago's black ghettos in the late Forties, men like the legendary Muddy Waters, "The Hoochie Coochie Man," hammered out a sensual beat on amplified guitars. By the Fifties, the sound was called "rhythm and blues": a hard city rhythm with softer blues roots of the rural South.

Groups like the Temptations and the Supremes brought a version of the beat to white audiences in the early and mid-Sixties. But Gladys Knight's hit in 1968, "I Heard It Through the Grapevine," was the classic preview of the Seventies: simple beat, simple lyrics, simply frenzied.

The Wizard

No single artist makes broader or more successful use of Seventies' music technology than Stevie Wonder. His synthesizer and electric piano produce a distinctive Wonder sound which weaves together elements of jazz, soul, rock and reggae into such memorable masterpieces as "Superstition" (1972), "Higher Ground" (1973) and "Living for the City" (1974).

Wonder also is foremost in using the recording studio as a tool of musical expression. His 1976 double LP Songs in the Key of Life is praised not only for its rich musical diversity, but also for its use of multiple tracking and overdubbing. These techniques enable Wonder to sing his own background vocals and play many instruments—piano, bass, drums, clavinet and harmonica—on the same song.

The New Orchestra

Inspired by the Beatles' use of symphonic strings on "Strawberry Fields Forever," English rocker Jeff Lynne formed Electric Light Orchestra in 1971 to take that sound out of the studio and onto the stage. Combining two cellists, a violinist and backup support from Moog with standard rock instrumentation, Lynne forged a unique "orchestra" sound. With a string of hits behind them, including "Roll Over Beethoven," "Evil Woman" and "Telephone Line," ELO continues to produce rich orchestral songs by using modern music technology and Lynne's expert arrangements.

Today's pop stars may sing lines like "Don't know much trigonometry," but they'd better know electronics. In the Seventies, electronic skill is as much a part of the musician's repertoire as knowledge of chords and keys. New electronic instruments like the synthesizer expand creativity in quantum leaps. New in-studio technology like complex mixing consoles and multitrack recorders raises the quality of sound to better-than-live. On stage, wireless microphones give new freedom to vocalists, and groups like Led Zeppelin and ELO use lasers to produce startling visual effects. And staggering amounts of sophisticated gear are lugged along to reproduce their studio sounds in person.

What's in the future? New instruments and even better sound, for starters. Laser technology, computer systems and video discs may turn conventional stereos into dinosaurs. Instead, TV/stereo hookups will use hologram lasers to bring lifelike performers into your own home in 3-D realism. And you thought Star Wars was fooling around.

The New Instrument

The wizardry of today's technical music centers on the synthesizer, a machine built to produce an incredible array of electronic sounds. The first synthesizer was a room-sized device, built in 1955 by RCA. With a price tag of $100,000, RCA didn't have musicians beating down doors to get one. Enter Dr. Robert Moog, electronics expert and sometime piano-player. In 1964 he grafted a keyboard onto a much smaller version of the device that looked like a jet plane control panel. Moog's musical Frankenstein was able to mimic a wide variety of instruments by manipulating sound waves through a series of mixers, filters and amplifiers.

Over the years, various refinements including computer applications have made the synthesizer more versatile and "playable." Today its use is widespread, from the rock creations of Keith Emerson to the classical pastiches of Walter Murphy to the avant-garde explorations of Brian Eno. In the works are synthesizers that can be adapted to other instruments besides the keyboard. Soon tuba players and saxophonists may be able to get guitar riffs or piano solos out of their instruments—without even blowing them.

Roots

The first major pop recording to feature a synthesizer was the Beach Boys' "Good Vibrations" in 1966. Walter Carlos's Switched-On Bach brought the sound to classical music in 1968, and the British group The Who showcased the synthesizer in rock on the 1971 landmark album Who's Next. From there, Dr. Moog's invention has gone on to become a virtual rock requisite.

The New Romance

The love songs of the Seventies are not of the bill-and-coo variety. They are about two people trying to make a life together and often failing. The strained topic of lost love and the breakdown of old romantic myths dominate the music of all highly personal performers.

To many the prime love poet of the Seventies has been Jackson Browne, who says he views romance as "not necessarily positive." Yet some of his biggest fans find him almost classically romantic in his deeply personal love songs.

On his album The Pretender, Browne sings about shaky love affairs and his failures to "open up and let you in." His lyrics rarely speak comfortably about love ("Never should I have had to try so hard to make a love work out"). But Browne's songs attempt to deal with his own romantic problems honestly. And that sells in the Seventies.

Rock Biography

The confessional tone of Seventies' music is not limited to the mellow songsters. Rock groups often use personal experiences as a basis for their songs. Fleetwood Mac's top-selling album Rumours is a highly personal account of the breakup of the members' marriages and attachments and the traumas created by the splits.

Much like a picaresque novelist, Bruce Springsteen tells tales of teenage Americana and its fast-living hoodlums. Most of his wild images on Born to Run are pulled from his youth in seamy Asbury Park, a decaying New Jersey resort town.

Pop observer Tom Wolfe has tagged the Seventies as "The Me Decade." Judging from the messages in pop songs, he's right. Seventies' singer/songwriters are self-absorbed, if not self-aware. Preoccupied with understanding themselves, they search through their lives, pull out moments of intensity and weave them into songs. This bittersweet process yields a tough and tender kind of honesty: Karla Bonoff pleads for "Someone To Lay Down Beside Me" and Dan Fogelberg admits that love has left him with only "Souvenirs."

Listeners are touched not only by the pain in new songs, but also by the flash of recognition. We've been there also. The songs deal with conflicts and ambiguities we've all faced in the Seventies: love, loneliness, freedom and fear. Judging by our personal response to the Seventies' songwriters, Wolfe could have called this "The Me Too Decade."

Not-So-Private Lives

The leaders of the confessional sound of the Seventies are Joni Mitchell and James Taylor. Both have spent the decade publicly searching their souls in song. Often as not, their intimacies and anguish can serve as lessons to be learned by all.

Joni Mitchell has continually explored the multifaceted problems of love that confront a worldly-wise, modern woman. In hits like "Help Me," she can revel in the delights of our new freedoms, while warning of the perils of falling in love—again.

James Taylor has taken us inside his broken heart on songs like "Fire and Rain," sharing troubled thoughts and the triumph of simply surviving. Recently he has turned to old rhythm and blues tunes like "Handy Man" and "How Sweet It Is," which points out another Seventies' trend: sometimes old songs capture modern emotions remarkably well.

Roots

Soul-searching in music is as old as the basic blues. Fighting the instinct to fall in love is not a new theme, either. Marlene Dietrich launched her career in 1929 with the tune "Falling in Love Again." Her smoldering refrain asked, "What am I to do? I can't help it."

The big difference in Seventies' songs is the often brutal honesty with which the writers bare their souls. It's a trend that became a highly commercial success with Carole King and her mammoth hit album Tapestry in 1970. King packed a wallop with tight, hard-hitting songs like "So Far Away," "It's Too Late," and "A Natural Woman." The album stayed on top of the charts for five years and opened the way for other top singer/songwriters to deal openly with emotions.

A dramatic combination of styling and technology for 1978…and beyond.

Here is a car for the automotive future. With dynamic styling inside and out. Comfort for five passengers, yet fuel and cost efficiency for the years ahead. A car realistically priced for today. The new Futura. Before you consider any other car available today, read on…

Scheduled Maintenance 50,000 miles about $150.

A startling fact: Futura has been engineered to hold down the costs of maintenance in the years ahead. Ford estimates that with automatic transmission and standard engine, 50,000 miles of scheduled maintenance will cost only about $150. (*Based on Ford labor time standards, a $14.50/hr. labor rate and Ford's suggested parts prices in effect Aug., 1977.)

33 MPG (hwy) 23 MPG (city)

Futura's EPA mileage estimates—with 2.3 litre engine and manual 4-speed—are the highest of any car in its class. Of course, your actual mileage may vary depending on how you drive, your car's condition and optional equipment. Calif. ratings are lower. Futura is also available with 3.3 litre 6-cylinder and 5.0 litre V-8 engines.

$4,291 as shown

Behind the Scenes in a Billion-Dollar Industry

by KITTY YANCEY

When you plunk down your hard-earned cash for Linda Ronstadt's latest album, you're not paying for a piece of pressed vinyl inside a cardboard jacket. You're paying for the time and talent of everyone from the engineer who recorded it to the artist who designed the cover to the truck driver who delivered it to your local record store. What goes into the making of a hit record? More than you might imagine. Answered here are 11 of the questions most commonly asked about this billion-dollar industry.

Q. Say a group decides to make an album. How long will they have to spend in the recording studio and how much will it cost?

Recording an album can take anywhere from a week to a few months. "The average time spent in the studio is about a month, but it can be less if the group has organized its songs, arrangements and roster of musicians beforehand," says Ed Cobb, owner of Producer's Workshop in Hollywood. His studio has spawned Steely Dan's Aja and Fleetwood Mac's Rumours, as well as 13 other gold records in the last two years. "Steely Dan rushed through two albums in two months in 1977," Cobb says. "Rumours took over a year to complete, with four months solid in the studio at one point, and breaks for a concert tour. Fleetwood Mac is very picky about what it records, and the group oversees everything from producing to engineering to mixing the final product."

Since acquiring and maintaining top-quality sound equipment is a costly proposition, hourly studio rental alone costs $100-$150. Most groups are thus forced to keep jamming and experimentation to a minimum. "It just costs too much," says Cobb. "Figure eight hours a day at $100 an hour, multiply that by 30 days—that's $24,000 right there, and that doesn't include pressing, packaging, promotional costs and musicians."

Use of an engineer is usually included in studio rental, and some studios offer "extras" like well-stocked bars, video games, free lodging and Jacuzzi baths to keep the creative juices flowing during long sessions. Santa Monica's Brother Studios, built by the Beach Boys, lures artists with a large screen video lounge, free use of the organ played on Beach Boys' classics and a location near the beach.

Q. I've heard backup musicians can make or break a record. Are there many of these musicians? How much do they get paid?

A good sessions musician can play on a disco record in the morning and jam with a progressive rock group in the afternoon. The best ones are in constant demand; they may play as many as four or five three-hour sessions a day. The musicians' union sets a base pay rate of $121 for each session or fraction thereof, but the more experienced can get double that or more. It's not unusual for a good sessions musician to take home $50,000 to $70,000 per year or up.

Thousands of musicians play on an occasional record, but most producers prefer to stick to a pool of a few hundred well-known musicians who they know can get the job done without wasting precious studio time. Popular music stars like Glen Campbell, Charlie Daniels and Led Zeppelin's Jimmy Page were studio musicians before they moved into the spotlight.

Q. Do recording studios keep stables of musicians who give their records a distinctive sound?

Once there were "house" bands attached to studios. Today, the trend is toward studios used by a stream of artists and record producers who bring different musicians in for sessions or use members of their own group exclusively. But house bands or clusters of musicians with their own sound are still found in recording centers like Miami, Philadelphia and Muscle Shoals, Alabama.

Thelma Houston, the Rolling Stones and Rod Stewart are among hundreds who have traveled to Muscle Shoals for the chance to record with the area's famed rhythm section, which gained fame backing rhythm and blues singers like Percy Sledge ("When a Man Loves a Woman") and Otis Redding ("Dock of the Bay").

In Philadelphia, the house band that put the city on the musical map in the Seventies was Sigma Sound Studio's MFSB (stands for "Mother Father Sister Brother"). The group backed Philadelphia International Records artists like the O'Jays in such Seventies' hits as "For the Love of Money," "Back Stabbers" and "Love Train." And they were among the first to define the contemporary disco sound with their own best-selling single, an instrumental bursting with energy entitled simply "TSOP" (The Sound of Philadelphia).

In Miami, songs like "Funky Nassau" by the Beginning of the End and "Get Down Tonight" and "That's the Way (I Like It)" by K.C. & the Sunshine Band drew national attention to the studios of TK Productions, where a stable of musicians backed hits with a funky beat and an often Latin flavor. The musicians now play in other cities, too, but they remain based at TK to back artists like Betty Wright ("Clean Up Woman") and Peter Brown ("Do You Want To Get Funky with Me?").

Q. What's the best way to land a recording contract? Do record company talent scouts really listen to all the demonstration tapes they get?

Record companies are always searching for the next hit or the new artist who can make millions. Those with the most power to get recording contracts are independent record producers with a good track record and the A & R (artist and repertoire) executives at the record companies, whose jobs depend on finding new talent. "Most of the A & R people listen to the demonstration tapes they get," says Jerry Bailey, a spokesman for ABC Records, who can also be found listening to tapes on occasion. "Usually you can tell within the first 10 seconds whether you like it or not. Tape quality isn't really all that important. What we're looking for is a good song or an unusual voice, and that comes through even on a rough tape.

"A beginner's best shot is to have his manager or a respected producer bring the tape by. They'll play the tape for us, and we'll arrange to see the artist perform if we're interested. A producer will often bring us a tape and find the song he thinks could be a hit for us. We'll foot the bill to record it and release it on spec—which means that if it hits we sign the artist, and if not we drop him or carry him for a year or two to see if he can get a hit." Record companies lose at least $2,000 to $3,000 on a single that flops, and they may pour $35,000 to $200,000 or more into the production and promotion of an album. Since nine out of 10 acts in the pop field lose money, record companies must be selective about signing.

Q. What happens to a record when it's released? And how does it make the "Top 40"?

Getting a record played on the radio is the first step in making a hit. This is harder than it sounds, because today's major AM stations usually play no more than 20-30 different songs a day. Most of these are already hits, and stations' playlists allow for only a few new "add-ons" each week.

"We used to talk about the Top 40 for radio play," says Rick Sklar, programming vice-president at New York's WABC, the most listened-to radio station in the nation. "In the Seventies it's more like the Top 20. Our goal is to keep our audience tuned in, and we can't afford to play lesser-known songs."

Radio stations receive as many as 300 new singles a week, and music directors are besieged by record company promotion personnel whose job it is to get their records on the air. Once a song "breaks" in a major market (gets played on a major station), it has a chance to get on the national charts compiled weekly by Billboard, Record World and Cashbox, three music industry trade magazines.

"For a single to get on the charts it has to be added to the playlists of about five or six key radio stations across the country," says Steve Hulen of the Cashbox chart research department. "About 138 stations are called each week, as are distributors and major record stores. To get into the 70's or 80's on the charts, other major stations have to add the tune to their playlists. After that, chart position is determined by a combination of how well the song sells, airplay and phoned-in requests to the radio stations. If we see a tie, we go with the one that is selling better." Both Billboard and Record World chart singles in a similar way, and all three chart albums by sales alone.

Q. Does a record album's cover influence its sales? Who decides what will go on the cover?

A catchy album cover attracts attention and may even boost sales, but the cleverest packaging can't move an album that's a musical flop. Conversely, "If a record is good, you could put it in a paper bag and it would sell," says John Berg, vice-president of packaging, art and design at Columbia Records. Berg's sense of style influences all Columbia products, and he has put together distinctive album covers for artists like Chicago, Bruce Springsteen and Bob Dylan.

Art directors usually suggest or decide the cover, but the more powerful or successful the artist, the more say he or she has in the cover design. The cover for the first Beatles' album featured a simple photograph taken as they leaned over a railing at their record company, but later the group took an active role in such extravaganzas as their cover for Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band. Artists like Cat Stevens, Bob Dylan and Joni Mitchell have designed their own album covers, featuring their own illustrations, self-portraits, poems or hand-lettering.

The photo or illustration on an album cover can cost anywhere from 35 cents to $20,000, with the average cost about $3,000 for well-known artists. A simple Polaroid snapshot Berg took of Bob Dylan was used on Dylan's John Wesley Harding cover, while $20,000 was spent on a cover picture for Neil Diamond's Beautiful Noise album (and never used because Diamond decided he didn't like it). The Eagles' Hotel California cost about $15,000, including rental of the hotel set, the hiring of extras, and special lighting.

Q. Some record stores have a huge selection, while others just seem to stock what's popular now. Who determines what goes into record stores?

A store's selection depends on its size, clientele and who's stocking the records. Record chain stores like King Karol and Record Bar, featuring larger than average inventory and range of artists, are becoming more popular. These stores—virtually record supermarkets—buy their records direct from the various manufacturers at discounted prices.

The smaller "mom and pop" record retailers in downtown areas or shopping malls usually don't have the volume to buy direct from the manufacturers. They are more likely to buy from a distributor (called a "one-stop"), which stocks records from all the manufacturers. The price is higher, since smaller stores must pay for the distributor's services.

Record departments in stores like Sears, J.C. Penney and K-Mart are serviced by "rackjobbers," who buy direct from the manufacturers at the best discount of all and save the chains the bother of running a record department. Rackjobbers choose inventory, take care of the advertising, and provide the racks and fixtures that records are displayed on. All the store has to do is ring the cash register.

Radio playlists help to determine which records a rackjobber keeps in a department, but "ultimately the consumer makes the decisions," says Herb Dorfman, vice-president of Bee Gee Records and Tapes, an Albany, New York, rackjobber whose 200 accounts in the Northeast include Sears' and Penney's stores. "You really have to know your market area. A group like the Amazing Rhythm Aces may sell big in Tennessee because they're 'hometown boys,' while a group like Aerosmith sells better in the Northeast because they're from New England. We sold a lot of Saturday Night Fever albums in the New York City area because the hero of the movie was from there and a lot of people identified with it."

Q. How do record companies go about promoting a record? Is it possible to "buy" a hit?

Promotion personnel are told to concentrate on a few records each month, handpicked by company brass. The company buys advertising in consumer and trade magazines, arranges radio commercials and guest appearances for the artist, and often holds press parties for influential writers and broadcasters.

"Promo is the heart of the record company," says one record publicity director. "Promo men are tied to the songs they're told to push each month whether they like them or not, and they've got to do all they can to 'bring them home' (make them hits). If they don't, their jobs are on the line."

It's hard to tell exactly how much is spent to promote a record, since record companies want to perpetuate what industry insiders call the "mystique of the hit": they prefer for people to think that the record climbed the charts on its own.

One of the most costly promotions ventures is "crossing over"—moving from one area of popular music to another. Take Dolly Parton's much publicized move from country music to the more lucrative world of pop. "This kind of thing just doesn't happen on its own," says Michael Bane, editor of Country Music magazine. "You figure production of her Here You Come Again album, a deal with a prestige public relations firm, promotion of the album, a management contract, and a press party at New York's World Trade Center for 1,500 people—that cost RCA more than a million dollars right there, maybe as much as $3 million. All this was essentially to buy a chart position for her single and album. RCA may not get back all they spent right away, but they will have established her as a pop star and set the stage for a blockbuster hit."

A heavy promotional effort can boost sales, but promotion personnel and distributors agree that it can't sell a record that's a dud. "A record has to have something going for it," says one publicity director.

Q. It seems that every year, more of the records I buy are defective and I end up having to go through the hassle of taking them back. Why is this?

Record sales have increased 43 percent in the last couple of years, and some manufacturers have been running 24-hour-a-day shifts seven days a week to keep up with the demand. Even though most manufacturing plants attempt to maintain a high level of quality control through record inspectors (Columbia Records has 150 at its Terre Haute, Indiana, plant), record store owners and distributors report daily complaints about defective records and tapes.

"We mainly get complaints about bubbles on records, records that were warped in pressing or shipment, and tapes with defective moving parts in the cartridge," says Jay Jacobs of Knox Record Rack Company. "But we've also found that maybe 30 percent of the claims are not valid—a person is tired of a record, for instance, or hasn't cleaned the head of his tape player." Any truly defective record or tape can be exchanged without charge, and the record manufacturer takes it back.

"In general, the quality of the average record is far superior to what it once was because the sound and recording equipment is so fantastic. Take an album recorded in 1958, then listen to one recorded this year, and you'll be shocked at the difference."

Q. How do songwriters get paid?

A songwriter generally contracts with a publisher who releases the song, registers it for copyright and represents the writer in issuing recording rights. Publishers also share in the royalties. Under U.S. copyright law, anyone who wants to record, publish or perform a song in public must get the copyright owner's permission and arrange for payment. Since it is impossible for an individual to monitor the thousands of places his work may be performed, most writers and publishers affiliate with a performance rights licensing organization which will do the collecting for them. The organizations—ASCAP (The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers), BMI (Broadcast Music Incorporated) and SESAC (Society of European Stage Authors and Composers)—collect royalties for their affiliates from TV and radio stations, airlines, restaurants, concert halls, discos and jukebox operators. The licensing organizations have recently negotiated with colleges and universities to collect royalties for performance of copyrighted music on campus. It would be impossible to determine every piece of music played, so they work out fees based on criteria like a percentage of total revenue, number of seats, whether admission is charged or the number of days and nights that music is played.

More than 59,000 songwriters and over 23,000 publishers are affiliated with the three licensing organizations. "All of ASCAP's income is distributed to the members after deducting the cost of doing business," says Paul Marks, ASCAP managing director. "How much each songwriter or publisher gets is determined by the number of performances of their songs as indicated by a scientific survey which includes a random sample of TV and radio stations, background music licensees and a census of live performances. ASCAP collected $102.4 million last year for its members.

SESAC gives its writers and publishers extra cash for songs which make the national charts, cross over from one chart to another, or remain there 15 weeks or longer. Even with a royalty of only a few cents per performance, a songwriter who has a song that becomes a standard can expect to cash in year after year. Jim Webb's "By the Time I Get to Phoenix," released in 1967, has logged well over a million performances and still brings in royalties as do Lennon-McCartney's "Eleanor Rigby," released in 1966, and hundreds of other songs.

Q. Do artists get royalties for each album they sell? Or do they just make a record for a flat fee?

For an artist, a royalty is the amount he gets for each album sold. The amount varies from a few cents to more than a dollar, depending on the stature of the artists and the shrewdness of their lawyers and managers. Stars like Paul McCartney and the Bee Gees can command a dollar or more per album, with the royalty amount automatically increasing when sales reach the 700,000 mark. Artists may also get what is known as a "guarantee," which is a lump sum paid when they deliver the finished tracks for the album. Unknowns may be given an "advance" to cover expenses while recording and before their record begins to sell. Record companies recoup the advance by withholding royalties until the amount is made up. "Of course a group like the Bee Gees can command a much higher royalty and guarantee than an unknown group," says Bob Edson, vice-president of RSO Records. The group's Saturday Night Fever album sold seven million copies in three months and is a contender for best-selling album of all time. "An artist may make $35,000 off a good-selling country album, $350,000 off a hit pop album, or millions off albums like Rumours and Saturday Night Fever, says ABC Records' Jerry Bailey.

The Dazzling Highlights of a High-Flying Decade

by TIM SMIGHT

June 7, 1970: The Who Makes Rock Respectable

British rock group The Who performs its rock opera Tommy at New York's Metropolitan Opera in front of two sold-out audiences. Critics hailed the event as marking the acceptance of rock as a serious art form. Who's Next (1971) signaled the first serious use of the synthesizer in rock with memorable songs like "Baba O'Riley" and "Won't Get Fooled Again." Another story album, Quadrophenia (1973), began the "quadraphonic revolution," which fizzled when the public didn't go for the new sound system. The Who continue to record and tour both individually and as a group, and in 1975 Tommy was made into a feature film starring band member Roger Daltrey.

August 24, 1970: Elton John Invades America

British pop singer Elton John makes his U.S. debut at the Troubadour Club in Los Angeles. He drew rave reviews from critics and music personalities for his upbeat style, melodious tunes and poetic lyrics written by partner Bernie Taupin. It was all up from there—by late 1975, when the album Rock of the Westies hit #1 on the charts, Elton and Bernie were sitting on top of the rock world with 11 platinum albums and millions of fans. Known to hammer out entire albums in just a few days, Elton and Bernie—the Rodgers and Hammerstein of rock—can look back on an incredible string of hit singles, as well. Among them: "Daniel," "Rocket Man," "Honky Cat," "Crocodile Rock," "Goodbye Yellow Brick Road" and "Bennie and the Jets."

March 1, 1971: James Taylor Hits Cover of Time

Soft rocker James Taylor appears on the cover of Time magazine at age 22. His mellow, sensitive sound and deep personal expression were lauded by Time as exemplifying "the new rock." Although rock proved too diverse for its collective future to be pinned on Taylor, he went on to become one of the decade's most successful vocalists. The 1971 album Sweet Baby James, with hit songs "Fire and Rain" and "Country Road," sold over three million copies. More albums followed, containing such hit songs as "You've Got a Friend," "Don't Let Me Be Lonely Tonight," "Mexico" and "How Sweet It Is." Taylor's 1977 album, JT, was one of the top-selling LP's of the year, and the cut "Handy Man" won him a Grammy as "best male vocalist."

June 18, 1971: Rod Stewart Wakes Up a Celebrity

Rod Stewart's hoarse, raspy voice floods the airwaves, belting out a ballad to a girl named "Maggie May." With that single, Rod Stewart, former lead singer for the first Jeff Beck group, became an "instant star." The album, Every Picture Tells a Story, contained three other hits: "Mandolin Wind," "Reason to Believe" and "(I Know) I'm Losing You." It quickly moved to #1 on the charts. Six more albums followed, all cracking the Top 10 with songs ranging from smooth blues ballads to smoking rock. With his expert touring band, Stewart has become one of the top performing acts in the world. Despite recurring domestic problems, he remains at the top of the rock scene in 1978 with successful U.S. and European tours and a new album, Foot Loose & Fancy Free.

August 8, 1971: George Harrison Throws Garden Party for Bangladesh

Ex-Beatle George Harrison stages a "Concert for Bangladesh" that fills New York's Madison Square Garden twice, raising over $250,000 for the famine victims of war-torn East Pakistan. Along with Harrison, who was riding a wave of success following the release of his three-record album All Things Must Pass, the affair featured Leon Russell, Eric Clapton, Ringo Starr, Billy Preston, and a surprise visit from Bob Dylan. The event was filmed and recorded, and stands out as one of the most notable concerts of the decade.

September 28, 1972: David Bowie Gives Us Glitter

British phenomenon David Bowie makes his New York debut at Carnegie Hall shortly after the release of his second album, The Rise and Fall of Ziggy Stardust and the Spiders from Mars. The performance featured elaborate sets, outrageous costumes and spaced-out imagery that pioneered the concept of "glitter rock." With songs ranging from hard-driving rockers about youth to mystical space voyages, Bowie wowed audiences and critics as the garishly clad Ziggy. Several chart-topping songs followed, including "Suffragette City," "Young Americans" and "Fame." In 1976, Bowie appeared in a three-piece suit, sans makeup, and announced that he had "gone straight."

July 28, 1973: Watkins Glen Brings Us Together

Over 600,000 people turn out for a one-day rock festival at Watkins Glen Speedway in upstate New York. The huge turnout topped that of the Woodstock festival four years earlier and was interpreted by many to mean a rekindling of the "Woodstock spirit." Sixteen hours of music were provided by the Allman Brothers Band, the Grateful Dead, and The Band. The event came off without a hitch.

December 8, 1973: Alice Cooper Has a Nightmare in Wonderland

Hard rocker Alice Cooper begins a tour in Nashville that sells out halls nationwide. His nightmarish act, featuring live snakes, guillotines, and the butchering of dolls and mannequins, added a new dimension to rock music: "shock rock" hit the big time. Cooper had burst onto the scene two years earlier, screaming out the frustrations and emotions of youth with the single "I'm Eighteen." Two albums, School's Out and Billion Dollar Babies, had topped the charts by the time of the 1973 tour. Cooper's angry, intense music and showmanship influenced the later work of such heavy metal groups as Aerosmith, Deep Purple and Kiss. By 1975, with the release of the single "Only Women Bleed," Cooper himself had mellowed considerably.

February 14, 1974: Bob Dylan Brings It All Back Home—Again

Sixties' hero Bob Dylan, accompanied by The Band, completes a six-week 21-city U.S. tour with a concert at the Los Angeles Forum. Over 650,000 fans flocked to see Dylan on the tour. Mail order requests for tickets were upwards of 15 million, including 300,000 requests for the 18,500 seats at the final Forum concert. Although he had appeared in a film (Pat Garrett and Billy the Kid) and had performed at the Concert for Bangladesh in 1971, the tour marked Dylan's first series of live appearances in eight years. Two years later, in 1976, he toured again, accompanied by The Band and a large group of friends including Joan Baez, Roger McGuinn and poet Allen Ginsberg. Picking up guests along the way, the "Rolling Thunder Revue" generated both a television special and a feature film, Renaldo and Clara.

and proclaims the high-energy Springsteen to be "the future of rock and roll." Born to Run, Springsteen's third album, was released in 1975, and he appeared on the covers of Time and Newsweek simultaneously. Critics hailed the emotional, churning excitement of Springsteen's live performances as a return to rock's roots—a world of fast cars, leather jackets and running with the boys. Born to Run sold well, but faded fast. Springsteen continues to tour to good reviews while legal hassles delay production of a new album and publicity wanes. Whether Bruce Springsteen is a new rock hero remains to be seen.

August 10, 1975:
Stevie Wonder Reaps Biggest Bucks Ever

Superstar Stevie Wonder signs the richest recording contract in history at age 26 with Motown records—a seven-year agreement for $13 million. Regarded by many as the primal pioneer of musical innovation, Wonder carved his own musical niche in the Seventies. Songs like "For Once in My Life," "Superstition," "Living for the City" and "Higher Ground" continually top the soul and pop charts. By the time he signed the Motown contract, Wonder had captured nine Grammies. His 1976 album, Songs in the Key of Life, topped the charts in one week.

April 10, 1976:
Peter Frampton Sees Double-Record Record

Frampton Comes Alive! moves to #1 on the charts. It went on to become the top-selling double LP in history, capping a phenomenal year for Frampton, who hit big in England in 1968 at age 16. The gentle rock and catchy tunes of Frampton cut across musical divisions and generate enormous appeal. Frampton, a former lead guitarist for Humble Pie, grossed more than $50 million in 1976 and played to over two million fans on tour. He followed up with a 44-concert tour in 1977 and a new album and hit single, "I'm In You."

May 3, 1976:
Paul McCartney Spreads His Wings

Ex-Beatle Paul McCartney and his band Wings begin a 21-city U.S. tour in Fort Worth, Texas. It was McCartney's first live appearance in the U.S. in 10 years. Wings played to SRO crowds across the nation. Formed by McCartney in 1971, Wings has often been criticized as musically shallow and adolescent. But the public loves them. Songs such as "Hi, Hi, Hi," "Silly Love Songs," "Band on the Run" and "Live and Let Die" have flooded the Top-40 airwaves in the Seventies. Band on the Run became the top-selling album of 1973, and by the end of 1976 no less than five Wings' albums had hit #1 on the charts, including the 1977 three-disc release Wings Over America. McCartney is undoubtedly the most successful ex-Beatle.

November 22, 1976:
Boston Proves American Dream

The debut album of the rock group Boston goes platinum after only three months on the charts. It became the most rapidly selling first album in history, spurred on by skillful promotion and heavy FM radio play. Two songs—"More Than a Feeling" and "Peace of Mind"—were hit singles. A sold-out national tour followed, capping an incredible rise for a group that three months earlier had been only a dream of Polaroid engineer Tom Scholz. After seven years of making demo tapes alone in his basement, guitarist Scholz recruited a band when he finally landed a recording contract. Boston became living proof that the "overnight sensation" can really happen.

October 14, 1977:
Linda Ronstadt Sings National Anthem

Linda Ronstadt sings the "Star-Spangled Banner" at Game Three of the World Series in Dodger Stadium—a first among rock stars. With a broad spectrum of fans that crosses musical lines from pure country to basic rock, Ronstadt sits on top of the pop world, filling several stadiums on her own. Stardom hit Ronstadt after 10 frustrating years of ups and downs with the release of her fifth solo album, Heart Like a Wheel, in 1974. The disc was her first under British producer/manager Peter Asher, to whom she attributes a large part of her success. With a rich blend of rock, country and blues cuts, the Ronstadt album became the top-selling LP of 1974, and was followed by two more platinum discs by the time she sang at the Series.

February 23, 1978:
Fleetwood Mac Attack Comes to Grammy

Popular rock group Fleetwood Mac wins a Grammy Award for its album Rumours. Although 10 years old by name, the present group was formed in early 1975 when British founder Mick Fleetwood recruited two struggling West Coast musicians to fill out the band after the departure of guitarist Bob Welch. Lindsey Buckingham and Stevie Nicks gave Fleetwood Mac a totally new, upbeat sound. Without extraordinary promotion, the 1975 Fleetwood Mac album sold over eight million copies by mid-1976. Rumours did even better, quickly shooting to the top of the charts where it stayed for 33 weeks. The album sold over 13 million copies to become the top-selling LP in recording history.

Perhaps more than any other group, Fleetwood Mac—a band that is old and new, British and American, male and female—is the best example of the evolving sounds and styles of contemporary music in the Seventies. ◪

You Too Can Be a Rock Snob in Seven Easy Lessons

by DON AKCHIN

Malcolm is a dear friend, but not a true musical sophisticate. He gave it his best shot the other night. It fell short.

"You haven't heard this album?" he said. "Great stuff! Let me play you this one cut." Malcolm removed the disc from its jacket, carefully slipped it onto the turntable, squinted, and dropped the needle precisely into the proper groove. "Listen carefully to the words," Malcolm advised. "He's talking about all the things musicians do while they're on the road. It's a concept album," he added. "It's all about being a musician."

Poor Malcolm. I tried to smile graciously, but I was not very convincing. It was such an embarrassment, watching him mimic the motions perfectly only to botch up the content. There is absolutely nothing classy about turning a friend on to an album, such as Jackson Browne's Running on Empty, that's in the Top 10. Really, I had been hearing bits of it on the radio for weeks—and not FM, mind you, but AM, the lowest common denominator.

Jackson Browne is common knowledge. The essence of musical sophistication, on the other hand, is uncommon knowledge—the obscure album, the unknown artist. Contrast Malcolm's technique with my own:

"Have you heard this album?" I say, holding one up for viewing. "No," says Malcolm, "who is it?"

"Warren Zevon," I say. "He's written some songs for Linda Ronstadt, like "Poor Poor Pitiful Me."

"Yeah, that's a good song," says Malcolm.

"Listen to this one," I say, and drop the needle. Then I sit back and wait. Zevon sings a warped little ditty called "Werewolves of London." It knocks Malcolm's socks off. Before he can recover from the shock I hit him with "Desperados Under the Eaves" and "Roland the Headless Thompson Gunner." By evening's end, I have converted Malcolm into an admirer of both Warren Zevon's songs and my own avant-garde musical taste.

Musical sophistication looks easy. It is not. It is a difficult and challenging art form that few can master. My own command of it was the result of years of practice.

I have dedicated myself to scouting out the talented unknowns of our time and being among the first to herald their hidden greatness. I am performing a service, an educational mission: spreading the news to the uninitiated, bringing new light to the lives of the less lit.

I have little use for music that is already popular, not even the music of formerly obscure artists I helped promote to popular stardom. I am more interested in music that is known only to small cults. It is my obligation to stay ahead of the popular taste.

1 Gather leads from many sources.

Discovering new talent is a bit like detective work. I gather clues from many varied sources, compare notes, look for patterns and supplement my information with an intuition honed by experience.

Every sophisticate develops a personal method. My own often begins with record reviews in Rolling Stone, New Times and The Village Voice. These are helpful in keeping abreast of new releases. Word of mouth is useful when it comes from trusted friends with high standards of taste and proven good judgment. Employees of campus and commercial radio stations are a particularly valuable source of information (and records). Radio broadcasts cannot be ignored either. I listen to progressive FM stations at home, jotting down notes of interesting songs for later follow-up. In my car I use AM to keep posted on what's commercially successful. FM tells me whom to buy; AM tells me whom to ditch.

2 Specialize in one aspect of music and follow it to new leads and discoveries.

Specialization in, say, studio musicians, or record producers, can provide a handle for tracking down new talent. My own specialization is songwriters—a most fortunate choice for the Seventies, when singer/songwriters have had a real field day. Joni Mitchell, Jackson Browne, Kenny Loggins, Carole King, Randy Newman and Karla Bonoff are among those who were known for their writing before they were known for their vocal performances. I particularly lean to songwriters who set Gestalt psychology to music. It hits me where I live.

One of my best songwriter finds has been John David Souther, and I use him to illustrate how specialization can work. Souther remains relatively unknown, despite two solo albums, two albums with the Souther-Hillman-Furay Band, and earlier work with Longbranch Pennywhistle. But everybody has heard Souther songs sung by Linda Ronstadt: "Don't Cry Now," "Prisoner in Disguise," "Simple Man, Simple Dream," "Silver Blue," "Faithless Love," and "The Fast One." Reading songwriter credits on Ronstadt albums was how I discovered him, not surprisingly. Because his songs, if not his name, are familiar, they are an ideal reference point to use in introducing Souther, the artist, to friends.

3 Do not specialize in one style of music.

Do not confuse specialization in one aspect of music with specialization in one musical style. The former is useful, the latter disastrous. It is crucial to keep an open mind and not ignore everything except, for example, reggae. If your musical spectrum runs the gamut from Bob Marley to Burning Spear, you are far too narrow to be a true sophisticate; you are merely a reggae fanatic. If reggae goes out of fashion (or has it already?), your specialized knowledge is devalued sharply.

Early in my career I made the mistake of overspecializing. The genre I chose, country-rock, was fortunately a productive and major one, rising from obscurity to prominence to dominance, to my delight and disgust. But in my enthusiasm I narrowed my focus and closed out all else. As a result, I was far behind on another great genre of the time, jazz-rock. In retrospect I can see that the opportunities were there, but I missed them. Two of my college roommates were getting into jazz, and one even had a Grover Washington, Jr. album back in 1973. (This year Grover Washington, Jr. has an album in the Top 20, and my former roommate's reputation for taste-making is at an all-time high.) But by the time I awoke from my country-rock trance, it was too late. Jazz-rock was already gaining popularity. All I could do to cover myself was buy a few token Steely Dan albums and drop Chick Corea's name in conversations. During that same period, I also jeopardized my standing by ignoring Yes, Emerson

Out-Criticize the Critics!

Win Acclaim for Your Musical Genius!

Lake & Palmer, and the classical-rock movement. It was a costly mistake.

4 Risk is a necessary part of record-buying.

Musical sophistication requires a financial obligation in the form of albums. (Only the most popular artists are on prerecorded tapes, which rules them out.) Most of the albums I buy are not well-known when I buy them. Some of them never will be. But this risk must be taken. Buying only albums that are already popular is unthinkable. I am not a follower.

My preferred buying style is the five-album binge, similar to a Big Mac Attack but more expensive. I try to balance my selections (whenever I am being rational, which is not always). Some albums will be picked because I've heard one or two cuts on FM radio. Some will be selected because record reviews were favorable. And I buy some without benefit of either a hearing or a review.

Some risks turn out to be sleepers, some turn out to be dogs, and some are sleeping dogs. The losers are inevitable, but the sleepers can make your reputation for foresight and taste. Two of my most prized possessions, the debut albums of Rita Coolidge and Dan Fogelberg, were bought on impulse. When you play for big stakes, you must accept a few losses along with winners.

I do not discuss the losers unless some tactless soul, thumbing through my record collection, presses the issue.

5 When your taste is questioned, protect your credentials.

In explaining the presence of worthless albums in my otherwise sterling collection, I use one of three approaches:

1. The Candor Gambit—with a shrug of the shoulders I say, "That one's not so hot. It was a bad gamble."

2. Pass the Buck—with a laugh I say, "My kid sister gave me that for my birthday one year. It's awful!"

3. Offense Is Defense—with a sigh I say, "That record has its moments. Now there's an artist that really deserved a lot more attention than she got. But you know how it is with the popular taste." Then I quickly change the subject.

Most of the artists I support and promote eventually emerge from obscurity into the spotlight of popular appeal. At that point I usually disown them. It is not essential to do this, but it is logical. I relish belonging to an elite, knowledgeable cult. Success wipes out the allure of obscurity. There is no satisfaction in being one of 12 million people who own copies of Rumours. There is no sense of being avant-garde when a former hero hosts a television special or graces the cover of People. When artists become successful, I lose interest. I still have work to do, and it does not include adding to the glory of the famous. The famous can take care of themselves. The unknowns still need me.

Sometimes my disinterest is expressed more actively. I accuse my former champions of lowering their quality standards and "going commercial." It's often true, and it's almost always easy to get away with saying it. Once even the most popular rock 'n roll stars were unknown to the older generation, and young people were an enlarged cult group of insiders; they knew something their parents didn't. Nowadays much of rock has gone mainstream pop. If our parents aren't buying Elton John records, they've read all about him, Rod Stewart, the Rolling Stones and the rest on the way to the supermarket checkout, and they see them on television all the time.

Lead the Way for the Masses!

6 Do not denounce popular performers too soon or too harshly.

This is perhaps the trickiest part of musical sophistication. Timing is very important. Switching abruptly from promoting to denouncing an artist opens you to the serious charge of being fickle. You cannot promote Boz Scaggs to all your friends, then turn against him as soon as your friends take your advice and buy his album. This jeopardizes your reputation for consistent good taste. Wait at least six months.

Phrasing is also important. You must establish your own refined sensibility tactfully, without offending your friends who are still catching up with your trend-setting opinions. How do you tell them that you no longer share their enthusiasm for Jackson Browne, without suggesting that Browne fandom is passé?

I do it like this: "I really like his early stuff, but I find his newer material a bit ________(repetitive, less profound, less interesting)."

A rare problem is recognizing those rare performers who should not be denounced. A few actually do not prostitute themselves for money and fame, do not repeat themselves endlessly and are always capable of surprises. These are not merely artists, but Artists. Nothing is as embarrassing as denouncing an Artist and being forced to recant later.

My worst mistake in this regard (not including writing off the Beatles, which was done prior to attaining the age of reason) was rejecting Joni Mitchell too soon. I bought her first solo album—a collector's item called Song to a Seagull—and I was enchanted by her weird guitar playing and her weird minor chords. But by her third album she was moving to piano and major chords and a catchy, upbeat sound. I decided Joni had struck it rich and sold out, trading in her sad, spooky, mystical material for jolly jive. "Liked her early stuff," I told people who raved about Blue, "but she's changed." That was a bad move on my part. She kept right on changing, and she obviously hasn't sold out to anyone. I came back, with apologies.

By the way, her latest album sounds a lot like her first.

Musical sophistication is richly rewarding. Nothing compares with the thrill of introducing new music to people and seeing their enthusiastic response.

7 Acknowledge other musical sophisticates and learn from them.

When two true sophisticates get together, it is heaven. One fine moment of my life began innocently enough in my living room, where a stranger and I were discussing our common passion for Lovin' Spoonful songs. I mentioned a few of my favorites. He asked me about a tune, "Never Going Back."

In this case the shock was mine. I knew the song, but I didn't realize that the Lovin' Spoonful had ever recorded it. "But as a matter of fact," I said to the stranger, "I have another version of that song on an album here, by the guy who wrote it."

"Who's that?" he asked.

"John Stewart."

"No kidding! You've got a John Stewart album?"

"Four of them."

We exchanged broad knowing smiles and I pulled a few dusty, obscure albums from the rack. It was a magnificent evening. ◪

Noted feminists speak

200 rally to back women

SWEPT AWAY!
A NEW DAY IS DAWNING But THE COLLEGIAN IS STILL IN THE DARK AGES
THIS PRESS HAS OPPRESSED IS TOO LONG WE WANT REPRESENTATION

Two hundred people staged a rally and marched through Whitmore yesterday to support the occupation of the Collegian offices.

The demonstration was led by radical feminists Robin Morgan and Andrea Dworkin. The rally included speeches by Morgan, Dworkin and campus feminists.

Prof. Jan Raymond, representing Five-College Women's Studies, said "the struggle has been going on for centuries over our words. Women have waited too long for this occupation, she said.

"The demands women are making are so modest as being practically immoral. This is a battle over what women might say and write. The integration of women's news according to the Collegian's terms, means assimilation. "We are investing ourselves with the power of our own words. These words will not be taken from us," said Raymond.

A letter from Collegian Women's Editor Julie E. Melrose was read, accusing the Collegian of "distorting omitting, and censoring women's news."

Sheri Fleishman, a representative from Everywoman's Center said, "We need access to the media to keep information relative to women printed. Refusal to give women's news autonomous space shows that the only perspective is the male perspective," she added.

Prof. Ann Ferguson, of the philosophy department, supported the occupation by stating, "No oppressed group wins power without struggle. We need to continue to support each others struggle."

Nationally known feminist author Andrea Dworkin read a speech which appears in the special publication of the women's occupation support committee, which was distributed during the rally. Dworkin concluded her speech by quoting from Emmeline Pankhurst who said, "I incite this meeting to rebellion." The crowd reacted with applause, cheers and a standing ovation.

Radical feminist Robin Morgan, who has been coming to the Pioneer Valley for ten years, spoke of "massive mobilization of the right wing against the women's movement." She expressed support for the occupation and commented "the support we have on the women's side and on the other side you have the men and Chancellor Bromery."

Morgan approved of the feminist activism saying, "If you thought the 1960's have past you're wrong. On the other hand if they thought the 1960's have past they were wrong."

After the rally, supporters marched to Whitmore chanting, "Bombard Bromery, freedom of the press," and "free speech for women." Entry to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery's office was denied. Protesters were told Bromery was not in the office. However, a spokesman from the UMass News Bureau said Bromery was in the office during the demonstration.

The march proceeded to the Collegian offices. Cheers and applause demonstrated outside support for the women occupying the office. The group sang support songs for spectators and chanted, "Support our sisters sitting in."

One hundred protesters broke off from the group at the Campus Center and went to the temporary Collegian Office in Goodell Hall. Outside the doors they sang for 20 minutes. The Collegian locked the doors to the office during the protest. The group left peacefully but said, "We'll be back."

Negotiations suspended

Negotiations between the Collegian and member's of the women's community were temporarily suspended yesterday after a group of about 100 protesters marched on the Collegian offices in Goodell.

"We suspended negotiations as a direct result of their intimidating actions at the Goodell offices," said Collegian sports editor Michael Smolens, a member of the negotiating team.

Smolens said the Collegian had received "a guarantee that there would be no action taken against the Goodell office from Julie Melrose through university ombudsman Robert Wellman. Melrose is Women's editor of the Collegian and one of the leaders of the occupation.

Chris Decker, a member of the women's negotiating team, said last night that the protest "wasn't planned." Decker said she felt that women who marched were "riding high from the rally in the SUB"

Decker said that Melrose made the guarantee for members of the occupation support group. "The march today involved members of the UMass women's community in general, most of whom we haven't worked with," said Decker.

Decision on grades delayed

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Society of Professors yesterday delayed a final decision on whether to withhold student grades from the administration and instead left the decision to its executive board.

The executive board will meet tomorrow at 4 p.m.

In other business, the MSP tabled indefinitely a proposal which would have broken a "housekeeping" agreement that was made with the administration last summer.

The agreement in part says no media releases concerning contract negotiations will be made without mutual consent. Faculty members said they wished to break the agreement in order to present a union perspective on the status of current contract negotiations, which have recently been stalled.

Each side has accused the other of breaking off the talks, which began last summer.

The MSP has been discussing withholding of grades as part of a "job-action" to protest the break in talks.

Some faculty members at the meeting yesterday said withholding grades might not have enough support to be effective. They questioned faculty support, student support, and support from the union at the UMass-Boston campus.

The MSP is the Amherst unit of the faculty union. Together with the Faculty Staff Union at UMass-Boston, the union represents some 2000 faculty members.

MSP negotiator and former MSP President Larry S. Roberts said he believes recent faculty actions, primarily the picketing of the Whitmore administration building, have begun to have an effect.

"The pressure applied is being felt," Roberts said. "I think the picketing is having an effect."

Current MSP President James E. Cathey said approximately one-third, or 400, of faculty members have joined the MSP.

Harvard law prof pushed by trustees for UM pres.

According to the Associated Press UMass Trustees are pushing James Vorenberg, a Harvard Law professor, for the position of UMass president.

The Board of Trustees will hear the report of the Presidential Search Committee on Monday.

Vorenberg, an assistant Dean of the Harvard Law School, has been one of the candidates under consideration.

The Presidential Search Committee has been conducting interviews since President Robert C. Wood stepped down in September 1977. Franklin K. Patterson has been interim president.

David Knapp, another candidate, is scheduled to be interviewed on May 11.

S.G.A. President Robert Dion confirmed that a Board of Trustee meeting is scheduled for Monday in Boston. He did not know what was to be discussed.

The Board of Trustees met last Wednesday. They usually schedule meetings for once a month only.

An informed source told the Collegian last night, "It seems to me it would be awful damn quick. It (the meeting) must be to talk about all the candidates."

"I really can't see anybody now that has a clear run at it," the source said.

Bang the drums loudly; UM hosts Super Bowl

By NIEL MOELLER
Collegian Staff

Music dept. Assistant Professor George Parks is busier than usual lately, preparing for what he hopes will become an annual summer musical event in Amherst.

Parks is organizing Super Bowl V, a "Super Bowl of Music", which will feature five nationally ranked Senior Drum Corps competing for places in the national championship competition.

Parks, the UMass Marching Band Director, is himself drum major of a group, — the Reading, Pennsylvania Buccaneers — which will compete, and is enthusiastic about the event to be held at Alumni Stadium.

One half of all proceeds will be donated to the Belchertown State School Friends Association, said Parks. Sponsors include the Fine Arts Center and the Dept. of Music and Dance along with the marching band.

Drum Corps competition is growing in popularity nationally, according to Parks. Crowds of 10,000 at regional competitions like that to be held here are not uncommon, he said, and he is expecting a large turnout.

Those belonging to drum corps include the naturally musically inclined as well as music professionals, said Parks.

"The musicality is surprisingly good. I think the expression (of marching bands) is unsurpassed," he said.

The music played ranges over a variety of styles, including classical, jazz, pop, and rock music, said Parks. A sampling of what is to be played by one group in August includes works by Rimsky-Korsikov, Chuck Mangione, and Stevie Wonder.

After a two year lapse Parks wants to revive the event, originally sponsored from 1972-75 by the Belchertown Friends Association, which donated all proceeds to the school. Some of the money earned in August from ticket sales will go to the band as well as the Belchertown School.

The event will be the only one of its kind in Massachusetts this year, said Parks. Corps from Connecticut and Rhode Island, along with a 1977 champion drum corps from Long Island, N.Y., and a group from Canada will compete. There are two such meets around the nation each weekend between Memorial Day and the Labor Day championships.

Guards watch Collegian offices

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

UMass administrators have directed UMass Director of Security Saul L. Chafin to arrange for guards to provide security at the Collegian offices for both Collegian staff and occupiers.

Last weekend two UMass security guards (one who was generally assigned to the Campus Center and one working overtime) were assigned to the outside area of the occupied Collegian offices.

A security guard armed only with a walkie-talkie is also placed outside the relocated Collegian office in Goodell Hall at all times the staff is present. Both male and female guards have been assigned to the Goodell office since last Thursday.

Chafin yesterday said all questions should be directed towards members of the administration in Whitmore.

A UMass News Bureau spokesman said the guards were posted outside the Collegian office on the first level of the Campus Center because "everyone was worrying that somebody would do something stupid down at the Collegian office.

"The ground rules for last week was that we wanted to keep both sides cool," the spokesman said.

Correction

The Collegian's temporary phone number was incorrectly printed yesterday. The numbers are: 545-0384, 545-0463, 545-0464. The temporary office is located in Rm. 608, Goodell Hall.

Suspension rumor declared false

Rumors circulating around campus yesterday claiming UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery was going to suspend those persons occupying the Collegian office are totally unfounded, a UMass News Bureau spokesman said yesterday.

Dean of Students William F. Field will meet, however, with the Student Judiciary Committee to discuss the occupiers breach of a student judiciary restraining order, the spokesman said.

One of the penalties of disobeying the student restraining order can be academic suspension, Barry Benson, a student court clerk said at the time he served the order last Monday.

Shakespeare Co. to perform at FAC

The National Shakespeare Company is coming to the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall this Thursday and Friday to perform two plays as part of the Fine Arts Center Concert Series.

The company will perform "As You Like It" on Thursday night and "Othello" on Friday night. Both performances will be at 8 p.m.

"As You Like It" will be directed by Sue Lawless and "Othello" will be directed by company and artistic director Philip Meister.

The company is one of the oldest in the country and is celebrating its 15th anniversary this year.

Tickets are on sale at the Fine Arts Center box office and all New England Ticketron locations.

Index office moves; yearbook 'in a bind'

The Index has been forced to relocate its office as a result of the Collegian occupation but the exact location was not known last night.

Editor Rebecca Greenberg said the occupation has put the staff "in a bind" since little work has been accomplished since the doors of the lobby outside the Index office were barricaded eight days ago.

Greenberg said the staff should try to contact her as soon as possible about their stories and photos.

A new Index phone number should be available today from the Campus Assistance Desk.

Police arrest three in motor vehicles

UMass police arrested three men in motor vehicle related incidents and one on an assault and battery warrant yesterday, a spokesperson said.

Jeffrey Morris of 58 Stockton St., Dorchester, Mass., was arrested for unauthorized use of a motor vehicle with intent to commit a felony and larceny over $100.

Kenneth Lee Johnston of 62 Elmhill Ave., Boston, was also arrested for unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, use of a motor vehicle while committing a felony, and larceny over $100.

Patrick J. O'Brien of 353 South St., Northampton, was arrested for use of a motor vehicle without authority, and larceny of a motor vehicle.

Ferdinand B. Singleton of 22 North Village, Amherst, was arrested on a warrant for assault and battery with intent to commit a felony, and larceny over $100.

Com Stu students to reenact trial

By CLAUDE B. TETREAULT
Collegian Staff

A group of Communications Studies students tonight will reenact the trial of Ronald Zamora, who, in the landmark case, blamed television viewing for the murder of an elderly woman.

The presentation is an effort to show the guilty verdict may have been different if the defense attorney had been allowed to call on psychiatrists and other expert witnesses.

The Ronald Zamora case was the first trial in which murder was blamed on television watching. Zamora said he murdered the elderly woman because of his viewing of hundreds of hours of television shows.

Defense attorney Ellis Rubin argued that the boy was not guilty by reason of insanity due to "prolonged intense, involuntary, subliminal, television intoxication."

The students have been doing research on the social impact of television and other forms of communication. The Zamora Trial was selected because of its timely nature and the many interesting questions it raises about the effects of television violence.

In their reenactment of the trial, students will role play experts on the effects of children's television.

Tape played wrong; WMUA says error

Part of a tape of speeches at yesterday's support rally was played at the wrong speed yesterday afternoon on WMUA. The station spokesmen attribute it to faulty equipment while Women's Editor Julie Melrose claims it was deliberate.

"I noticed that it was slightly off," said Peter Dickow, a WMUA news director who taped and played the selections of the Andrea Dworkin speech. "But I thought what she was saying was more important," he said adding that the batteries for the tape recorder were faulty.

Melrose said she disapproved of the technicians playing the tape knowing that it was in error. "If that was the case, it was in very poor taste to play it," she said.

"I called and said the women's community thought it was not an accident," Melrose said adding that the women's community "formed a telephone line," after they heard the broadcast. "The stories were inconsistent," she said of the explanations given by the radio station.

Melrose added that "women on this campus are watching the media group very carefully."

Selectmen cut gov. budget by $8,000

By FRAN BASCHE
and SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

The Amherst town meeting last night continued its snail-paced work on the proposed budgetary Article 16 contained in the 62-article warrant.

The annual town meeting will reconvene Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. at the Amherst Regional Junior High School.

Town meeting members last night defeated the Finance Committee's recommended $194,634 general government portion of the town budget. Instead, the meeting approved a motion cutting the general government budget to $186,849, and leaving it up to the Finance Committee, Board of Selectmen and Town Manager to decide where the cuts will come.

The approved motion was an amended version of a motion offered earlier by town meeting member William Gurski that called for a $186,849 general government budget, with the four percent cuts coming across the board.

The vote to defeat the Fin. Comm. recommended budget came in the middle of a three-hour debate between meeting members and town officials over where and how the cuts can be made.

Before approving the amended Gurski motion, the town meeting defeated a motion from meeting member George McDowell to fix the general government budget at $193,000, cutting $1,634 from the proposed $60,000 Reserve Fund. Finally they voted approval of the amended Gurski motion.

The final approval of the general government budget, which is a slight increase over last year's $184,857 appropriation, capped a wild night at town meeting.

As in the previous two town meeting sessions there were numerous procedural battles among town meeting members and town officials.

Selectman William C. Atkins opened the night by making a motion that town meeting return the total proposed $3,921,919 operating budget to the Finance Committee and the Town Manager for cuts of no less than $200,000 and no more than $270,000, and to bring it back to town meeting no later than May 22.

Town meeting defeated the motion 107-97 and three members of the Board of Selectmen breathed a large sigh of relief. Atkins and Selectman Roger C. Jacque voted for the motion.

The motion to refer the total town operating budget back to the town officials was similar to the motion which was defeated by two votes during last Monday's session of town meeting.

Last Monday that motion seemed to catch town meeting by surprise, leaving them confused in their voting. But, last night there was no confusion when they voted Atkins' motion down.

★ Grades decision

faculty union's Boston unit, expressed doubt her organization would support withholding grades.

"We look at this as an action that could really hurt students and their parents," she said. "Our sentiment is running strongly against on the Boston campus."

Faculty member Peter Derrico said Boston faculty are considering a strike as a possible job action. That report could not be confirmed last night.

Alvin Winder, a faculty member who is chairman of a committee which yesterday presented a method of withholding the grades should that decision be made, said faculty representatives will appear before the Undergraduate Student Senate to ask the group's help and support on withholding grades.

"My guess is that we have a good chance of getting it," Winder said. "The whole point to all this is to bring some sense in the Commonwealth that we are serious."

No representative of the senate could be reached last night.

"I think the majority of students will support us," said MSP Vice-President for Internal Affairs John Bracey. Another faculty member said student support would "ultimately be in their best interests" because the action was designed to strengthen the faculty which would in turn strengthen students.

Other faculty members repeatedly said withholding grades would not have enough support.

"There are large numbers of faculty who think this is silly and foolish," said Roland Chilton. It was Chilton who proposed the move to break the "housekeeping" agreement.

The committee headed by Winder presented tentative guidelines for withholding grades. Under the plan he outlined, faculty members would make a copy of grading rosters which are normally turned in to Whitmore for processing by OSCAR, UMass' infamous computer. The copies would be sent to the MSP office in the Graduate Research Center. Original grades of seniors, transfer students, and students on financial aid — those students who would be hurt most by the withholding — would be sent to Whitmore.

If students wishes to obtain their grades, they would be able to give their professors a postcard with which they would be able to give grades out on.

Some faculty members questioned the legality of withholding grades.

"This kind of action is not an illegal action," Derrico said. "As far as the question of legality is concerned, I think you ought to put that aside."

$3.5 million cost

Heat plant needs pollution control

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

The university has been forced by the Lower Pioneer Valley Air Pollution Control Department to install a $3.5 million pollution control device on the old coal-fire campus heating plant because the new $10 million Tillson Farms heating plant has not yet been fixed.

UMass has been given two extensions on installing the control devices, because it was thought the newer Tillson Farms oil-heating plant would take over the job of heating the campus.

The first extension was given in the early 1970's when the Tillson plant was first proposed. The 10 million dollar plant was finished in 1974, but worked only eight months before it broke down. The second extension was then given to the university on the assumption that the Tillson plant would be prepared and utilized.

In July of 1977, when no plans for fixing the Tillson plant were proposed, the air pollution control dept. brought the university and the Bureau of Building Construction, which is responsible for state university buildings, to the office of the state attorney general for legal intervention.

Robert Vachule, an engineer for the control dept. last night said the department was not blaming UMass for the delay in conforming to pollution standards. "It was an ambiguous thing," he said.

Voluche said the confusion surrounding the Tillson plant was the main reason for the delay. "No one new which direction it was going to take," he said.

Van Derleeden said the funding will be about $3.5 million and will come from a state capital outlay.

The device is still in the design stage and it will take two or three years to install according to Van Derleeden. The device will be a bag house type which is a large bag backed by a fan which sucks in the ash and fumes.

The ash will be loaded onto trucks and dumped into a landfill area. The exact area has not been determined Van Derleeden said, but he speculated that it could be behind the Campus Center Garage where some ash is now dumped.

Van Derleeden said he did not know when or if the Tillson Farms plant will be restored. Last year the University Board of Trustees voted to fix the new plant then "mothball" it because the coal-fired heating plant is currently more economical to use. The coal fired plant was built at the turn of the century when the university was an agriculture school.

Dorm funds threatened unless charters revised

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

All RSO funds for dormitories will be withheld from dormitories that have not updated their constitutions by Sept. 1 according to Student Governmental Affairs Constitutional Consultant Dave Leary, at the Central Area Council Meeting last night.

Leary spoke to Central Area Council last night in its last meeting of the semester.

After a campaign in February to audit dormitory constitutions, Leary declared "All dormitory constitutions invalid, and dorms were given until May 17 to update them.

"Most of the constitutions are out of date," said Leary. "Either the dorm turned co-ed or does not know some of the Student Government Association rules pertaining to conditions."

A booklet to aid dormitories was distributed which outlined the guidelines of writing a dorm constitution and explained that each dormitory must have a judicial system, said Leary.

Leary advises dormitories to write a rough draft of the updated constitution and then contact him for approval. The constitution must also be ratified by two-thirds of 50 percent of the dorm population, and must have Leary's signature before it can be accepted by the registrar.

"So far only one dorm in Central has contacted me," said Leary. "The funds will be frozen Sept. 1, the first day of classes, and the Student Senate cannot vote on this decision because it is a ruling from governmental affairs."

Leary said he can be contacted by calling the Student Senate office. Council Co-President Arthur Thomas said area governments will go before the Student Senate budgets committee tomorrow night. Thomas said $9.10 per student has been proposed for Central Area. "The council can justify $10 per student to the budgets committee," said Thomas. "There has been an increase in SATF funds in the last years, yet there has been a decrease in the amount per student to the area governments".

The Council allocated $20 for each Central Area dormitory to use before the end of the semester. The funds can be used for anything except food.

The remaining $1500 council money will be used to purchase sound equipment for the area. The council unanimously granted the executive council power to purchase the sound equipment for the area with the remaining $1500 of council money. The Orchard Hill-Central Mens Center was allocated $250 to purchase books on contraception, and other men's and women's issues.

Berkowitz pleads guilty to six killings

NEW YORK [AP] — Without the slightest outward flicker of emotion, David R. Berkowitz pleaded guilty yesterday to the six random .44-caliber killings committed during a year-long reign of terror as the furtive Son of Sam.

"I'm an excellent shot," Berkowitz said quietly at one stage in a unique interrogation by three different judges.

At another point, the 24-year-old Berkowitz cooly detailed the slaying of 18-year-old Donna Lauria of the Bronx, the first of his six victims.

"You bastard," the girl's mother, Rose, sobbed through a handkerchief from a fourth-row seat in the courtroom where emotions among parents of the victims ran high and seemed in stark contrast to the defendant's self-control.

Berkowitz faces a maximum of 25 years to life in prison for each of the six slayings and a maximum of 25 years in prison for the attempted murder of seven victims who escaped with injuries. Sentencing was set for May 22 on all counts.

However, under New York State law, any cumulative sentence for the ex-serviceman and former postal clerk cannot exceed 30 years to life, making him eligible to apply for parole when he is 54.

The only surprise in the 2½-hour hearing came when Bronx District Attorney Mario Merola revealed that Berkowitz kept a diary in which he logged up to 2,000 arson fires he claimed to have set, predominantly in the Bronx, from 1974-1977 — a period overlapping his savage career as the night-time Son of Sam.

Not once in his lengthy question and answer session was Berkowitz asked, nor did he volunteer, information about his widely publicized role as Son of Sam. He had said previously that he was driven to kill by hordes of demons marshaled by a 6,000-year-old devil incarnate whom he identified as a Yonkers neighbor, 64-year-old Sam Carr.

During psychiatric examinations Berkowitz claimed Sam passed on orders to kill through the older man's dog.

"It gets dark and I can't sleep," Berkowitz told psychiatrists who eventually pronounced him mentally competent to stand trial. "I pick out nice streets where there are pretty girls, you know, young couples, where they're neat, clean and well-groomed, you know, they have good hygiene."

The interrogation of Berkowitz ran in reverse from his final victim, Stacy Moskowitz, a blond 20-year-old Brooklyn girl, to the original Bronx shooting one year and two days earlier of Miss Lauria that launched the bloodbath on July 29, 1976.

New York abandoned capital punishment some time ago and only recently Gov. Hugh Carey successfully vetoed an attempt by the legislature to reinstate the death penalty.

Since the Son of Sam slayings occurred in three of New York City's five boroughs, three judges took part in the interrogation of Berkowitz before allowing him to change his pleas.

Pilot tells details of chopper crash

POMONA, N.J. [AP] — The pilot of an ill-fated oil helicopter told federal investigators here yesterday his aircraft suddenly flipped over on its right side as he ditched into the frigid Atlantic Ocean.

The co-pilot and a high-ranking official of the U.S. Geological Survey were killed, and three others were injured Sunday when the 19-passenger French-made helicopter crashed 40 miles east of Atlantic City on a routine flight to Shell's semi-submersible drilling rig, Western Pacesetter II.

Investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board and the Federal Aviation Administration interviewed the survivors at the Atlantic City Medical Center here yesterday. The officials said they would inspect the helicopter's wreckage Tuesday in Davisville, R.I., where it was brought Monday by an oil workboat.

Pilot Don Gillam, 41, of New Orleans, told investigators he was flying east at 5,000 feet when his helicopter's transmission suddenly made a loud whining sound and cockpit warning lights indicated a loss in transmission fluid.

Herbert W. R. Banks, NTSB air safety investigator, said Gillam also reported a loss of power as he made the distress call, "Mayday", and brought the helicopter down for an emergency landing.

Just feet above the water, Gillam said, the helicopter spun to its right and plunged sideways into the calm, 42-degree seas.

Banks said the helicopter's emergency inflatable pontoons apparently worked, but the aircraft capsized because of its position.

Coast Guard helicopters rescued three men who managed to scramble to a life raft. Gillam, Jack Willock, 46, of Springfield, Va., an employee of the U.S. Geological Survey; and Jerry Jackson, 32, of Mararo, La., an employee of Sperryson Well Surveying Co.; were reported in stable condition here yesterday.

Banks said the survivors, who refused to talk to reporters, told him they didn't remember how they got out of the helicopter. Banks said this was not unusual.

Coast Guard divers recovered two bodies from the cockpit of the helicopter, which floated submerged and upside down for several hours.

The bodies of Paul Perrino, 27, of Ludlow, Vt., the co-pilot, and William Gazdik, about 60, of Wheaton, Md., assistant Eastern regional conservation manager for the U.S. Geological Survey, were returned to Atlantic City by Coast Guard boat shortly after midnight Sunday.

The helicopter is owned by Petroleum Helicopters Inc. of Lafayette, La., which specializes in air transportation to and from offshore oil rigs.

Grad Senate - Secretary

Paula Cabot

By ROB STEIN
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note — The Graduate Student Senate will be holding elections for next year's officers Thursday, May 11 at seven o'clock in Campus Center rooms 162-175. The offices of president and vice president will be elected by vote of all graduate students at the meeting and the offices of secretary and treasurer will be elected by all graduate student senators at the meeting. Any graduate student wishing to run for an office should contact the Graduate Senate office.

Paula Cabot is the only candidate so far for secretary of the Graduate Student Senate. She is a graduate student in the Sports Studies department. She was active in getting a representative into the senate from her department.

What do you see as the role of the Graduate Senate in the university?

"To serve the graduate students at the university. This is a very large university and there is no other organizations that took into consideration their concerns. So obviously it's to serve the students, to represent them."

What do you see as the role of the secretary in the Graduate Student Senate?

"I think it's a responsibility position. It's a lot of menial work, but it's a very important position as far as co-ordinating activities, getting things in on time and getting them at people's disposal. It would allow me, also, to sit back and observe how the senate operates so that I could learn the mechanics of the senate."

Do you have any special ideas or goals that you would like to accomplish in office?

"Only what I've already said about learning about the senate and how it operates so that in the future I might become more involved at a higher level."

Would you be a strongly political member of the senate or act on a more technical level?

"I see myself as political in that if I see something that I believe in and needs working on I'll stand up for it. That's one of the reasons I'm running for this office, I see things that should be done and I want to be part of it."

Wichita to vote on anti-gay law

WICHITA, Kan. [AP] — The Rev. Ron Adrian, campaigning to repeal an anti-discrimination law that protects homosexuals, says he is raising a "conservative voice for moral decency."

Robert Lewis, co-director of the Homophile Alliance of Sedgwick County, sees it differently. "Civil rights is the issue," he says. "Morals are an individual matter."

Today, the voters of Wichita will decide in a special election whether to repeal an amendment to the city's civil rights ordinance that has made it illegal to discriminate against homosexuals in housing, employment or public accommodations.

It is only the latest in a series of such votes.

In Miami, a similar amendment was repealed last fall, after a campaign led by entertainer Anita Bryant and fundamentalist clergymen. Two weeks ago, a homosexual rights law was repealed in St. Paul, Minn., in a drive led by a Baptist minister.

Another vote is scheduled later this month in Eugene, Ore., but there opponents of the ordinance are downplaying religious arguments.

Not so in Wichita, an industrial city of 270,000 in the heart of the nation's wheat belt.

Adrian, 35-year-old pastor of the Glenville Bible Baptist Church, cites "the word of God" as he leads the Concerned Citizens for Community Standards.

He says the law lets homosexuals "flaunt and manifest their lifestyles as role models for our children," and that it legislates "a point of view opposed to the word of God."

His group was formed about two years ago to fight pornography and X-rated theaters. Miss Bryant's "Protect Our Children" group has contributed $10,000 to the current drive, says the Miami group's executive director, Edward Rowe.

Adrian is not the only clergyman involved — and his is not the only side they support. After Roman Catholic Bishop David Maloney supported repeal in a pastoral letter, a group of dissident priests, nuns and laymen distributed information supporting the law.

Adrian dismisses the notion that civil rights are involved. "A true minority is born a minority, like blacks or Indians," he says. "These people choose the way they live." He calls the law "an effort on the part of a small group of people to ask us to approve of their immoral lifestyle."

Lewis, on the other hand, insists that since the law was adopted, "the gay community has established itself as a viable part of this community," and he insists that civil rights is the issue. "I certainly stand up for their opponents' right to believe the way they do. I morally feel that homosexuality is all right."

UFW recovers contracts with Calif. grape growers

FRESNO, Calif. [AP] — The United Farm Workers announced yesterday that it has reached contract agreements with seven table grape growers at Delano, Calif., where Cesar Chavez began his long battle to represent field hands 13 years ago.

The contracts are with growers where a majority of workers voted for UFW representation during the first weeks of California's historical agricultural secret-ballot union elections in 1975. They include an agreement with M. Caratan, where the UFW won its first major victory in those elections which were aimed at ending years of union-farmer strife.

"This marks the first big success in the UFW's drive to recover grape contracts lost in 1973 when most Delano grape growers signed with the Teamsters after their UFW agreements expired," said union spokesman Marc Grossman.

"The same Delano vineyards were originally struck by the UFW at the beginning of the 1965 Delano grape strike."

That 1965 strike and a later boycott of table grapes launched Chavez into national prominence.

The UFW and Delano grape growers signed a contract in 1970, but the growers refused to renew it three years later, charging that Chavez had mismanaged the UFW hiring hall that supplied workers.

Delano's 29 table grape growers signed with the Teamsters in 1973, spurring renewed picketing that led to 3,500 arrests of UFW supporters and the shooting death of one picket.

Chavez then suspended the strike but renewed the boycott, which he ended earlier this year on grounds that the state's Agricultural Labor Relations Act was working.

That act was adopted in 1975 by the Legislature under pressure from Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. to guarantee secret ballot farm union elections.

In the first four months of voting in 1975, the state conducted 400 elections. The UFW won most of the individual ranch elections and almost a majority of the overall vote, but the Teamsters led in total victories at Delano grape vineyards.

SEC document reveals Textron helicopter bribe

WASHINGTON [AP] — Textron Inc. said yesterday that evidence showing a company unit had paid a $300,000 bribe to sell helicopters in Ghana was destroyed the day after G. William Miller was asked about the transaction at his Senate hearings to be Federal Reserve chairman.

Textron, the parent corporation of Bell Helicopter, made the disclosure in a document filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Miller is former chairman of Textron.

Textron's SEC filing said there is "no indication" that Textron officers including Miller knew that a bribe had been demanded by a high Ghanaian military official or that funds had been made available to pay it.

However, Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, called on the Department of Justice to determine where the destruction of an internal Bell memo "constitutes the basis for criminal prosecution.

Police officers and firefighters strike for higher wages in Ohio

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio [AP] — About 1,300 Youngstown city employees went on strike for higher wages today, leaving this northeast Ohio city of 140,000 without normal fire and police protection.

Mayor J. Phillip Richley said he would go to court this morning to seek a temporary restraining order halting the strike and to clear the way for him to request National Guard troops.

Police Detective Peter Dalesio said about 12 police officers were left on duty. "However, the officers on strike have agreed to respond to any extreme emergency," he said.

A dispatcher at the fire department said that after the firefighters walk out, "only the chief will be left on duty." He said he did not know whether firefighters also had agreed to respond to emergency calls.

Some 2,000 workers could be affected by the walkout.

STUDENTS UNITED FOR PUBLIC EDUCATION

supported by many other campus groups presented a united front at the Board of Trustee meeting May 3.

SUPE called for the Board to

1. Support and adopt our program of
   No budget cuts, no tuition hikes
   No to the Parks plan for re-organization or any similar plan.
   No public monies to private schools
   No students or faculty on budget cutting committees.

2. Hold public forums on this campus at least once a semester.

These issues will not end with the semester. SUPE will continue to fight against the decline of qulaity public higher education.

Stop by the SUPE table on Wednesday, Thursday or Friday. Sign up to work with SUPE over the summer; find out what SUPE will be working on in the fall.

Help preserve Hadley

To the Editor:

Controversy has risen to a peak concerning the new Hampshire Mall being built by the Pyramid Corp. of Dewitt, New York, on rte. 9. I am writing to urge your support, along with the readers of the Collegian, to help in the fight to preserve Rte. 9, and the surrounding area, from becoming a commercial wasteland.

Recently, a citizens group from Hadley and an owner of Mountain Farms Mall have filed separate suits in order to stop the construction of the complex.

Tuesday night, May 9th at 7:30 p.m., a meeting of the Citizens for the Preservation of Hadley will be held in the North Hadley Village Hall on Rte. 47. All of you concerned with keeping the Amherst-Northampton area clear of such building projects, are urged to be there.

Any support will aid in keeping some of the most fertile land in New England from being dug up and covered with acres of worthless asphalt.

Andrew R. Beaudry

Fast walker writes

To the Editor:

The idea of submitting a letter to the Collegian has been an intriguing concept since my arrival on campus as a transfer student from Worcester Tech. in January 1978. Recently, I have found some of my views are shared by others as evidenced by letters regarding the inconsiderate overtaking of the Collegian office area by a feminist group. This matter [already over-played and probably just what the feminists want] led to the final materialization of this letter. As this has been discussed to an excess already, I believe, I will not dwell on it here. Rather, I shall discuss a matter which affects us all [including those occupying the Collegian offices].

I refer to the expenditure of unnecessary energy and the accelerated pace of life. It was assumed this topic was thoroughly discussed in excess already, though the individual who wrote in at the end of April or beginning of March accusing the 55 mph speed limit as the case of the increase in automobile accidents, leads me to believe otherwise. Also I personally know of several students who think nothing of hopping into their cars and "going to the Cape" on weekends.

The underlying principle of the 55 mph speed limit was to conserve energy which this country is extremely dependent upon. It was not implemented to create the friction which exists between people and their objectives. If people would plan their time better their immediate arrival would not be necessary.

A couple points pertinent and worth mentioning here to illustrate my claim. I was always considered a fast walker and eater by my peers and family members at home. I found when I arrived here, this was not so. Most on campus walk faster than I and a visitor eating at the D.C. must think that the consumption of all digestables in a matter of seconds was imperative to the lives of others!

In closing let me say that if the people of this planet don't soon regard it and its resources as a limited and finite source unable to constantly refurbish itself, little future will come in the hereafter. People must slow down and enjoy the little time each of us is allotted on earth.

Concert not success

To the Editor:

Being one of the two thousand students that attended the Spring Concert, I address this letter to you with the utmost severity as well as sincerity.

In the front page article, Monday, May 8, ["Few Turn Out For Music Festival"], it was stated that Stanley Kinard, the festival coordinator, "felt that morally and spiritually it was a success." I must say that I strongly disagree. I will concede that the caliber of music was highly commendable and the afternoon spent was most enjoyable however, I was infuriated by the minimal participation of the Black and Third World Communities.

To my recall, there was a great controversy over having a Black American Music Festival in a school which is approximately seven percent black. Yet, out of fear of the sublime accusation [racist], the white population subordinated its beliefs to this cultural event. Thus, the Black American Music Festival came to pass. My disappointment stems from the fact that out of two thousand students, I would assert that eighty percent were white. If it was so insatiably important that the festival be black, then why was the black and Third World attendance so poor? Is there a viable explanation for such hypocracy?

Oppose administrative action

To the Editor:

I have become quite alarmed that the Collegian Board of Editors has chosen, with the strong support of the staff, to ask the UMass administration to intervene and attempt to remove the women who are now occupying the Collegian offices. Were this an issue that the Collegian board sympathized with, it would not only fail to ask for interference from Whitmore, but in fact publicly oppose such action.

The women have apparently occupied the newspaper's offices as a measure to force the papers' editors to deal directly with the issue. Should Chancellor Bromery become involved and police force or disciplinary action implemented — the Collegian will have acted to skirt an issue that is in their greatest interest to conflict.

I call on every member of the Collegian staff, as student reporters, editors and publishers, many of who will become members of the professional media upon graduation, to take a close look at the issues involved. You may discover that the access of the printed page by women and the freedom of the press I have so often heard expounded, are synonymous.

I wholeheartedly applaud the women's efforts.

LETTERS

As a result of the current occupation of the Collegian offices, we do not have access to some letters submitted prior to the occupation and are thus unable to publish them.

For the duration of the occupation, readers wishing to submit letters may leave them in the Collegian mailbox, at the Bus Ticket window in the lobby of the hotel, on the third floor of the Campus Center.

A workable compromise?

bob melia

Unlike virtually every other column and letter concerning the feminists' occupation of the Collegian this one does not criticize or support either the women or the Collegian, for the battle-lines have been drawn in such a way that I do not think I can be both partisan and constructive.

Rather, my aim here is at once more modest and more bold than that of the other articles. More modest because I do not think that any completely, or even largely satisfactory settlement can be arranged in a short period of time; more bold because I will articulate a compromise which I hope will work to the advantage of the women, the Collegian and the campus.

The Collegian news department does a good job of getting "hard" news into the paper each day. To do that job well requires a certain type of story selection (editing) and writing style. Unfortunately, that type of editing and writing is too often incompatible with the type of news that the feminists would like to see in the paper.

I think most of us agree that women's news has an importance that transcends the women's community and should certainly have a place in the paper. But for traditional and non-traditional news to coexist peacefully in the Collegian, change will have to occur in both the consciousness of the people working at the Collegian and in the structure of the Collegian.

Regarding consciousness, Collegian staffers will have to become more sensitive to the feminist perspective, and the women occupying the office must realize that to participate in the paper means just that: participate. Thus the inclusion of a feminist perspective in the Collegian by means of separate pages is not a viable long-run option.

Regarding structure, the organization of the Collegian must facilitate interaction and promote equality between the two groups, as well has promote the skill development of the women and enhance the sensitivity of the current Collegian staff.

This is a demanding agenda; one not to be completed overnight and all in one phase. Accordingly, my compromise suggestion has three stages, each designed to make possible a time when there will not be Collegian newswriters on the one hand and Collegian feminists on the other, but simply Collegian staffers.

The first stage: accept the women's demand for one separate page each day (with 25 percent of each page devoted to advertisement), for a period of one year. I remarked previously that long-term separation is not a viable option. It is not.

If I understand them properly, the feminists are insisting on separate pages because they think they cannot accomplish their purpose, if integrated, because of a hostile Collegian structure and some personality problems. They are probably correct. But to desire permanently institutionalized separatism is counterproductive, for it will insure that the inimicable structure (which caused much of the problem in the first place) remains intact. And by limiting themselves to five pages a week, they will minimize their influence over the other, possibly sexist, 95 pages a week.

But a separation of one year could accomplish some good. First, it would provide a supportive atmosphere for feminist writers new to the paper. Second, the feminists would know that they would eventually be integrated, which would spur their developing the skills needed to fully participate in the paper. Third, both the staff and the feminists, knowing that at the end of the year they would be dealing with each other on a daily basis as equals, would have the time and incentive to create a workable relationship.

The second stage, also one year, entails the acceptance of the Collegian offer to the women, consisting of guaranteed column inches, dispersed throughout the paper, with the women's editor and the news editor equally deciding placement of articles. This stage would allow both sides to develop respect and a working relationship with the other, while simultaneously guaranteeing women's news a place in the paper.

The final stage is the abolition of guaranteed space and a structural reorganization, based on the experience of the previous two years, designed to maximize integration and protect the integrity of all involved. Hopefully, the previous two years will have seen the recruitment of enough feminists and the elimination of enough hostility so that nobody will feel isolated or threatened, and that editorial judgments will no longer be viewed by some as unfair.

This is a long procedure, and its acceptance by either side is problematic. But a quick-fix solution is usually no real solution at all. This type of action was taken when angry blacks occupied the office, and resulted in separate pages and staff to represent black people in the Collegian.

Both blacks and whites have now come to realize that this was not a good solution. Separation has meant that the interaction necessary to make the Collegian more sensitive to the black community and to make blacks more comfortable within the Collegian has not happened.

Another, more general result of that quicky solution was that the Collegian was not much more sensitive to non-dominant perspectives after the 'solution' than before, and this near-sightedness goes a long way towards explaining why the Collegian was not sufficiently flexible in its dealings with the women before the occupations.

This time, the changes made must be more than cosmetic, or else history will repeat itself once more. Integration, sensitivity, responsiveness and equality are all inextricably bound up with each other, meaning that changes in the Collegian, to be successful, must touch upon all these areas. My remarks are far too sketchy to be adopted, which is why I called them a suggestion and not a proposal. But I think they touch on all the importaat points, and can provide a starting point for a lasting solution.

Learning about no ethics

michael p. doran

There is a side to the recent controversy over women's pages that I have been loathe to write about for conciliatory reasons. However, it has become all too apparent that there are groups on and off campus that have taken a questionable part in the women's protest. Questionable on ethical grounds.

To start off with one of the more blatant examples of ethical impoverishment, Elaine Noble, a state representative from Cambridge, sent a mailgram to the Editor-in-Chief of the Collegian, included in yesterday's paper:

"I am currently 'locked in' the house chambers debating the current fiscal budget (sic), that includes the University of Massachusetts budget as well. If my presence here were not required, I would join the women in the Collegian office. I wholeheartedly support their demands and strongly advocate that other political men and women do the same, not only here at the state house but also at the federal level.

"Feminists throughout the country are watching the University of Mass. I join them in extending an invitation to you for your positive change.

"Please make every effort to comply to (sic) the needs of the women at the Collegian. I consider this a very personal and important issue. Your positive action will always be viewed by me as a great large (sic) personal favor."

Not only is Ms. Noble's English dastardly, but her sense of ethics is sadly wanting. No one could object to political figures taking stands on issues. One should however, loudly object to political figures using their offices to manipulate or threaten to manipulate a paper dependent on state funds and state-owned space. The comment about the budget of UMass becomes all the more indefensible when you consider that the chancellor of this University also got a copy of the mailgram. A copy of this correspondence is being sent to the House Ethics Committee.

To switch to the local scene, the history of student government coercion is well known on the issue of women's pages. What is probably less widely known is the role that the University staff, the Student Organizing Project, and the faculty have played to get the Collegian to change its editorial policy.

At every rally and sit-in the women protesters have staged there have been University-paid staff present. Most notably, Irene Richard, RSO staff member, has been present as well as vocal at many of these gatherings, some of which have taken place within the Collegian office.

For those not familiar with the bureaucratic structure of UMass, Ms. Richards works in an office that takes care of scheduling events sponsored by student organizations, and keeps all the records of financial dealings. One would think that anyone involved in such a capacity, especially the program advisor, would do his-her best to remain impartial about the policies of student groups. Clearly, there would be objection if a member of the Student Affairs staff of the administration joined SOP and tried to change their policies. The fact that we are a newspaper would seem to make any temptation to do such a thing that much more undesirable.

A governmental body, the Student Organizing project, has to date spent over fifty dollars to support the women in the Collegian office. Again it should be stressed that the Collegian is a newspaper and the student organizing project a governmental body, and therefore has no right trying to manipulate editorial policy.

As was said at yesterday's rally, faculty members of this University are supplying money and food to the people occupying the Collegian office. I simply ask where these learned professors learned that it is all right to support a group that is illegally trying to control the student press. Have they not thought about the ethical problems involved with faculty sticking their noses into the student newspaper's policies; doing their best to help a group trying to obstruct the free flow of information?

Unfortunately, many student activists on this campus have an "ends justifies the means" mentality. One can hardly blame them when it is clear that our representatives, our professors, and our administrators serve as models for this behavior. It is lamentable, though, that students are being sent into the real world of business and government with this behavior only reinforced by their experience at an "institution of higher learning."

Separate is not equal

eileen foley

It has been more than a week since protesters demanding women's pages in the Collegian occupied and barricaded themselves inside the Collegian offices. In the ensuing negotiations questions of editorial control, ad ratios, and amount of space have been considered, but at present the major factor blocking agreement on a satisfactory proposal has been a stalemate on the issue of guaranteed pages as opposed to guaranteed space for Women's News.

Space-wise, there is little difference between the demands of the occupiers and the latest Collegian proposal. The difference lies in that the Collegian plan calls for women-related stories to be positioned throughout the news pages according to subject matter and newsworthiness as determined jointly by the Women's Editor and the News Editor.

Protesters say they feel that guaranteed space is not sufficient. They feel that the women's department must have separate pages in order to give staff generated stories maximum impact, and to insure that the Women's Editor would not be tied up with haggles over placement.

Neither party has suggested that designated space is a permanent answer to the women's community's need for a voice in the campus newspaper. The Collegian proposal, unlike that of the occupiers, recognizes this need for eventual integration of women's news into the regular news pool.

Rather than enhancing the impact of women's news stories, separating these stories solely because they are of primary interest to women suggests that they are not of significant importance to merit consideration as hard news.

Such attitudes epitomize the kind of insensitivity to the validity of women's issues as news which necessitated drastic action on the part of the UMass women's community in the first place. Arguments that women are entitled to the same departmental autonomy presently held by News, Sports, Op-ed and Black Affairs blatantly ignore the fact that women's issues have a profound and far reaching effect on all aspects of society.

To equate the designation of separate Black Affairs pages in the Collegian with the current conflict over women's pages is to seriously misunderstand both issues. Black Affairs pages emerged as a result of the needs of an oppressed minority, severely under-represented on the Collegian staff, for a voice in the campus media. Forty-eight percent of the Collegian staff is composed of women, and four out of ten positions on the Board of Editors are held by women. Obviously, women are not a minority, nor do they lack representation on the Collegian staff.

This is not to say that there has not been an acute need for reassessment of the staff's priorities and responsibility to the community. However, the creation of Black Affairs pages was an interim solution to the special problems of one sector of the UMass community, and it was an experiment, not a final answer. In practice, this experiment is meeting the immediate needs of the community, but integration of Black Affairs into the mainstream of day to day Collegian production has been slow.

The guaranteed space proposal is an experiment designed to meet the needs of a different community. There may well be problems at the outset, but in the long run, the conflicts and the hassles are probably the best way to work out changes necessary for the ultimate integration of Women's News with people's news.

Women's issues are of importance to all concerned people. Separate is not equal. Segregation of Women's News is a second rate solution; the women's community of UMass deserves better, and should demand better from its leaders.

Neutron radiation harms nuke plant workers

WATERFORD, Conn. [AP] — Columnist Jack Anderson claims in a column released yesterday that employees of nuclear power plants, including one in Connecticut, are exposed to potentially dangerous neutron bombardment.

But a spokesman for Northeast Utilities, which operates three nuclear plants in Connecticut, said yesterday no danger exists in its facilities from neutron radiation.

Anderson's column quotes a Nuclear Regulation Commission official as saying in a memo that neutron exposure has gone "unnoticed" at nuclear power plants because it is not properly measured or understood.

The problem initially was noticed at a plant that was not identified in the memo, but Anderson said it was located in Millstone, Conn., which has two nuclear power plants.

There is no Millstone, Conn., but two plants named Millstone I and II are located in Waterford, Conn.

Anderson said federal officials say instruments called dosimeters must be developed to accurately measure neutron radiation.

But Northeast spokesman Emmanuel Forde said his company has been aware of the threat of neutron exposure since before Millstone II opened in 1975. Millstone I is constructed differently and doesn't pose the danger, he said.

At Millstone II and Connecticut Yankee, both of which have pressurized water reactors containing a cloud of neutrons, neutron radiation is carefully measured. The few employees allowed inside the reactor containment vessel wear monitoring devices to record exposure, he said.

Because measuring plant authorities know where neutron radiation is highest, employees are kept away from those areas. Any exposure is far below the maximum amount permitted under federal standards, and neutrons cannot escape from the reactor containment vessel, he said.

Senate 'goes to town' in financial disclosure bill

BOSTON [AP] — Top city and town officials should be required to disclose their economic interests and sources of income, Rep. Raymond L. Flynn, D-Boston says.

And, Rep. John R. Granara, D-Medford, thinks county registers of probate and deeds should also make financial disclosure.

Their comments were made yesterday at a State Administration Committee hearing on a Senate bill to require disclosure by top state and county officials and candidates, as well as U.S. senators and representatives and candidates for those offices.

Granara, who is a member of the committee, said the bill, introduced by Sens. Robert A. Hall, R-Fitchburg, and Carol C. Amick, D-Bedford, needs work and suggested it be given to a subcommittee.

Granara said, for example, he is not sure the state can require financial disclosure by congressmen.

Flynn wants the bill amended to include elected officers and department heads of cities and towns — "those with influence on municipal or state policy.
